Mr. KENDRICK. I wish to announce that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] are necessarily detained from the Senate. I also wish to announce that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] is necessarily detained from the Senate on official business. I ask that these announcements stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

THE JOURNAL

On motion of Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal for the calendar days of April 21, 22, and 24 was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following memorial of the House of Representatives of the State of Arizona, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

STATE OF ARIZONA,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Arizona, ss:

I, James H. Kerby, secretary of state, do hereby certify that the within is a true, correct, and complete copy of House Memorial 4, regular session, eleventh legislature, State of Arizona, entitled "Restoration of Silver as a Monetary Standard", all of which is shown by the original engrossed copy on file in this department.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Arizona. Done at Phoenix, the capital, this 29th day of March A.D. 1933.

JAMES H. KERBY,
Secretary of State.

House Memorial 4, Restoration of silver as a monetary standard To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialist, the House of Representatives of the Eleventh Legislature of the State of Arizona respectfully represents:

The Legislature of Arizona is confronted with an economic depression more desperate than any confronting a previous legislature of this State. Our business concerns have either closed out or are on the verge of doing so. Our industries are either destroyed, stagnant, or in critical condition. Our homes are being lost. Many of our people are starving, Spartanlike, and large numbers of others are losing their self-respect through the acceptance of alms. The power of resistance of all is being lowered by the struggle against nervous shock.

We have given earnest thought to our distress and find that our plight is due to general conditions in the Nation and not to any local short-sightedness. Tax reductions, yes; and to the utmost, and maintain our social functions, but it was easier for our people with full earning power to pay our highest tax than it is for them to pay any tax now. If the depression continues much longer, it will not be possible for our people to pay taxes at all because they will have no earning power.

When the whole field of business and finance is surveyed and appraised one fact alone stands in bold relief. The fact is, high finance is the cause of this Nation's present trouble. High finance sold the foreign currencies and foreign bonds to our people. High finance foisted a great load of unproductive debt upon this generation. High finance imposed upon the country the high tariff which provided it with a dragnet of unearned profits. High finance provided the inflation for the market boom and the deflation for the depression of fear. High finance is striving for the cancellation of the war debts. What high finance has done this time it has done in one form or another repeatedly in the past. The American people must make up their minds as to whether they are fit to live under a democracy and run their own affairs or whether they shall admit defeat and accept a rule as absolute as any tyranny and which lays an exhausting tribute upon them from generation to generation. Control of money and credit is the secret of its power.

This is not the whole story of high finance. Its treatment of silver is one of its master strokes. There are many people in this Nation who only think they are opposed to silver, but the membership of high finance well know they are opposed to silver. The farther away from New York the locality the stronger is the support for silver, and the nearer to New York the section the weaker silver becomes. From New York the opposition is bitter, angry, and unyielding. This the country may well view with suspicion. Indeed in the light of the facts now at hand the country might well feel safe to fully remonetize silver simply because high finance is opposed. The reason back of the opposition of high finance to silver is that silver is a driving spearhead into their control of the Nation's money and credit.

It appears strange there should be any opposition outside of Wall Street to silver, when it is remembered that the sentiment for the restoration of silver by world agreement is nearly unanimous. Even Wall Street will assent to a world conference. But a world conference and a world agreement are vastly different. The history to date of world conferences on any subject indicate there is little likelihood of an agreement on silver. The attitudes of foreign nations since the war give little promise of acquiescence in anything that will not be of their own especial interest. They have repudiated their currencies. They begged and implored our help in the war. They cried for and secured drastic reductions in their war debts. They are now defaulting on the remainder and demanding cancellation. They have gone off the gold standard, arbitrarily pegged their rates of exchange below ours and repudiated a large percent of their debts to other nations, and by this action they delivered a body blow to this country, practically the only nation left on an unchanged gold standard. That action prevented their own nationals from buying in this country because they could not pay the tariff and also stand the loss in exchange. It enabled other countries to buy in their countries at great advantage with a stimulating effect to their trade. At the same time, it neutralized to some extent the fall in the price of silver. This resulted to their advantage in trade with the silver-using nations, from which trade we are still barred by our gold standard. They have erected tariffs to offset ours. By all these means they have us shut out of world trade. They have out-manuevered us and pushed us into a corner. Is it to be expected they will give us this advantage by restoring silver and thus allowing the silver nations to trade with us? No doubt Wall Street will agree to a world conference with so slight a chance for silver.

In 1925 silver was around 70 cents per ounce. That year England put India on the gold standard and began to dump India silver on the market. This was followed by reducing the silver content in the silver coins of England. Then France, Italy, Belgium, and other nations followed suit. From 1925 silver dropped until in 1932 it reached 24 cents, an all-time low in terms of gold since history or legend records any information. This process destroyed foreign markets for American agriculture and enabled England and Europe to obtain, among other raw materials for their industries, American cotton and wheat at the lowest prices ever known. The American farmer, not being able to sell at a fair price at home because he was not protected, was now not able to sell except at a loss in the world market. This process also had the effect of destroying more than one half the purchasing power of one half the people of the earth with respect to their foreign trade. It has reduced their already low standards of life to still lower depths and is now contributing to the cause of the robber armies which are overrunning China, thus making it easily possible for Japan to have her way in Manchuria and wherever else in the Orient she is headed for. This constitutes the last chapter on silver. It is a repetition of our own Wall Street drive on silver in 1873 and 1893.

There is just a chance that England has something afoot again with respect to silver. If England should buy several billion ounces of silver with gold at less than 30 cents and then restore its value to 75 cents or $1, it would constitute another grand enactment of high finance. There is a growing volume of sentiment in England for silver. She alone started its decline; she by herself with the help of her dominions can restore it to 70 cents, but with the help of the world it can be returned to $1.29. There would not be anything new in the method. Before France reduced the gold content in her franc from 19 cents to 4 cents, she accumulated all the gold by every possible way that she could. England by going off the gold standard did two things at once. She started a phenomenal movement among her people and the people of India to turn in to the Government old gold possessed in any form to be melted down and paid for at a high price in sterling. Being off the gold standard enabled the Government to keep the gold after it was thus obtained. With this and other accretions of gold she can buy silver.

World conference or no world conference, those who believe in restoring silver by a world conference believe in silver. The only reason offered for a world agreement is to preclude the possibility of the world silver being dumped upon the United States in the event this country remonetized silver, and by dumping take our gold from us. Silver can be started back toward its former level without danger from this quarter.

The monetary system of the United States consists in round numbers of the following: Gold coin and bullion, 4 billion; silver dollars and subsidiary silver, 840 million; national-bank notes, subject to control of the national banks, 740 million; and Federal Reserve notes, subject to the control of the Reserve bank, 3 billion. The last two forms of money are issued upon the faith and credit of the country and the Government. In addition to these issues there are 347 million of United States notes, greenbacks. This makes 9 billion total money stock of the United States. To redeem it there are 4 billion in gold. This is now vividly demonstrated to be an impossibility, so the Government has found itself put to the extremity of placing an estoppel upon redemption. Half of the world is doing business on a gold basis; half of it is doing business on a silver basis. If the United States Treasurer had $4,000,000,000 in silver and was on a silver basis as well as gold basis, more than half of its foreign trade would be present to offset the rush for gold at this instant. A second present defect in the character of money, as indicated, is that half of the volume is controlled by the banks. To illustrate what significance this carries, it can be stated that if that amount of money was replaced by silver the people would now be about doing business as usual.

It has been suggested that the amount of gold in the gold dollar be reduced: To illustrate, the $4,000,000,000 of bullion and coin could be changed into $8,000,000,000. This, however, would still possess the two fatal defects of the present set-up. It would have but one metal and too narrow a base, too easy to control, and therefore subject, as at present, to the ravages of high finance, both national and international. It would not help us with the silver-using nations.

Among the different methods this country could use to restore silver without waiting for a world conference the following is offered: Issue 500 millions of Government bonds. With the proceeds of these direct the Treasurer to buy and coin silver at the present ratio. Direct the Treasurer to coin as offered at the mints all American silver. Do not make the silver redeemable in gold. Retire bank circulation with whatever amount of silver dollars this purchase of silver will produce. As fast as American silver is coined, buy it with tax levies annually, issue silver certificates, and with these retire Government bonds that underly bank circulation. There need be no fear of world dumping of silver because none can come into the country for exchange except what is purchased. The banks can replace their present circulation out of the proceeds received from the liquidation of their Government bonds. Continue this process until the silver equals the gold in the monetary system. This will replace hard money for credit money without inflation. The Government's promise to pay, supported by faith in the Government and the world's faith in silver, is better than the Government's promise to pay, supported only by faith in the Government. The effect of these measures would be the immediate stimulation of the price of silver.

Another stimulus could be brought about by offering to let England make her next installment on war debts in silver, provided she agreed to take India silver off the market and restore it to use in India and also agree to restore in her own silver coins their former amount of silver. If this were done, it is more than probable that the silver price of 1929 would be reached before a world conference would convene. The advance in the price would demonstrate to the conference that some would have authority to speak other than high finance because much of the matter disputed would have had already become a fact.

The effect on trade and business of the rise in the price of silver would be immediate. No fears need be entertained about the Government getting the taxes with which to make silver purchases. Within a short time the present earning power of the Nation of 13 billion would be raised to its former figure of 80 billion. Half the people of the earth would be given back the money or buying power taken from them since 1925. Our foreign trade for farm and factory products would be given an immediate impulse, especially so as these people have long been without the goods they want. This would break the deadlock. To recapture this trade we will either be compelled to go off the gold standard in order to checkmate other nations or we must restore silver. Adjusted tariffs will avail us nothing with depreciated foreign currencies still prevailing. Adjusted tariffs and restored currencies require dickering, swapping, and the consent of other nations which have not kept their agreements, either stated or implied. This country by itself can start the march of silver upward.

One other effect of restoring silver to our coinage would be a direct thrust at the inner core of the Nation's present difficulties. Silver would widen the metallic base underlying our circulation. That base is so narrow now that there is not the slightest chance of redeeming the currency in gold or paying a fraction of the two hundred billions of debt, public and private, all written in gold, in times of stress like the present when the one thing needed by the people is their own money. If there were gold and silver in the United States Treasury to redeem every dollar of circulation, there would be no depression now. As it is, there is such a tremendous amount of credit required to do the business of the country that it has been easy for a few who have accumulated vast reserves in money to effectively control credit and money based on it. Money not in circulation ceases to be money and credit that is not available is not credit. All admit now that prices fluctuate with the amount of money available for the transaction of business. Instead of having sound money, we find ourselves with the most unsound money of any civilized people.

At this juncture advertence might be had to the word tinkering. The only tinkering that has been done lays at the door of high finance. For 10,000 years gold and silver did duty together. It is like a thief calling, Stop thief! Instead of being alarmed at this goblin, it is now necessary for the people to survey the whole monetary structure.

These financial depressions could not occur if the people knew all about their monetary system and were familiar with the history of finance, particularly high finance. To this end we suggest that you assemble all the facts, duly verified, relating to the history of this depression and make it available to the common schools of the country. By this means the next generation will have a watchful eye on the buccaneers of high finance who know no conscience and no country.

Wherefore your memorialist solemnly urges upon you the restoration of silver to its former place in the economics of the world and this country as a major action for the breaking of the financial deadlock that is now ruthlessly working the ruin of this generation, and as a means of returning to the only sound monetary system the world has ever known.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Arizona, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

STATE OF ARIZONA,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

State of Arizona, ss:

I, James H. Kerby, secretary of state, do hereby certify that the within is a true, correct, and complete copy of House Joint Memorial No. 8, regular session, eleventh legislature, State of Arizona, entitled "On the Transfer of the Remaining Public Lands of the State of Arizona", all of which is shown by the original engrossed copy on file in this department.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Arizona. Done at Phoenix, the capital, this 29th day of March A.D. 1933.

[SEAL]

JAMES H. KERBY, Secretary of State.

House Joint Memorial 8 (on the transfer of the remaining public lands of the State of Arizona)

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States of America:

Your memorialist, the Eleventh Legislature of the State of Arizona, in regular session assembled, respectfully represents:

That of the 72,000,000 acres of land within the State of Arizona more than 65 percent is controlled by the Federal Government and 10 percent is owned by the State. Thus there now remains only 25 percent of the area of the State to carry the burden of taxation;

That by reason of the great area of Government reservations and withdrawals, embracing all the forest lands and much irri-gable or tillable land, with withdrawals still being made for divers Federal purposes, the State of Arizona under the provisions of its enabling act, providing for the granting of lands for the benefit of the schools and institutions, was unable to obtain lands of the best character and value; that the grant of four sections in place in each township for the benefit of common schools still remains of no value to the extent of those sections which are within the large area of the remaining unsurveyed public domain and that the value of many of the surveyed sections in place is impaired by questions as to the validity of title;

That the provisions of the enabling act which requires a minimum price of $3 per acre upon the sale of grazing lands owned by the State effectually prevents the State from selling a considerable area of its lands the actual value of which is less than such minimum price, the result being that the permanent school and institutional funds cannot be augmented nor such lands developed by private owners and become subject to taxation.

Therefore your memorialist respectfully and urgently requests the enactment of legislation by the Congress which will by proper and feasible manner transfer the remaining public land to the State of Arizona, without restriction or reservation: And it is hereby

Resolved, That title to all the remaining vacant, unappropriated, and unreserved land should pass to the State, without reservation or restriction on account of the character thereof.

That title should vest in the State when and as selection of lands by the State are approved by clear listing instead of upon the acceptance by the State of a blanket grant, this in order to make the transfer in a clear, feasible, and practical manner, existing Federal statutes affecting public lands to continue in effect, and thus avoid many complications and uncertainties and the necessity for providing proper machinery of operation and adjudication, as to which some pending bills are unquestionably deficient.

That there be no provision whatever for additional Federal withdrawals and reservations of lands; that if some further withdrawals should be thought to be necessary or if some eliminations from existing reservations can be made it would be much safer for jurisdiction to remain in the Congress than to have unlimited authority given to administrative officials.

That the State should be granted the lands, without requirements and restrictions being made by the United States as to the administration or disposal thereof, the State government being entirely competent to administer its lands to the best interest of the State.

That the conditions and restrictions of the enabling act or other Federal statutes affecting previous grants of land to the State should be now removed in order that the State may be able to administer all its lands to the best advantage and make sales thereof, the existing minimum sale price of $3 per acre being such an unwarranted restriction that disposal of much of the land is not possible.

That the Congress make ample provision for the prompt survey by the Government of the remaining unsurveyed public lands in order that the State may then make selections thereof.

That the Congress pass legislation providing for the transfer of the lands to the State and the administration thereof by the State in conformity with these declarations.

Passed by the senate March 7, 1933.

Passed by the house March 6, 1933.

Approved March 9, 1933.

Received by the secretary of state March 14, 1933.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a communication from Frank T. Pomeroy, State senator, Mesa, Ariz., relative to an enclosed Senate Memorial No. 2 of the State Senate of Arizona, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate Memorial 2

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialist, the Senate of the Eleventh Legislature of the State of Arizona, respectfully represents:

Whatever its origin, the economic depression from which the Nation is suffering owes its continued existence to the withdrawal from circulation, for reasons which will not here be reviewed, of a great portion of the national currency and of the various forms of money credit.

This shortage of currency and of money credit must be relieved before prosperity can return.

There must be an expansion of the Nation's circulating mediums of exchange, an expansion which will not increase the burden of taxation.

The bonded debt of the United States, in round figures, is $21,000,000,000, an indebtedness which is costing the taxpayers approximately $1,000,000,000 per annum.

It is withholding from circulation a vast sum of money which otherwise would be invested in employment-making, business-stimulating enterprises.

Wherefore your memorialist urges that the Congress enact legislation (and the submission of a constitutional amendment if necessary) looking to an increase of the national currency in the amount of the national bonded debt; that a date be fixed on which the interest on United States bonds will cease, and that the new currency be employed in the retirement of all such bonds; and your memorialist submits that while saving the taxpayers a billion dollars annually in interest, such action will release the stupendous sum now being hoarded through investment in Government bonds for investment in lucrative private enterprises, and start into forward motion the endless chain of circulating wealth which inevitably brings prosperity.

And your memorialist will ever pray.

Adopted by the Arizona State Senate, eleventh legislature, March 12, 1933.

W. F. GRAHAM, Secretary of Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Nebraska, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact uniform Federal corporation laws

Whereas the individual States of the United States of America have widely divergent laws applicable to the organization, filing of articles, and rights and powers exercised by corporations created and operating within their respective borders; and

Whereas the primary and fundamental purposes of the laws of the several States in the enactment of laws concerning corporations were to bring such legal entities under the jurisdiction of the police powers of the States and, incidentally, to provide a source of revenue by which such corporations might be supervised for the public welfare; and

Whereas, under and by virtue of loose and easy laws enacted by some of the States of the Union with respect to the organization and management of corporations, has resulted in certain types of corporations, on account of laxity and want of uniformity in State laws, to find an asylum by incorporating under the laws of those States which do not pretend to exercise any supervision or any control over corporations filing their articles therein; and

Whereas, by reason of corporations organizing under the laws of States other than those in which the principal place of business of said corporation is in reality intended to be conducted, the officers and directors thereof have been enabled to carry out dire and sinister programs which, had said corporations been organized and their articles filed under the laws of the State where they operate, or had the Congress of the United States heretofore elected to require that corporations filing articles should do so under the terms and provisions of uniform Federal statutes, such abuses, inimical and dangerous to the public welfare, would, in most cases, never have occurred; and

Whereas the States in which said corporations organized for sinister purposes should have been incorporated to a large extent are powerless to exercise any jurisdiction whatever over said corporations and suffer heavy losses in revenue to be derived from corporate organizations if such corporations had been organized and operated under its laws, and for years have been compelled to stand idly by and watch the pillage and plunder of its citizens who have invested and lost millions of dollars through the operations of unscrupulous and piratical holding and operating companies organized and doing business under the laws of some foreign State; and

Whereas there is little hope that effective uniform legislation which adequately will control corporations will ever be enacted by the several States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Nebraska in forty-ninth regular session assembled—

1. That this house respectfully petitions and memorializes the Congress of the United States forthwith to proceed with the enactment of uniform laws affecting corporations, and that said laws, when enacted, shall be applicable in all respects to the several States of the Union.

2. That the chief clerk of this house be directed forthwith to forward copies of this resolution, properly authenticated and suitably engrossed, to the President of the United States, the Vice President of the United States, and to the several Senators and Congressmen representing the State of Nebraska in the National Congress, to the end that necessary remedial, uniform laws affecting corporations be considered and enacted without further delay.

J. H. STEUTEVILLE.

I hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a true and correct copy of said resolution as passed by the house of representatives in forty-ninth session assembled this 14th day of April 1933.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a communication from Judge Benjamin S. DeBoke, of Springfield, Ill., together with a resolution adopted by the Springfield (Ill.) Chapter Reserve Officers' Association of the United States, protesting against any cut in the numbers of the officers or enlisted men of the Regular Army, and also against any reduction in the national defense program, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the City Fire Fighters Association, of Washington, D.C., favoring the filling of vacancies in the fire department of the District of Columbia by the promotion of members of the existing personnel of the department who have exhibited the necessary qualifications for the performance of the duties, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Methodist Men Committee of One Hundred of the United States at the Logan Methodist Episcopal Church, Philadelphia, Pa., favoring the enactment of legislation authorizing the operation of the so-called "Taylor plan" for the relief of poverty and distress in the United States, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate 2 letters and 4 telegrams in the nature of memorials from 60 citizens and 1 organization in the State of Louisiana, endorsing Hon. HUEY P. LONG, a Senator from the State of Louisiana, condemning attacks made upon him, and remonstrating against a senatorial investigation of his alleged acts and conduct, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a communication in the nature of a petition from the Mental Patients Defenders Association, by Samuel Friedman, president, of Chicago, Ill., praying for an investigation of alleged mistreatment of mental patients in institutions for the care of the insane, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the City Council of Quincy, Mass., favoring the setting aside of April 30, 1933, as Presidential Day "as a day of thanksgiving and prayer in behalf of the President of the United States", etc., which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by Unit No. 6, Irish-American Independent Political Unit, Inc., of Brooklyn, N.Y., endorsing "Senator Long's zeal for honest execution of the 'new deal'" and expressing confidence in his integrity, which was ordered to lie on the table.

6-HOUR DAY AND 30-HOUR WEEK

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have received a number of telegrams from citizens of the State of Utah expressing opposition to the so-called "Black 30-hour week work bill," and stating also that any attempt to operate under the bill would be impracticable and injurious to employees, as well as the public generally. I ask unanimous consent that certain of the telegrams among those received by me may be published in the RECORD and lie on the table.

There being no objection, the telegrams referred to were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PRICE, UTAH, April 23, 1933.

Hon. W. H. KING,

United States Senator, Washington, D.C.:

We urge you to do all possible to defeat proposed Black and Perkins bill, as we feel this bill will be detrimental to the operations as well as employees in our mining industries in Utah.

O. K. CLAY.
W. E. KNOX.
A. N. SMITH.
CARL W. EMPEY.
WALLACE WAYMAN.

PROVO, UTAH, April 23, 1933.

Senator WILLIAM H. KING,

United States Senate, Washington, D.C.:

Passage of Black-Perkins bill would be another serious handicap to recovery and ruinous to many of our business firms and industries without correcting or aiding unemployment. It might cause complete shutdown of plants and mines near Provo. We urge you to use all your influence to prevent it from becoming law.

PROVO CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

PROVO, UTAH, April 22, 1933.

Hon. WILLIAM H. KING,

Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.:

Believe it impractical to operate mines, coke plants, blast furnaces, and steel plants 6 hours per day 5 days per week, as proposed in Black-Perkins bill. For 2 years we have rotated employment extensively and impartially as employer in iron and steel industry, and for the welfare of Utah I hope you will do all possible to defeat this bill.

GEORGE D. RAMSAY.

PROVO, UTAH, April 22, 1933.

Senator WILLIAM H. KING,

Washington, D.C.:

The Black-Perkins bill would be decidedly impracticable to the iron, steel, and coal-mining industry of Utah. As director of personnel local industry, wish to say we are rotating labor and have done so for over 2 years. This bill is not suited to this industry and should be defeated.

E. C. HINCKLEY.

PROVO, UTAH, April 22, 1933.

Hon. WILLIAM H. KING,

Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.:

As an employee of the steel industry, I believe passage of the Black-Perkins bill would be a blow to the future of this industry in our State, as I do not believe it economically possible to operate mines, blast furnaces, or steel plants on a 6-hour-day or 5-day-week basis, and it is physically impossible to operate coke plants on this basis. I therefore believe you should do all in your power to defeat this bill.

W. C. MILLER.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McCARRAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 882) to provide for the more effective supervision of foreign commercial transactions, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 41) thereon.

Mr. BARKLEY, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (S. 1415) to amend sections 5200 and 5202 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, to remove the limitations on national banks in certain cases, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report (No. 42) thereon.

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (S. 1425) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide relief in the existing national emergency in banking, and for other purposes", approved March 9, 1933, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report (No. 43) thereon.

Mr. WAGNER (for himself and Mr. COSTIGAN), from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (H.R. 4606) to provide for cooperation by the Federal Government with the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia in relieving the hardship and suffering caused by unemployment, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 44) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. WHITE:

A bill (S. 1520) for the conservation of lobsters, to regulate interstate transportation of lobsters, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. STEPHENS:

A bill (S. 1521) making an appropriation to provide for certain repairs within the national military park at Vicksburg, Miss.; to the Committee on Appropriations.

A bill (S. 1522) authorizing the Secretary of War to make certain repairs within the national military park at Vicksburg, Miss.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 1523) for the relief of the Capitol Building & Loan Association, of Topeka, Kans.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BRATTON:

A bill (S. 1524) for the relief of John J. Doyle; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. DILL:

A bill (S. 1525) to prevent discriminations against American ships and ports, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. WAGNER:

A bill (S. 1526) for the relief of Ann Engle;

A bill (S. 1527) for the relief of Charles A. Lewis; and

A bill (S. 1528) to amend section 3702, Revised Statutes; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 1529) to provide retirement insurance for railway employees, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. BYRD:

A bill (S. 1530) for the relief of James E. Haynes;

A bill (S. 1531) for the relief of Elizabeth Buxton Hospital; and

A bill (S. 1532) for the relief of Florence Hudgins Lindsay and Elizabeth Lindsay; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 1533) to authorize and direct the appointment of Levin Milton Price as a first lieutenant, United States Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 1534) granting a pension to Grace A. Coates; and

A bill (S. 1535) granting a pension to Addie L. Shugars; to the Committee on Pensions.

RELIEF OF AGRICULTURE—AMENDMENT RELATIVE TO THE CURRENCY

Mr. DILL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the so-called "Thomas amendment" to House bill 3835, the agricultural relief bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

DEVELOPMENT OF THE TENNESSEE VALLEY—AMENDMENT

Mr. McKELLAR submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to Senate bill 1272, the Muscle Shoals and Tennessee Valley development bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

HOME OWNERS' LOAN ACT—ADDRESS BY SENATOR BYRNES

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, on Monday night I had the pleasure of listening to a very interesting speech over the radio by the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES]. I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the speech was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RADIO ADDRESS OF HON. JAMES F. BYRNES, OF SOUTH CAROLINA, APRIL 24, 1933

Ladies and gentlemen of the radio audience, there are approximately $20,000,000,000 loaned upon homes in this country, and of this amount more than $4,000,000,000 are today in default. This is the situation which President Roosevelt seeks to relieve by the proposal he has submitted to the Congress establishing the home owners loan corporation for the purpose of offering emergency relief and establishing Federal savings and loan associations in order to provide permanent relief.

The corporation established under the act will have a capital stock of $200,000,000. It will be authorized to issue bonds not exceeding $2,000,000,000. The interest upon bonds will be guaranteed by the Government, and the bonds will be exempt from taxation, other than surtaxes, gift, and inheritance taxes. The principal will not be guaranteed. The corporation will be authorized to exchange bonds for mortgages upon the basis of 80 percent of the value of the property as determined by the board, where the present value of the home does not exceed $10,000. It is estimated that three fourths of the homes occupied by owners would today be appraised at $10,000 or less and therefore would come within the provisions of the bill.

To illustrate, let us assume that in 1929 you purchased or constructed a home at a cost of $15,000 and gave a mortgage to an insurance company for $12,000. Since that time you have paid upon the debt $2,000, leaving the amount due at this time $10,000. Let us further assume that the market value of the home today is not in excess of $10,000. By reason of your reduced income or by reason of unemployment you are unable to make further payments upon the debt. The insurance company does not want to foreclose. It is not in the real-estate business and knows that, if forced to purchase the home at foreclosure sale, it would have little chance to resell it, and it cannot well engage in the business of renting homes all over the Nation. The insurance company has in its portfolio bonds which have depreciated in value. In many instances they have sold such bonds and taken their loss.

The officials of the company realize that in just the same way the value of the mortgage held over your home has depreciated in value. They can go to the corporation established by this bill and sell your mortgage to that corporation for 80 percent of the value of the home today, to wit: The sum of $8,000 in bonds. The bonds which the company secures, with interest guaranteed by the Government, would have a ready market. The bonds would be a safe investment, because they would be secured not only by the capital stock of the corporation but by your home at a valuation of $8,000 instead of the $12,000 which was originally loaned on the home.

When the corporation secures your mortgage in exchange for the $8,000 in bonds you would be requested to execute a new mortgage to the corporation for the sum of $8,000. The debt would be amortized over a period of 15 years and the rate of interest fixed at 5 percent. Instead of owing the insurance company $10,000, you would owe the corporation $8,000. Instead of paying 6-percent or 7-percent interest, you would pay 5 percent. Instead of being haunted with the fear of losing your home, you would have an opportunity to pay for that home during the next 15 years. Payments would be made monthly, but the framers of the bill realized that in case you are in default upon the existing mortgage, the chances are you would not be able to meet the payments upon the new mortgage in the near future. The bill therefore gives to the board the right to suspend payments during the 15 years at any time sufficient cause is shown, provided the suspension in all of the period does not amount to more than 3 years. This would make it possible for a loan to be repaid in 18 years instead of 15 years.

The objection is made that the privilege should be extended to homes valued in excess of $10,000. It should not be forgotten that homes valued at $10,000 today would include many that were valued at $15,000 and $18,000 in 1929. Further objection is made that the rate of interest should be lower than 5 percent. While the interest rate in a few of the larger cities is 5 percent, the average interest on home mortgages throughout the Nation is approximately 7 percent. More important than the reduced interest rate is the provision for amortization over a period of 15 years. The home owners in America with short-term mortgages have been forced every few years to refinance their debt at great and unnecessary expense.

The privilege illustrated in the case of an insurance company would extend to any person or corporation holding a mortgage over a home. It should be distinctly understood that it is entirely voluntary and there is no compulsion upon the owner of any mortgage to exchange his mortgage for the bonds referred to. However, it is believed that because of the depreciated value of the homes under mortgage and the desire to avoid foreclosures, and the ease with which the bonds could be converted into cash, thousands of mortgagees will avail themselves of the privilege of exchanging their mortgages for these bonds, thereby offering relief to thousands of American home owners.

The bill does not provide for direct loans to build new homes. It authorizes loans to the extent of $200,000,000, which can be used solely for the purpose of paying taxes or to make essential repairs, provided the total amount of bonds and advances does not exceed 80 percent of the appraised value of the property. In other words, if under the illustration heretofore given, bonds for $7,500 instead of $8,000 were exchanged for your mortgage and you owed $500 taxes, the corporation could advance the $500 for the payment of taxes and you would execute to the corporation a mortgage for $8,000.

The permanent features of the plan provide for the establishment of a system of Federal savings and loan associations in localities where such institutions do not now exist. These localities embrace about one third of the counties of the Nation. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation will subscribe stock of $100,000,000 for the purpose of establishing these local institutions. The subscription is comparable with the subscription to the preferred stock of banks provided in the Emergency Banking Act. These local associations will be authorized to lend for home financing only within the localities in which they are established, and they will be authorized to borrow from the home-loan bank of their district, so that for every dollar subscribed by the Government they will be able to secure and lend approximately $3. It is proposed that the Government's investments in the institutions will be retired in 5 years, the institutions continuing on a permanent basis. They will be established only where adequate facilities do not now exist. These institutions would not disturb existing building and loan associations, and provision is made for a building and loan association to convert itself into one of the new savings and loan associations.

I think it is accurate to say that the system of home-loan banks established in July 1932 has not given to the home owners of America the relief expected by them and hoped for by those responsible for the enactment of the law. The establishment of these savings-and-loan associations, under the provisions of this bill, will make the home-loan bank system an effective agency for relief. An appropriation is made for the purpose of giving to the people information as to the methods by which such associations can be organized and begin to function within the very near future.

The administration realizes that with the closing of so many local banks and the inability of insurance companies and other institutions to lend money upon homes it is essential that some method be provided for the financing of home mortgages and seeks by this bill to furnish the opportunity to secure such loans.

Refinancing existing mortgages and reducing the rate of interest paid by home owners will not remedy all the evils today confronting the people; but if as a result of the adoption of this plan hope shall supplant fear in the hearts of the home owners of America, they can with greater intelligence and greater courage face the problems daily confronting them.

When great unemployment exists great unrest exists. It is aggravated when one fifth of the home owners of the Nation are in default in payment of mortgage debts and face eviction from their homes. To relieve this situation, the President suggests this plan. It is sound. It is practical. We must hope for its adoption and for its success, because, after all, I agree with the sentiment expressed by the eloquent Henry Grady when he declared that the safety of this Republic rests not upon the strength of its Army and its Navy but upon the homes of America and upon the character and the loyalty of the men and women who reside in those homes.

THE ELECTRICAL REVOLUTION

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article appearing in the Nation of April 26, 1933, entitled "The Electrical Revolution", by Jerome Count. The article calls attention particularly to the large part of the revenues of the electrical companies which goes into the hands of stockholders and bondholders and how small a part goes to labor.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

[From the Nation, Apr. 26, 1933]

THE ELECTRICAL REVOLUTION

By Jerome Count

The first 30 years of the twentieth century will perhaps be recorded in history as the electrical revolution. During that period the production of electricity in America rose from 2,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours to 90,000,000,000 and the number of purchasers of electricity increased from 500,000 to 24,500,000. Not fewer than 80,000,000 Americans now live in homes served by electricity. But behind the brilliant array of toasters, heaters, iceboxes, cookers, and washing machines stands a vast army of underpaid, insecure utility workers and overcharged consumers. The growing protests of small consumers and utility employees against the rate and labor policies of the electric light and power industry suggest an inquiry into the extent to which the rewards of a vast development have been shared with the electric-utility wage earner and the small domestic consumer who is now the mainstay of the industry.

It is found that large wholesale users buy energy for one quarter of what it costs small domestic consumers. Between 1920 and 1931 the domestic user of current increased his consumption 400 percent, compared with an increase of less than 200 percent on the part of the wholesale consumer. Notwithstanding his larger contribution to the electrical prosperity of the past decade, the domestic consumer in 1931 was compelled to pay 36 percent of the Nation's electric bill, although he received only 13 percent of all energy consumed. At the same time the wholesale consumer received 60 percent of all energy and paid only 30 percent of the total revenue. The extent of discrimination between the domestic consumer and the wholesale consumer is illustrated again by the relative cost per kilowatt-hour to privileged classes of users. In 1931 wholesale consumers paid 1.48 cents per kilowatt-hour, while the average rate to all consumers was 2.75 cents. Domestic users, however, paid 5.82 cents, although it has been computed by Morris Llewellyn Cooke that this price exceeds a fair rate by 2.32 cents. The domestic consumer, in other words, is overcharged some $300,000,000 every year. Finally, while consumption by large wholesale and industrial users has steadily declined since the depression began, domestic consumption has risen sufficiently almost to cancel the loss of wholesale revenue, and the average bill of the electric consumer is now higher than it was at the peak of prosperity. Mechanical refrigeration alone has added about $60,000,000 to the annual revenues of the entire electric utilities.

Labor has derived far less advantage from the enormous development of the electric industry than even the domestic consumer. Whereas since 1902 profits have multiplied 29 times, wages have multiplied only 18 times, and the number of employees has multiplied only 8 times. Had the share of labor increased in the same proportion as profits, each power employee would now be receiving "wages" at the rate of $20,000 a year, or, assuming that wages remained constant and increases were paid in leisure, the utility laborer would now be working only 2½ hours a week. The observation that the revenues of the industry would not permit this boom to labor serves only to stress the shocking degree to which utility capital has gained advantage over its employees during this great development. Dividend payments to capital account for $575,000,000 of present revenues, but the toll that capital takes from the industry is not measured by dividends alone. The report of the Federal Trade Commission on National Wealth and Income (1926) gives the results of an investigation into the relative share of labor and capital in the Nation's industries. This report concludes significantly: "The electric light and power industry is remarkable because of the fact that labor receives only about one third and capital about two thirds of the total value product." This finding was based upon a comprehensive study of a 7-year period. For the last year reviewed, capital in the electric light and power industry received $511,000,000 while labor earned only $249,800,000.

To what extent the finding of the Commission is an understatement of the contrast is shown, for example, in the comparison of the power industry and steam railroads in 1 year. Railroad labor received 90.4 percent of the total value product while utility labor received only 37.6 percent. On the other hand, railroad capital received 9.6 percent while light and power capital received 62.4 percent. A comparative table (for a 6-year average) again shows utility labor at the bottom of the scale with capital at the top:

Division of value of product between capital and labor

Industry	Percentage to labor	Percentage to capital
Construction	92.8	7.15
Water transportation	83.3	16.2
Steam railroads	75.2	24.8
Telegraph and cable	72.1	27.2
Telephone	68.9	30.5
Manufacturing (all)	63.2	36.8
Street and electric railways	62.8	37.2
Mining, quarrying, and oil	59.3	40.7
Electric light and power	33.9	66.1

Despite the tragic implications of this alinement of capital and labor, it was the proud boast of the National Electric Light Association (recently rechristened Edison Electric Institute) that "an investment in a power and light company is . . . particularly free from the effect of varying labor conditions. The average labor cost of all power and light companies is approximately 21.5 percent of their combined gross earnings. Compare this with the 45 percent to 55 percent labor charge of the average railroad." Beside this boast should be set the low-wage average in the industry. A recent study shows that while in transportation utilities the average income of salaried workers rose from $976 to $2,084, the salaries of employees in the power industry in the same period rose from $899 to $1,795. At the same time average salaries in industry as a whole rose from $916 to $2,028. A similar comparison in respect to other workers in the power industry shows that the wage earner, as distinguished from the salaried employee in this industry, received $666 in 1909 and $1,398 in 1927, as against a rise to $1,436 from $616 for wage earners in all industries combined.

It is evident that electrical labor has received little benefit either in volume of employment or scale of wages from the technological perfection of the industry as compared with the volume and certainty of dividends and interest paid to capital. Utility executives, however, have pointed to the permanence of employment as a compensation. "The industry," they said to prospective investors, "is depression-proof"; and they permitted labor to believe that the safety enjoyed by shareholders and bondholders would be matched by security of employment.

The stock bromides fed to employees by utility executives during the headlong decade of 1921 to 1931 were "security of tenure" and "continued advancement to the faithful." An "Employees' Handbook" of platitudes and homilies was issued and some 50,000 copies were distributed to instruct employees in the ritual of loyalty and service—and the evils of "political ownership" of utilities. Security and advancement were constantly stressed.

Few utility employees realized that their security depended primarily upon whether the consumers' demand for electricity kept pace with technical advances in the industry and sustained construction projects. The technical progress of 25 years had increased the capacity of each employee by 260 percent—from 82,700 to 297,500 kilowatt-hours a year, or a product worth almost $9,000 per employee. Only eight times as many employees are needed to generate forty times as much energy. New construction projects have offered little better security to the worker. It has been the insistent claim of the industry and its executives that in response to a "patriotic urge" suggested by President Hoover in 1929 construction programs were deliberately accelerated in 1930 in order to sustain what they then believed to be "temporary unemployment." A glance at the construction expenditures of the preceding period is enough to show the falsity of this claim. The decade ending in 1930 was marked by vast consolidations and mergers followed by large increases in stock issues and bond sales. Anticipating the need of meeting additional dividend and interest loads, an attempt was made to reorganize operations through the unification of various systems that had been brought under the same financial control. The unified companies, therefore, undertook large construction projects to effect these economies and to anticipate further increases in demand for electricity, and this long before the so-called "temporary unemployment" of 1929.

Construction had more than doubled between 1922 and 1927. Accelerated construction continued at an even greater pace from 1927 until the end of 1930. It did not occur, as the industry asserts, only after the unemployment conference with President Hoover, but was the natural culmination of a decade of intense development. At the first indication that increases in demand for electricity would partially subside, the "patriotic urge" to sustain employment petered out, although unemployment had become more acute; when the wholesale lay-offs began in 1931, revenues were still $30,000,000 above 1929.

The industry immediately cut down its construction program by $325,000,000 and discharged 36,000 employees with an annual wage loss of $54,000,000. At the end of this same period, so devastating to labor, President Owens of the National Electric Light Association approvingly quoted the Federal Power Commission as saying that "no other great industry exhibits a like resistance to the general economic influence of this period" insofar as revenues from consumers is concerned. "And," he continued, "I might also add, insofar as net income available for investors is also concerned." At the same time Electrical World, standard-bearer of the industry, happily reviewed . . . the unique record for maintenance of dividends by power and light companies, and said editorially that "measured by use of electric service, this country is stable, and those who supply this service are the most prosperous business group in the Nation. . . . Thus the utilities are up to about 100 percent when weighed by statistics." This was at the beginning of 1932.

Indeed, guaranteed dividends and bond interest of the operating companies continued unbroken. This, of course, is not true of some of the holding companies, which, to be sure, are without justified existence and have merely served to increase the insiders' profits at the expense of the consumers and investors. The financiers had capitalized the leading companies at dividend levels which they hoped would be maintained by increased demand for electricity. Up to that time the demand had doubled every 5 years. When, instead, revenues decreased about 1 percent (some other industries had lost as high as 50 percent of their business), holding companies collapsed of their own weight. Some operating companies, however, had increased their stock issues and paid added dividends. At the end of the year 1931, after the discharge of 36,000 employees and the continuance of dividends and interest on bonds, the leading publication of the industry reported that "financial distress of operating companies was conspicuous by its absence. Even in areas most dependent on industries hard hit, power companies made a good showing." And again: "Utility companies suffered relatively little, if an energy output drop of 3.75 percent and a revenue fall of less than 1 percent can, indeed, be called suffering."

The industry is now loaded with staggering stock and bond issues, aggregating some $12,000,000,000, on which dividends and interest must be paid to capital. In 1932 dividends and bond interest of the operating companies again remained intact but labor suffered another decline of 30,000 wage earners, with an annual wage loss of $45,000,000. Construction expenditures were again cut, this time by some $375,000,000, although one of the industry's leading executives speaking to his "fellow employees" said: "We stand today on the threshold of a sturdier and more solid development than our industry has known for nearly a score of years." He spoke, of course, from the standpoint of capital, since his own company discharged 2,500 employees that year.

At the beginning of 1933, while employees were being discharged at the rate of 3,000 per month and the wages of 3,000 more were being cut, Electrical World again reported a year of general capital prosperity and said: "No serious threats to utility progress and prosperity exist." Meanwhile construction projects have been delayed to a critical point which impairs efficiency and provides utilities with pretexts for maintaining exorbitant rates. The cessation of improvements will deprive consumers of rate increases which were often promised out of unification savings in exchange for the approval of consolidations and mergers granted by many public-service commissions. The public will pay for the stoppage of improvements while utility employees starve.

Workers to the number of 66,000 have been discharged and employment in the electrical industry has been reduced 22 percent below the level of 1930, although revenues have declined only 8 percent. In years of prosperity electrical labor received but one third while capital collected two thirds of the spoils, but in times of depression, while the swollen share of capital is untouched, labor suffers in the ratio of three times the decline in revenues. Electric-utility labor now faces the threat of a further lay-off of 20,000 employees, impending wage cuts, and part-time employment, although its pay roll has already been reduced by $100,000,000. In 1933 the consumer will pay about $1,900,000,000 to the industry, of which $575,000,000 will go to stockholders in dividends, $240,000,000 in interest to bondholders, and only $348,000,000 to labor. Capital will also receive $250,000,000 in reserves to maintain security values. Once again the lion's share of revenues paid by the consumer will be reaped by capital—more than $1,000,000,000 as against a third of that sum to 230,000 employees.

Utility employees in New York City have started a movement toward organization which may have far-reaching results. A militant union of 75,000 employees throughout the Nation would go far to bring tangible improvement. Add to this strenuous resistance to high rates on the part of consumers, and the electrical industry may be brought to justice.

RELIEF OF AGRICULTURE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 3835) to relieve the existing national economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the power for which President Roosevelt is asking is without any precedent in our governmental history. The Constitution gives to Congress the power to regulate the currency. It does not give us the power to delegate it. And the Constitution was wise in that provision, because to put such a power into the hands of a single individual would be the most unwise governmental act that could be conceived.

I am ready to grant the high patriotism and honest resolution of President Roosevelt; I make no criticism of him as an individual; but when we contemplate the fact that he must function day in and day out, in health and in illness, when feeling well or when affected with a headache, that he must, as a single individual, be exposed to the pressure of every fanatic and every demagogue who thinks that in this way lies the salvation of the depressed classes of America, it is a terrible power to give to a single individual. No one has ever put it better than did Thomas Jefferson in his Kentucky Resolutions of 1798, and I beg the Senate to listen to what Mr. Jefferson then said. Certainly the founder of the Democratic Party is as much entitled to respect as are any of his later disciples. Here is what Mr. Jefferson said:

It would be a dangerous delusion were a confidence in the men of our choice to silence our fears for the safety of our rights. Confidence is everywhere the parent of despotism; free government is founded in jealousy, not in confidence. It is jealousy, and not confidence, which prescribes limited constitutions, to bind down those whom we are obliged to trust with power. Our Constitution has accordingly fixed the limits to which, and no further, our confidence may go. In questions of power, then, let no more be heard of confidence in man, but bind him down from mischief by the chains of the Constitution.

I would that his words could be remembered in these days when it is proposed to give unparalleled power to our President. He ought not to want it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Did not the Senator from Pennsylvania at the last session of Congress deliver an address on the floor of the Senate in which he said that what this country needed was a dictator?

Mr. REED. I did.

Mr. CONNALLY. But now the dictator is under a different regime.

Mr. REED. I should oppose this grant of power just as strongly if it were asked for President Hoover as I am trying to oppose its being granted to Mr. Roosevelt.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator did propose it at that time?

Mr. REED. That was a rhetorical expression. It was never dreamed by me that any such power as this would be asked or expected, and if Mr. Hoover had asked it I would have tried to be the first to refuse it.

Mr. President, in this morning's Baltimore Sun there is one of the most powerful editorials on this question that I have yet seen. I have a very high regard for the Baltimore Sun; it seems to have a rather low regard for me, and, to paraphrase Voltaire, perhaps we are both wrong. At any rate, be that as it may, I recommend that editorial to every Senator because of the information and the clear thinking it contains. It is too long for me now to quote it, but I send it to the desk and ask that it may be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD immediately after the conclusion of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

(See Exhibit A.)

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it is suggested that this power is not expected to be exercised. If that is so, why ask it? Why should we expose the President to the volley of propaganda to which we ourselves are being subjected? He would get it a hundredfold. I know that my experience is no different from that of any other Senator, but I am physically unable even to read the letters that are coming in, there is such a mass of them on both sides. Why expose President Roosevelt to that in granting him a power if we do not expect him to use it? He will be forced to use it. The pressure from the public would be so great that he would have to use it.

When it is said that this power is merely given without expectation of its exercise, I think that our hopes are getting the better of our good judgment. It might be President Roosevelt's present intention not to use that power, but he could change that intention. He has changed his intentions many times in recent months. Just before election day this is what he said to his fellow countrymen whose votes he was asking. In his speech in Brooklyn on the night of November 4, referring to one of President Hoover's speeches, he said:

The business men of the country, battling hard to maintain their financial solvency and integrity, were told in blunt language in Des Moines, Iowa, how close an escape the country had some months ago from going off the gold standard. This, as has been clearly shown since, was a libel on the credit of the United States. No adequate answer has been made to the magnificent philippic of Senator GLASS the other night in which he showed how unsound was this assertion, and, I might add, Senator GLASS made a devastating challenge that no responsible Government would have sold to the country securities payable in gold if it knew that the promise, yes, the covenant embodied in these securities, was as dubious as the President of the United States claims it was.

And yet the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] told us last Friday here in the Senate that he did not expect that any of the outstanding Government bonds could be or would be paid in gold, in spite of the covenant to pay them in gold at the present standard of value. In so short a time we have come to the point where one of the administration leaders here in the Senate rises and tells the country that he does not expect that we can or will perform our covenant to pay those bonds.

Of course, the assertion was unsound. In the reiterated apologies for it that have come from the administration many words have been added like leeches to suck from the original statement its deadly meaning. But this administration is not content with adding words to make a bad case look good. It also knows how to take words away to make a bad case look better.

Then he went on to say:

One of the most commonly repeated misrepresentations by Republican speakers, including the President, has been the claim that the Democratic position with regard to money has not been made sufficiently clear.

I ask your attention to this, Mr. President. This is from a speech delivered less than 6 months ago. Speaking of President Hoover, Mr. Roosevelt said:

The President is seeing visions of rubber dollars. This is only a part of his campaign of fear. I am not going to characterize these statements. I merely present the facts. The Democratic platform specifically declares, "We advocate a sound currency to be preserved at all hazards." That is plain English. In discussing this platform on July 30 I said, "Sound money is an international necessity, not a domestic consideration for one nation alone." Far up in the Northwest at Butte I repeated the pledge of the platform, saying, "Sound currency must be maintained at all hazards." In Seattle I reaffirmed my attitude on this question. The thing has been said, therefore, in plain English three times in my speeches. It is stated without qualification in the platform, and I have announced my unqualified acceptance of that platform. So much for that misrepresentation.

That is what President Roosevelt said about sound money on the eve of his election. That is what he said about it within 6 months of this moment. And now, Mr. President, he is sponsoring the Thomas amendment plus the Wheeler amendment, and in those two amendments is embodied every variety of unsound money that the wit of man can suggest. I beg you to use your knowledge of fiscal affairs, Mr. President, your knowledge of fiscal history, and tell me, if you can, whether the history of the world contains any kind of unsound currency that is not included in the Thomas-Wheeler amendments.

I am not characterizing these proposals as unsound on my own authority. I say that human experience has shown us no variety of unsound currency that is not provided for in the pending amendments.

Back in 1896 we fought a campaign that was called the sound-money campaign. What was the proposal against which we fought as unsound? What did the American people then vote to be an unsound type of currency? The free and unlimited coinage of silver at a fixed ratio of 16 to 1. That is here now. The President is supporting it. He supports not the heresy that was rejected when Bryan offered it but the worse heresy of giving him the right in his uncontrolled discretion to direct the unlimited coinage of silver at any ratio he may fix. It may be 60 to 1, which is the present ratio in market prices, or it may be 6 to 1, and no man can say him nay. No one could control his decision. If the power were valid, if the grant of it is not unconstitutional, one man can put into effect by his ipse dixit a proposal that would be a thousand times worse than that which Bryan suggested in the campaign of 1896.

What other kinds of unsound money does the world's history show us? Henry VIII followed the example of his Roman predecessor and started to clip the coinage. We provide for that here in the pending amendments. Debasement of the metallic content of the coinage of a country is an old trick practiced by most of the despots in history. The Thomas amendment provides for that. Half the gold in our coinage can be taken away by the ipse dixit of President Roosevelt or whoever may succeed him in the White House. Have we confidence in him? Have we confidence in our distinguished Vice President, who presides over this body? Of course, we have; but they are mortal like the rest of us. We do not know who may inherit these powers. We ought not to give them to anybody.

Back in the history of governmental finance stands out glaringly, as one of the worst cases of printing-press money, the money of the French Revolution, the assignats as they were called. About 1790 the fiscal condition of France became so bad that she was hopelessly insolvent, and she tried floating popular loans, beginning at 4½ percent, then 5 percent, and raising the interest rate even higher, but every effort along that line was a failure. She tried even popular subscription, asking people to send in their trinkets as contributions to the treasury of France. Many patriotic people did it, and many pretty stories are told of the responses which they made to that appeal. But the response furnished only about 1 percent of the immediate necessities of the French treasury.

Then Necker, who was Minister of Finance at the time, evolved the interesting idea that currency could be issued secured by an assignment, for the benefit of the holder, of all the church lands which had recently been confiscated. A good part of the surface of France had been owned by the church. The French Government had confiscated those lands. Theoretically those assignats, as they were called, were secured by an assignment of the land which had been confiscated from the church. As a matter of fact, of course, the holders of the particular assignats never could sell them. They could not have recourse to that collateral, so it amounted to nothing but the naked promise of the French Government to pay so many coins in exchange for the paper money.

The thing grew and the necessities grew. The issue was controlled, oh, very sternly controlled in the beginning. I think of that when we are told that this is only a controlled inflation that is suggested to us now. I think I have here the figures. I found an interesting article by one W. H. Gribble in the Fortnightly Review back in 1923, being an interesting description of Necker's experiment. By the way, I was wrong when I said it was Necker who managed the first inflation. He was guilty of the second one, but the first was John Law. The first inflation took place while Law was minister of finance.

Here is the way Gribble described the situation in France. It is so much like ours today that I am impelled to read one or two paragraphs from the article. I think the Senate will find it interesting. Speaking of Law, Gribble said:

He was a banker with ideas, and his principal idea can be summed up very briefly.

He had observed that there was plenty of currency in rich countries and very little currency in poor countries. He drew the inference that currency was the source of wealth, and that the creation of currency would result in the creation of wealth. France was a poor country at the time, hard hit by the cost of Louis XIV's bid for European hegemony, culminating in the long War of the Spanish Succession. The regent was in a mood to listen to any plausible man with a plausible nostrum. He listened to Law, gave him a free hand, and eventually made him his finance minister; and Law set to work, with a light heart, to produce bank notes.

His original conception was not altogether an unsound one. Merchants needed, and could make good use of, the credit which a bank could provide. Notes, adequately secured, and therefore inspiring confidence, facilitated and consequently stimulated trade. They were more portable than coins—an important consideration in those days of imperfect communication—and they were easier to count. As long as they were issued only as against gold safely deposited in the vaults of the bank, he who issued them could justly be acclaimed as the benefactor of his kind, and no wrong could be done to anyone by making such notes legal tenders for certain purposes, or even for all purposes. The trouble came only when notes were issued on quite other security—on the security, for instance, of the shares of the company which Law formed for the purpose of paying off the national debt—increased and multiplied until the amount in circulation approached 3 milliards of francs, yet continued to be legal tender. But then it came with a catastrophic rush.

It is an intricate story, too long to be told in all its technical financial details; but it is to be noted that, as the hour of disaster drew near, all those phenomena which we now associate with inflation in Germany, Austria, and Russia made their appearance. There was feverish speculation in currency—

I interrupt myself to ask Senators to look at the financial pages of their papers any day this past week if they want to see what feverish speculation in money can do.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. I note that the author from whom the Senator has read speaks of Law's issuing credits on gold alone, and states that that, of course, was sound, but when he began the issuance of credits based on something other than gold that it was unsound.

We departed a good while ago, did we not, from basing credits alone on gold? We require only 40 percent of gold, or something like that, behind our currency now.

Mr. REED. That is right.

Mr. LOGAN. Then is it unsound to the extent of 60 percent?

Mr. REED. No; not at all; because experience shows that that reserve is perfectly adequate.

Mr. LOGAN. That, I think, is true.

Mr. REED. And, of course, I ought to say that the Senator well knows that the remaining 60 percent is secured.

Mr. LOGAN. By something other than gold.

Mr. REED. Yes; by something else than gold.

Mr. LOGAN. Which the author from whom the Senator was reading says is unsound. But the Senator is speaking now of the experience that France had during the revolution and how badly it turned out. I hope that the Senator, before concluding his remarks, will discuss the recent depreciation of the currency by France, and tell us how that turned out, when they cut the franc into 5 francs, I believe.

Mr. REED. Yes; I shall be glad to do so. I will not forget to do that. France has repeatedly resorted to inflation, and each time the result has been an unhappy and an unjust one. But let me finish about the first, because this answers those sincere Americans who point to the recent feverish rise in stock prices and commodity prices as a great benefit coming merely from the suggestion of inflation and, therefore, seek to prove by that, by the performances of the market in recent days, that inflation is an unqualified benefit to the country.

This account of John Law's inflation goes on:

There was feverish speculation in currency, evolving a class of "new rich", whose dissolute lives and vulgar extravagance provoked the "new poor" to mockery and indignation. Parsimony ceased and capital evaporated, because nobody thought it worth while to hold a depreciating currency. Bankruptcies abounded, because debtors discharged their obligations in that currency. Prices rose, because everyone who became possessed of notes rushed to buy land or houses or jewels or other tangible treasures. Gold and silver were first hoarded and then smuggled out of the country. The law forbade their exportation in vain, and equally vain was the attempt to keep up the credit of the notes by an alternation of promises and threats. Panic broke out and developed into riot. Law had to take refuge in the Palais Royal, where the police had great difficulty in protecting him from the mob, left the country in disgrace, and soon afterward died in poverty.

Other financiers stepped in to clear up the mess as best they could, and the notes disappeared from circulation. Those found in the hands of the "new rich"—a class arbitrarily identified by special commission—were simply taken from them and canceled, a decree that no one should travel without a passport under pain of death making it impossible for them to get abroad with their ill-gotten gains. The rest . . . were also demonetized, but stock in the national debt was given to the holders in exchange for them.

That was the first great French experiment in inflation. Its moral was clear, and one might have expected it to be drawn and remembered. Politicians, however, have short memories, and drowning financiers always clutch frantically at straws.

Mr. President, that type of inflation is in this bill. Controlled? Yes, Mr. President; at the last moment a $3,000,000,000 limitation was put on the issuance of greenbacks.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] criticized my use of the word "greenbacks" as describing these bills. They are issued, Mr. President, under the same act of 1862 under which the greenback money of those days was issued. They are issued under precisely the same law. They are unsecured promises to pay, without one vestige of reserve behind them; and that is the definition of a greenback—a note which is nothing more than the naked promise of the Government to pay a certain amount. If one looks in the dictionary he will find that it defines a greenback as just such a note.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. This money is to be issued under the act of 1862.

Mr. REED. Precisely.

Mr. BORAH. There is the same thing behind it—namely, the promise of the Government—as there was in 1862.

Mr. REED. That is right; and the notes issued under the act of 1862 went to such a discount that they were worth only 35 cents in gold. A paper dollar was worth 35 cents in gold after the Civil War.

Mr. BORAH. It is true, however, that it has been declared by historians and by the Supreme Court of the United States that without issuing greenbacks in 1862 we would have lost the war.

Mr. REED. Perhaps that is true; but we were driven to a desperate expedient. We knew it was desperate when we did it. The event proved that it was desperate. The notes did depreciate terribly; and if the war had gone on, and their issuance had gone on, we would have been as badly off as was France.

Mr. BORAH. It seems to me, Mr. President, that we ought to argue this amendment upon the theory that we are meeting a great national emergency just as they were in 1862. No one would propose this measure in normal times or in ordinary conditions, and no one would have proposed the greenbacks in 1862 had there not been a great emergency confronting the country. I am considering the proposition upon the theory that we are meeting a great national emergency. When the emergency is over, the United States will redeem its pledge and will resort to whatever is necessary in order to establish a sound dollar.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President—

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. GLASS. I wanted to arrest the attention of the Senator from Pennsylvania a while ago, when my observation would have been more pertinent than right now. In his recital of French history and the John Law episode there appeared to be omitted a very important fact, which was that it was made a capital offense, with punishment by the guillotine, for any citizen of France to discriminate in favor of gold and against the printing-press currency. We have now gone far beyond that, however. We have made a statutory criminal of every American citizen who holds gold.

Mr. REED. The Senator is exactly right. I think, however, that the law he speaks of, that made it a capital offense to discriminate in favor of gold and against these notes, was the one which was passed in the subsequent inflation that was engineered by Necker. At that time they tried every sort of absurdity, threats, and intimidation to keep up the value of these notes.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President—

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. HASTINGS. In connection with the observation made by the Senator from Idaho that he considered this justifiable because of the emergency—

Mr. BORAH. I was speaking of the greenbacks.

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes; the greenbacks—I call attention to the fact that the amendment provides that—

An amount sufficient to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to retire and cancel 4 percent annually of such outstanding notes—is appropriated. It seems to me that if it is an immediate emergency we ought not to provide for any cancellation, and certainly nobody should expect the emergency to last for 25 years before they are canceled.

Mr. REED. Let me first answer the Senator from Virginia.

In Necker's inflation it was found that the Government was unable to arrest the fall of the assignats, and this is what is said of their action:

Successive governments . . . attributed the fall to royalist intrigues, to the machinations of speculators, to any cause rather than their own abuse of the printing press, and they sought to subdue the laws of economics by making terror the order of the day. Those who refused assignats in payment of their debts, or inquired before concluding a bargain whether it was proposed to settle accounts in assignats or in cash, were to be imprisoned and kept in irons for periods ranging from 6 to 20 years. Those who spoke disparagingly of assignats were to be put to death. All to no purpose, and attempts to fix prices were equally unavailing.

Then it goes on to show how all those who were living on pensions or on salaries from the State or from private employers were reduced to a miserable pass, so that the pension which a few months before was adequate for one's maintenance now was not enough to maintain the individual for 1 month, much less a year.

Mr. President, I am sorry that there is not time—it would be an abuse of the patience of Senators—to read further from that interesting period in history.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. The Senator from Idaho observed that it is conceded on the part of the authorities that the Civil War might have been lost to the Union but for the issuance of greenbacks. I have not read the accepted authorities to that effect.

Wesley C. Mitchell, one of the recognized authorities upon that subject, has estimates that the Civil War would have cost $833,000,000 less than it did cost if the greenbacks had not been issued and if specie payments had been maintained.

Henry C. Adams, another acknowledged authority on public debts, has made a similar estimate, and has condemned the policy of issuing greenbacks.

William G. Sumner, who is also a recognized authority, condemns the issuance of the greenbacks, and says the Government at the time was confronted by these two alternatives: Either inflation, high prices, and large imports, on the one hand; or increased taxation, specie payments, low prices, and large exports, upon the other hand. James Gallatin, son of Albert Gallatin, then president of one of the leading banks in the United States, combated the policy at the time, and suggested that a wiser, a safer, and a more economical course could be pursued; and I believe that Mr. Chase, then Secretary of the Treasury, afterwards challenged the wisdom of the greenback policy. As Chief Justice he afterwards handed down the majority opinion of the Court in the case of Griswold against Hepburn, holding that the Greenback or Legal Tender Act was unconstitutional in respect to debts entered into prior to its passage. That case, of course, was overruled in the later Legal Tender cases.

I might add this: We now maintain some $346,000,000 worth of greenbacks in circulation. Some Senator a few days ago praised the policy, remarking that we maintained a gold reserve of some $150,000,000 against greenbacks. We resumed specie payments January 1, 1879. The interest on the gold reserve, at current rates, from that time until this, far exceeds the entire amount of the greenbacks now outstanding. To that extent at least the greenbacks would have been a financial luxury.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I desire to read a paragraph from the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Legal Tender cases, Twelfth Wallace, at page 540, where they said:

We do not propose to dilate at length upon the circumstances in which the country was placed, when Congress attempted to make Treasury notes a legal tender. They are of too recent occurrence to justify enlarged description. Suffice it to say that a civil war was then raging which seriously threatened the overthrow of the Government and the destruction of the Constitution itself. It demanded the equipment and support of large armies and navies, and the employment of money to an extent beyond the capacity of all ordinary sources of supply. Meanwhile the Public Treasury was nearly empty, and the credit of the Government, if not stretched to its utmost tension, had become nearly exhausted. Moneyed institutions had advanced largely of their means, and more could not be expected of them. They had been compelled to suspend specie payments. Taxation was inadequate to pay even the interest on the debt already incurred, and it was impossible to await the income of additional taxes. The necessity was immediate and pressing. The Army was unpaid. There was then due to the soldiers in the field nearly a score of millions of dollars. The requisitions from the War and Navy Departments for supplies exceeded fifty millions, and the current expenditure was over one million per day. The entire amount of coin in the country, including that in private hands, as well as that in banking institutions, was insufficient to supply the need of the Government 3 months, had it all been poured into the Treasury. Foreign credit we had none. We say nothing of the overhanging paralysis of trade, and of business generally, which threatened loss of confidence in the ability of the Government to maintain its continued existence, and therewith the complete destruction of all remaining national credit.

It was at such a time and in such circumstances that Congress was called upon to devise means for maintaining the Army and Navy, for securing the large supplies of money needed, and, indeed, for the preservation of the Government created by the Constitution. It was at such a time and in such an emergency that the Legal Tender Acts were passed. Now, if it were certain that nothing else would have supplied the absolute necessities of the Treasury, that nothing else would have enabled the Government to maintain its Army and Navy, that nothing else would have saved the Government and the Constitution from destruction, while the Legal Tender Acts would, could anyone be bold enough to assert that Congress transgressed its powers? Or, if these enactments did work these results, can it be maintained now that they were not for a legitimate end, or "appropriate and adapted to that end", in the language of Chief Justice Marshall? That they did work such results is not to be doubted. Something revived the drooping faith of the people; something brought immediately to the Government's aid the resources of the Nation; and something enabled the successful prosecution of the war and the preservation of the national life. What was it, if not the legal-tender enactments?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TYNDINGS in the chair). Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GORE. I do not intend to enter upon a discussion of that issue, which ran not only through the politics and finance but through the courts of the country for nearly half a generation. I was reading last night the History of Greenbacks, by Mr. E. G. Spaulding, who was the author of the act of February 25, 1862. He also aided in the preparation of the act of August 5, 1861. He said that if Secretary Chase had exercised the power or discretion which Congress deliberately vested in him under section 6 of that act the emergency which forced the greenbacks might not have arisen.

Under the act of August 5, 1861, the Government was empowered to borrow $150,000,000 from the banks. The loan was negotiated. Secretary Chase insisted that the banks advance that loan in coin, which they did. That forced the suspension of specie payments the last of December 1861, and rendered necessary the passage of the act of February 25, 1862, the greenback law. When that measure was pending, I believe in the House of Representatives, Justin S. Morrill, of Vermont, and Valentine B. Horton, of Ohio, foreshadowed and described the very consequences which would ensue from the enactment of that law, and their speeches, prophecies when they were made, read like history today. My point is that we ought not to close our eyes against the lamp of experience and shut out its light.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, as my contribution to the dialogue which has just taken place, I want to call attention to this fact: That this is the only time in history, so far as I know, when a nation has resorted to inflation when it did not have to. During the Civil War the necessities of the case were supposed to force the resort to this type of inflation. The Senator from Idaho has given an excellent picture of those necessities. Whether that reasoning was right or wrong, those responsible thought it was right at the time. They had to resort to a measure which many men feared.

The French, in their various resorts to inflation, have been driven to it. The Germans thought they were driven to it. All these countries which have debased their currency or resorted to inflation by the issuance of paper money have been driven to it. But now we are asked to do it of our own volition and not through compulsion. We are asked to do it because of the social benefits it is supposed to bring.

Mr. President, I sat amazed yesterday at the language of the sponsor of the amendment in describing the purposes of offering it. I beg the Senators who did not hear his speech to listen to what the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] yesterday described as the motive for the introduction and support of the amendment. I presume that, in presenting it for the administration, he is also presenting this argument for the administration. This is what he said:

Mr. President, the amendment, in my judgment, is the most important proposition that has ever come before the American Congress. It is the most important proposition that has ever come before any parliamentary body of any nation of the world. Saving the single issue of the World War, there has been no issue joined in 6,000 years of recorded history as important as this issue pending here today.

My old Bible used to say that Adam and Eve were born in 4004 B.C.; so that it will be seen that the Senator from Oklahoma is not restrained by diffidence in going clear back to Adam and Eve. This is the most important thing, he says, since Adam and Eve, with the single exception of the war with Germany. Then he goes on to say:

Mr. President, it will be my task to show that if the amendment shall prevail it has potentialities as follows: It may transfer from one class to another class in these United States value to the extent of almost $200,000,000,000. This value will be transferred, first, from those who own the bank deposits. Secondly, this value will be transferred from those who own bonds and fixed investments.

I want to make that statement clear. No issue in 6,000 years save the World War begins to compare with the possibilities embraced in the power conferred by this amendment. Two hundred billion dollars now of wealth and buying power rests in the hands of those who own the bank deposits and fixed investments, bonds, and mortgages. That $200,000,000,000 these owners did not earn, they did not buy it, but they have it, and because they have it the masses of the people of this Republic are on the verge of starvation—17,000,000 on charity, in the bread lines.

If the amendment carries and the powers are exercised in a reasonable degree, it must transfer that $200,000,000,000 in the hands of persons who now have it, who did not buy it, who did not earn it, who do not deserve it, who must not retain it, back to the other side—the debtor class of the Republic, the people who owe the mass debts of the Nation.

That is the declaration of the sponsor of the amendment, the spokesman of President Roosevelt, the spokesman of the administration; that is the declaration of the purpose and effect of the amendment we are now considering.

We are not, as our fathers were in the Civil War, driven to this by the present necessities of the Treasury. No; we are going to do the most important thing since the Garden of Eden; we are going to take all the bank accounts and all the bonds and all the investments from the present owners, who, according to the Senator from Oklahoma, did not earn any of them, although some of us thought that our savings from our day-to-day earnings, which we had in the bank, or which he had invested somewhere, had been earned. It seemed to us we were earning them. It seems to a lot of the savings-bank depositors that when they put a little of their pay checks each month into the bank they have earned that money. But, according to the Senator from Oklahoma, we assume it is all unearned, and that the people who have it ought not to have it. So his amendment is going to take $200,000,000,000 from those folks who have it and give it to the debtors of the Nation, who presumably did not earn it, either; but, anyway, one class is to be stripped of its property in order to give to another class.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. In effect, however, that is what is done by reason of inflation, is it not? I would not go so far as the Senator has—

Mr. REED. The Senator means he would not go so far as the Senator from Oklahoma has gone?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; not so far as the Senator from Oklahoma went.

Mr. REED. I am glad to know that.

Mr. WHEELER. But I do say this, and I say it without fear of being challenged as to the correctness of my statement, that when wheat and cotton, and such things go down in their purchasing power to one sixth or one seventh of what the normal purchasing power of those products was in some instances during the year 1929, then there is taken away from the debtor class, and from the class of producers of this country, and, in fact, given to those who were the creditors, a tremendous amount which the latter class have not earned.

Mr. REED. Of course, that is true. Every time prices change, either upward or downward, it results to the disadvantage or the advantage of either debtor or creditor, as the case may be, and the fall in prices at present is no more unjust to one group than was the extravagant rise in prices in 1920, for example, unjust to another group. We cannot change our currency around every time the price level changes. We have to have some fixed standard somewhere.

Mr. WHEELER. I agree that there should be some fixed standard, but I do say this to the Senator, in my humble judgment: We point with horror to what happened in Germany in 1923, and we point with horror to what occurred in Austria in 1923 and 1924, and likewise to what occurred in Russia, where the inflation went to the extreme, and practically all creditors were completely wiped out. If we permit the same thing to happen in deflation, we will have exactly the same situation, if the deflation goes far enough.

Mr. REED. I grant that.

Mr. WHEELER. This is what ought to happen, in my judgment, and this is what I have been fighting for: Not to wipe out entirely the creditor class but to bring back purchasing power and to raise the prices of the commodities which the producer has to sell so that he can pay off his indebtedness. I am not in disagreement with the Senator with reference to the power that is proposed to be granted to the President of the United States by this bill whereby he is to be given the right to cut the gold content of the dollar down to 50 cents at any time he sees fit. My own view about that matter is that the Congress of the United States has been going entirely too far in granting power to the Executive, and permitting him to make cuts, for instance, in the Veterans' Bureau and in the Agricultural Department.

Mr. REED. Now let me answer the first part of what the Senator has said. All through the argument of the Senator from Oklahoma goes the assumption that we who oppose this bill are hard-hearted men who want to grind down the debtor class for the presumed purpose of making a few millionaires richer. Of course that is just plain rubbish. Every one of us feels as does the Senator from Montana, that it is imperative to raise the prices of commodities; that it is for the best interests of the whole country that the price level should be raised. All of us want to bring relief to the debtor class; all of us who have any ideas at all can see that the present depressed prices of commodities and of all property weighs with undue severity on the men who have borrowed money. The farmer has to produce more wheat in order to pay a dollar in taxes or a dollar in interest. We all realize that. I think we have as much ability to see that as has the Senator from Oklahoma. What we object to about his amendment is not his desire to raise prices, because we all share that desire, but we say he is going about it in a perfectly poisonous way, and that the method to which he is resorting in order to raise prices has been proved by history over and over again to be calamitous to the nation that resorts to it. It is not that we dissent from his desire to raise prices, although I think his distribution of $200,000,000,000 by confiscation from one class in order to give to another class is an idea to which most of us will not agree.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I am very much gratified to hear what the Senator from Pennsylvania has just said. I think he has expressed it very fairly, that we are confronted with the proposition that we must raise commodity prices in order to permit those in debt to pay what they owe. We have started with the same end in view.

Mr. REED. Absolutely.

Mr. NORRIS. But the Senator from Pennsylvania thinks this particular amendment is entirely wrong, of course?

Mr. REED. I think it is desperately wrong.

Mr. NORRIS. I assume, having that view but having the same object that we all have, the Senator will propose in lieu of this some remedy that he believes will bring about the result which we are all seeking?

Mr. REED. I think the remedy was made apparent to us when the markets reopened for the first time after Inauguration Day. The people appeared to have great faith in President Roosevelt; they had great faith in his professed ability to correct this situation, and the revival of confidence was such, the increase of cheer was such that the wheat market jumped 5 cents on the first day after the market opened. That was not because the people expected inflation; it was not then that they were talking about this inflation proposal. There is the best kind of farm relief that has ever been suggested—the natural action of a rising market that follows a restoration of confidence; and I will say, Mr. President, that the quickest relief that could be given to the American farmer and the American workman would be for Franklin D. Roosevelt to come out today with the firm statement that, so far as the power lies in him, he will not permit the American currency to be inflated. Should he do so there would be such a boom as has not been seen for years.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, permit me to say that was something that occurred almost daily during President Hoover's administration, and conditions continued to grow worse every day.

Mr. REED. That was because here in Congress—

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator think if President Roosevelt would make the announcement that he is opposed to any inflation of the currency that wheat and other commodities would continue to rise?

Mr. REED. I think the speculators who have been buying in the last few days might sell, and there might be a temporary drop, because the rise in recent days has been wholly unhealthy. The difference is that anything that Mr. Hoover was known to favor could not pass Congress. We collectively baited him and refused to cooperate with him every day of his administration. Now the circumstances are exactly reversed. We would pass Mother Goose through Congress today if Mr. Roosevelt asked us to do so.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me, if the Senator will yield further—

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska, so that he may finish.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator is wrong in his statement about President Hoover's not being able to get anything through Congress. When Mr. Hoover was President, it is true, he opposed, for instance, every method of farm relief that came in here for a great many years. He did so while he was in the Cabinet and also after he became President. It was through his influence that most of the proposed remedies were defeated.

Mr. REED. He proposed the Farm Board idea, as I recall.

Mr. NORRIS. I am coming to that. We continually challenged those who were opposing suggested remedies to bring in something of their own, and President Hoover did it. We had the farm relief bill, and we passed it, and pretty nearly everybody voted for it.

Mr. REED. And now pretty nearly everybody is sorry for it. I know I am sorry.

Mr. COUZENS. And we had the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and other things, and still conditions became worse. I voted for the Farm Board bill only because I had been saying continually from year to year, mostly to Mr. Hoover, if what we propose is not right, bring in something else, and I will not stand in the way, and I did not. I voted for it, although I did not believe it was going to work, and it did not work very well.

Mr. REED. Let me read something that was said by the Abbé Maury back in 1790, when people who were advocating inflation asked him the same question the Senator from Nebraska just asked me. He was asked, "If you do not like this, what do you propose as an alternative?" and Abbé Maury said, "The issue of paper money will be a public calamity. People ask me, 'If you object to these assignats, what are you proposing to substitute for them?' I reply, 'What would you like me to substitute for this wild beast which is about to devour us?'" That is the way he expressed it. We do not want to substitute another unsound idea for this one. It is no argument for a proposal like the Thomas amendment that we cannot pull out of the hat some other piece of magic that will be better. There are just some things that the Government is incapable of doing, and this is one of them. I now yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, getting back to the Senator's remark a while ago about the rise of 5 cents a bushel in the price of wheat immediately upon the reopening of the markets after the 4th of March, the Senator will recall that during the bank holiday and the market holiday we had passed an emergency banking act which provided for the issue of $2,000,000,000 of additional currency, and during the time when the banks were closed the Bureau of Engraving and Printing actually printed in preparation for its use $2,000,000,000 of currency.

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. The newspapers, of course, carried stories about the printing of that money and stated that it would be available for use by the people of the United States.

Mr. REED. That is right.

Mr. BARKLEY. As a matter of fact, it is all down there yet on shelves.

Mr. REED. Proving conclusively that our trouble is not a shortage of currency.

Mr. BARKLEY. It does not prove that, except that the agencies which it was expected would use that money and filter it out to the people have not availed themselves of it; they have not been willing to use this facility and have not called for it, because they would not loan it to the people. Is the Senator able to say that the expectation that that $2,000,000,000 would be available and would be circulated among the people and would be used in commerce had anything to do with the immediate rise in prices as soon as the markets were reopened?

Mr. REED. I do not think it had much to do with it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Why not?

Mr. REED. What cheered the people was the idea that we had stopped the string of bank failures, that firm and decisive action had been taken to stop the drain on our gold, that the banks that were permitted to open were sound banks, and that the Government by this method—of course it helped—was allowing the sound banks to use every particle of currency they needed to meet any run if a run should come.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator is also aware of the fact that there are now about $8,000,000,000 of credits, of deposits—of course, it is not all represented in cash because there is much duplication and it is difficult to state how much actual money is represented by $10,000,000,000 in bank deposits—

Mr. REED. The bank deposits of the country are much more than $10,000,000,000.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand that, but I am now speaking about the deposits in closed banks. There are about $8,000,000,000 locked up in banks that are still closed, representing in part money, representing in part checking accounts, representing in part credit as we know it in business; so that if this entire $6,000,000,000—and I am trying to draw the Senator out as to his views; I am not attempting to criticize his argument—but if the entire $6,000,000,000 provided for in this amendment were issued—which is hardly probable—I should say it would not absorb as much in money or in credit as the total amount now tied up in the closed banks of the United States.

Mr. REED. First, the Senator must not delude himself into thinking that only $6,000,000,000 of inflation is provided for by the pending measure, because in the five sections embraced in the bill unlimited inflation is provided for. First, there are $3,000,000,000 of Treasury notes which may be used to retire outstanding Government obligations.

Mr. BARKLEY. Which leads me to suggest also that 51 percent of the very Government obligations which are to be retired are now in the hands of banks, which ties up still more available currency which might be put to work for the benefit of the people.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator let me finish my answer to him?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; but I wanted to get that in.

Mr. REED. First, there are the $3,000,000,000 of Treasury notes authorized to be issued for the purpose of buying Government obligations on the open market or elsewhere. Second, there are another $3,000,000,000 of Federal Reserve notes authorized to be issued by the Federal Reserve banks with which to buy securities from the Government, and next there is provision for debasing the gold content of the dollar down to 50 percent of its present standard, and that is unlimited except by the 50 percent provision.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is unlimited within 50 percent.

Mr. REED. I just said that.

Mr. BARKLEY. And if the President should debase it one half, it would result in the possibility of issuing twice as much money based on gold as is now in circulation.

Mr. REED. There could be issued twice as much money as is now authorized and in circulation, for our gold reserve would justify an outstanding currency today of about $10,000,000,000, and if the gold dollar were debased to the extent of half, it would authorize $20,000,000,000.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the Senator—

Mr. REED. Let me finish, please. On top of that, last night there was offered an amendment to the so-called "Thomas amendment." The amendment to the amendment, which was offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], with the statement that the President favored it, authorizes the unlimited coinage of silver at any ratio the President might fix, and so again we would have an uncontrolled instrument of inflation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, I am not authorized to say anything about that or who favors it or who does not. I suppose the Senate will exercise its judgment in disposing of that amendment.

Mr. REED. I do not think the Senate will.

Mr. BARKLEY. It did the other day. It exercised its judgment in the matter of the silver amendment a few days ago.

Mr. REED. If the Senator will pardon me, I have the floor, please, and I should like to complete my answer.

Mr. BARKLEY. Very well.

Mr. REED. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the Democratic leader, stated to the press the other day that the Wheeler amendment had the support of President Roosevelt. The Senator from Montana himself so stated last night when he introduced it, and seemed to be surprised that we would not let it be adopted right then and there at half past 5 last night; but it had to have a little debate, and so it was not adopted, and that is the pending question. Now, have I answered the Senator's questions?

Mr. BARKLEY. Well, no.

Mr. REED. The Senator asked me a good many questions. I have answered all I remember.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not want to take the Senator's time, but I do want to observe that if it be true that, based upon our present gold standard and the weight and fineness of the gold dollar, there is a possibility of issuing $10,000,000,000 of circulating money and only about $5,000,000,000 has been issued—

Mr. REED. Slightly over $6,000,000,000 in currency is outstanding.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is not all based absolutely upon the reserve of gold.

Mr. REED. No; some of it is of a different variety.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes, some of it is of a different variety; but if even only $6,000,000,000 had been issued where there is a possibility of $10,000,000,000, the Senator does not think it fair to assume when we authorize the issuance of 20 billions that the whole 20 billions would be issued upon a debased gold dollar?

Mr. REED. The moment we begin to debase, the moment we begin to inflate, we are setting in motion a force which we are not able to control.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator is assuming that all the other alternatives fail and that the President will carry out the authority given him in the pending bill.

Mr. REED. I think it is a necessary assumption.

Mr. BARKLEY. Not necessarily so.

Mr. REED. I think it is. I do not believe anybody on earth could resist the pressure for inflation that will be exerted against the White House if we pass this bill.

Let me give a few authorities that I think will be admitted to be authorities on the possibility of controlling inflation. One of the most lucid statements of the case that I have ever seen is contained in a little volume put out by the Institute of Economics back in 1923 in a study of Germany's capacity to pay. This is the way they refer to the German inflation that was then beginning. Mind you, in the middle of 1923 German inflation had not begun to go to the absurd lengths that it reached in September 1924, but this language was quite prophetic:

The history of paper-currency inflation, as, for example, in the American Colonies in our Revolutionary days, in France following the Revolution of 1790, in the American Confederacy, and since the Great War in Russia, Austria, Hungary, and elsewhere, shows that once under way it is practically impossible to check the devastating process. The primary reason is that as prices advance wages and salaries must be raised and costs of every kind increased. Hence, the more prices rise the greater the volume of currency that is required. Indeed, it is a striking phenomenon that the more rapid the currency inflation the greater appears to be the "shortage" of currency—this for the reason that each new advance in prices, wages, etc., calls for a new increase in the supply of money required for the conduct of business. German employers, including the Government, must of necessity advance wages each month in proportion to the rise in prices as shown by an index number—the alternative being political, if not social, revolution. Thus whatever may be the initial causes of price advances, successive increases in wages, salaries, and raw materials' prices soon become intricately interrelated, giving rise to what is commonly known as the "vicious spiral" of rising prices, rising wages, rising costs, rising prices, and so on.

I spare the Senate the whole of it, but read finally:

The complete story of the inflationary movement in Germany may be briefly summarized. At first the flow of manufactured money to the channels of production gave a decided stimulus to output—vitalizing the industrial organism like new blood circulating through the body. Later, however, a state of fever inevitably developed, which, while it did not for a time fully offset the tonic effects of the steady flow of new money through industrial channels, gradually began to undermine the whole system, morally as well as physically. As time proceeded, the blood itself grew thinner and thinner, and the consuming fires of the fever burned steadily brighter. If one may personify the German State, one may say that that individual is now suffering simultaneously from pernicious anemia and delirium tremens. Production has recently declined, unemployment is increasing, and fundamental economic and social disintegration is in progress.

This, mind you, was written in the beginning of the inflation in 1923. I repeat the last sentence. Just when Germany ought to have been getting the benefit of this situation, this is what took place:

Production has recently declined, unemployment is increasing, and fundamental economic and social disintegration is in progress.

I turn to another authority, the present Speaker of the House of Representatives [Mr. RAINEY]. He a week or two ago was cheerful enough about the passage of this bill, but here is what he said about inflation in May 1932. He was speaking of the Patman bill which proposed to issue printing-press money, just as section 2 of the Thomas amendment proposes, secured by a Government promise to pay and nothing else. This is what Mr. RAINEY then said about that proposal:

Some of these pending bills provide for a bond issue, the bonds to be held by the Federal Reserve bank and Treasury notes to be issued against the bonds.

That is just what the pending amendment does.

It does not appear to me that this makes any substantial difference in the proposition. Fiat money is money which is issued on the credit of the Government for its payment and the mere promise by the Government to pay Treasury notes based upon the promise of the Government to pay bonds does not appear to me to relieve the situation in the least. It is still fiat money.

In the recent past we have seen European governments resort to fiat money until it took in Germany millions of marks to buy a small loaf of bread, and finally the German issue of fiat money based on the promise of the German Government to pay was stabilized on the basis of 1,000,000,000,000 of marks, based on the promise of the Government to pay, for 1 gold mark. A government once embarked upon the practice of issuing fiat money finds it difficult always to stop. The experience of Germany and other nations ought not to be repeated in this, the greatest and richest nation in the world. There may be some excuse for impoverished European nations, emerging from the World War, to depreciate their currency with such disastrous result to them, but with their example staring us in the face it is incomprehensible to me that this proposition can be seriously considered in this country.

O Mr. President, can you not induce Speaker RAINEY to go down to the White House and say that to Mr. Roosevelt this afternoon? Can you not induce him to say that again to the country as he made it so clear in this report that he filed last May on the Patman bill? If it was true then, it is still true. If it was unthinkable in May 1932, it ought to be unthinkable in April 1933.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. REED. I am glad to yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. I desire to invite the Senator's attention to the fact that I think it was this same authority that announced a few days ago, with respect to the distinguished Senator's opposition to this bill, that the Senator and his party were 25 or 30 years behind the times.

Mr. REED. It depends on whose ox is gored. But it is not very far from here to the White House, and if Mr. RAINEY would just go down there for a few moments and say to the President what he said to the world last May it would do such a lot of good and would stop this experiment which we are going to live to regret. He could render a very patriotic service.

But there may be those who do not consider Speaker RAINEY an authority or who think that his remarks in 1932 are nullified by his work of 1933. He has, of course, as much right to change his mind as President Roosevelt. President Roosevelt can go from sound money to every variety of unsound money in 6 months. Mr. RAINEY ought to be allowed to change his mind in 11 months. For those of us who do not consider him a conclusive authority, perhaps we will have more respect for what the Encyclopædia Britannica says about it. They end their article on currency inflation in these words:

To sum up, currency inflation is perhaps the most fatal disease from which a nation can suffer. It destroys wealth and redistributes what is left in an arbitrary and inequitable fashion. It makes extravagance a virtue and thrift a vice. It will ruin one man and enrich his neighbor, and neither can lift a finger to stop it. It is born of government extravagance and fosters that extravagance as it grows. Profits and wages look princely but measured in real worth sink to penury.

Could anything sum it up better than that?

Mr. President, I have about concluded. The advocates of the amendment have done me the honor to attack me when they ought to be explaining the merits of their proposal, if it has any. A considerable part of the speech of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] yesterday was devoted to showing the country how I am only talking for the benefit of the millionaire and propertied class. Mr. President, the passage of this bill will not hurt them. The people who will suffer from this are the wage earners of America. We have several millions of them in my State, and I am here to represent them. In spite of the sneers of those who like to put everything on personal grounds and ascribe wrong motives to us here, I am trying, according to my poor lights, to represent those wage earners, because it is they who will be the first victims of the cruelty that is embodied in this proposal.

Mr. William Green, in his statement of Saturday, showed that he fully understands that. He said that the effect of this proposal will be an invisible reduction of wages. That is what I have been claiming in all the discussions of the question.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. In just a moment. Perhaps I am here representing only millionaires, but it is a certainty that Mr. William Green is not representing millionaires in his presidency of the American Federation of Labor. When he said that that is the first effect of the bill and consequently he is going to try to get wages raised, he is stating a sound conclusion which is proved by the experience of every other country that has gone in for inflation. It is an invisible cut in wages.

I now yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. Does the Senator contend that the depreciation of the pound sterling was in effect a cutting of wages?

Mr. REED. It undoubtedly was.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator that every economist in Great Britain with whom I have talked at the present time will disagree with the statement made by the Senator from Pennsylvania. The claim was that before they did it, as a matter of fact, it would have that effect, but commodity prices have not risen, and consequently it has not amounted in any degree to a reduction in wage.

Mr. REED. That was answered most aptly by Mr. André Siegfried in a despatch he sent from London a short while ago. I thought I had it at hand, but I cannot lay my finger on it. Prices in Great Britain have stood still since September 1931. They have run along quite even. World prices of commodities, as expressed in gold, have steadily declined. The result is that instead of getting the benefit of the diminished gold price of commodities the British workman has had to continue to pay the same. He pays more in his money at face value for his cotton and his meats and his sugar and all the rest of his necessities than does the workman in America.

Mr. WHEELER. There is not any question about that. The Senator is exactly right; but the effect in Great Britain has been that more people have been employed than in these other countries, by reason of the fact that the foreign commerce of Great Britain has not gone down in the same ratio that the foreign trade has gone down in the United States; and while millions of people have been laid off in America during that period of time that has not been the case in Great Britain. Only 2 or 3 days ago a number of Senators had a conference with one of the representatives of the Bank of England right here in this building, and he made that statement, and innumerable other British writers have made exactly the same statement—that British commerce has not gone down in proportion to world commerce by reason of their depreciated currency, and people have not been thrown out of work during that period of time, because, as the Senator said a moment ago, prices went down for a brief period of time, and then they remained upon a level, just exactly as they did in Sweden.

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER. The result in the United States has been that while the dollar has purchased more for the worker who had his wages maintained, yet we all know that not only have wages here been cut but we have 13,000,000 people walking the streets looking for work, and we have had to put them on a dole. Notwithstanding Mr. Green or anybody else, wages always go up in this country and every other country according to the demand there is for laboring people. The Senator knows perfectly well that if we started people to work in this country and we could employ in our factories and so forth these 13,000,000 men who are walking the streets, whether the price of commodities went up or not, wages would go up.

Mr. REED. All right. Now let me answer some of that, if I can remember it all.

There is no doubt that going off the gold standard in Great Britain gave a fillip temporarily to their industry. It made it very much easier for them to export their products to America, for example, or to France, or to any country on the gold standard, because they could buy just so many more pounds with the currency with which they were paid for their goods. It made it easier for them to get in under our tariff wherever a tariff was fixed on an ad valorem rate; and both of those things have caused serious concern in the United States.

The Japanese, for example, who have debased their currency to 40 percent of its face value, are taking away trade from us in such things as electric-light bulbs. They can import electric-light bulbs from Japan, pay the duty on them, and sell them for less than the mill cost of manufacture in the United States; and the only reason they can is that they are paying their work people in yen which are 60 percent depreciated, worth only 40 percent of what they used to be worth. There has been no nominal wage reduction, but there has been an actual wage reduction of 60 percent.

That happened in Great Britain. Suppose we made that our motive for inflation. Suppose, in order to get back our export trade, we debased the currency, or resorted to inflation. That is not the motive that was stated by the Senator from Oklahoma, but it might be a motive for doing it. We should instantly force Great Britain to inflate further, to lower the value of her currency so as to maintain the present ratio of advantage, and then we should be in a competition with her and with these other countries in debasing our own currency.

Mr. WHEELER rose.

Mr. REED. Pardon me; I am still trying to answer the Senator's question.

Great Britain has a vast fund which is called the exchange-stabilization fund, and she has used that fund very largely to sell pounds and buy dollars in order to hold her own currency down as compared to the dollar. If we resort to inflation under this measure, it will simply force her to use that fund to drive it down further in relation to the dollar. Then we shall be engaged in a profitless rivalry with Great Britain, we selling dollars and she selling pounds, and the result will impoverish both of us. The sound thing to do is what Mr. Roosevelt appears to be trying to accomplish this week—come to some kind of practical agreement with the European nations to end this senseless "bearing" of their own currency, to stabilize the exchanges, and get to some reasonably fixed, stable measure of foreign exchange. That will be greatly beneficial to America, and, in my judgment, Mr. Roosevelt is doing the wise thing in striving for such an agreement; but I do not like to see that wisdom marred by this very reckless amendment—reckless if used. I do not like to see such power given to the President, and I do not like to start the clamor against him, which in my judgment will drive him to resort to all of the expedients that are in this bill.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I did not have the privilege of hearing the distinguished Senator's opening statement; but did he make a statement with reference to whether or not he felt that the Congress had the constitutional power to delegate to the President not only the power to cut the gold content of the dollar from $1 down to 50 cents but the power to delegate to him the authority to enter into agreements, or what would in effect be treaties, with these various other countries stabilizing the pound sterling and the dollar?

Mr. REED. I did express the view, although I did not amplify it, that we cannot delegate the power to regulate the coinage that is given us by the Constitution. I do not think we can delegate it; but I realize that constitutional limitations are not a very successful subject of debate here in the Senate, and so I did not amplify that. On the other proposal, that we ratify in effect a treaty which the President in his discretion may hereafter make, I am very clear that we cannot do it. We could advise and consent in advance to the making of a specific, exactly expressed bargain. That is to say, "We will ratify it now, Mr. President, in advance, if you can make a contract in the following words." That, I believe, would be valid; but to ratify in advance a bargain which is not stated with certainty I think is beyond our power. It is an abdication of our function, and I do not believe it would be held to be valid.

Mr. President, I thank the Senate for the courtesy with which it has listened to my remarks.

EXHIBIT A

[From the Baltimore Sun of Apr. 25, 1933]

INFLATION

"It happened that a dog had got a piece of meat and was carrying it home in his mouth to eat it in peace. Now, on his way home he had to cross a plank lying across a running brook. As he crossed, he looked down and saw his own shadow reflected in the water beneath. Thinking it was another dog with another piece of meat, he made up his mind to have that also. So he made a snap at the shadow in the water, but as he opened his mouth the piece of meat fell out, dropped into the water, and was never seen more."

We commend the ancient fable to the gentlemen in authority in Washington. When President Roosevelt enforced his stern banking policy in his very first hour in office, the American people got a piece of meat into their mouth. For the first time in many months they had a new faith and a new confidence in the money they had put into banks. Part of the money was gone, for some of the banks had been closed, and it was clear that all of their depositors would not be paid in full. Another part of the money was in doubt, for it was in banks that were placed under restrictions. But most of the money of the people was in banks that stood ready to meet all depositors' demands for payment. And, for the first time in more than 2 years, the haunting fear that weak banks would pull down strong banks and destroy everything began to disappear from the popular mind. Mr. Roosevelt's stern separation of sheep and goats had done that.

There was great promise in it. True enough, large sums of the people's money were frozen in banks that had been permanently closed or permitted to open only under rigorous restrictions. True enough, that meant another measure of deflation—bitter distress and serious curtailment of potential purchasing power. But it was also true that the far larger part of the people's money in the banks had been given new security, new reliability, and that therefore it was possible to make plans to use it, to trade with it, to act with confidence and assurance that nobody had possessed in many, many months. It was quite possible that, taking the Nation as a whole, the new strength and the new vitality given the money in safe banks would more than make up for the disappearance from trade of the money in the weak banks. As a matter of fact, there was some concrete evidence that this possibility was beginning to be a reality.

The people had a piece of meat in their mouth. Is there anyone who will undertake to say, since the tinkering with money started in Washington last week, that the people still have that piece of meat in their mouth? Put aside the overadvertised gold embargo. In itself, and separate from internal inflation, it probably would not help us or hurt us in any material degree. For we still have our mountain of gold, and the world knows it; and we still have our favorable balance of trade, and the world knows it; and we still have our general creditor position, and the world knows it. But with creation of machinery for wholesale inflation—for inflation in ever-increasing tempo, for still more inflation whenever the measure of inflation that is tried fails to produce its miracles—can anyone say the sense of security, the faith, that is necessary to resumption of normal business is not again weakened?

Mr. Roosevelt and an apparent majority in Congress are not only setting up machinery for wholesale inflation which would cheapen every dollar owned in this country. They also are setting up this machinery in a manner that leaves every man who owns a dollar in a maze as to how much that dollar will be cheapened. Can anyone do a healthy, a permanent business on that basis? A man does business, whether on his own capital or on borrowed capital, by planting dollars today in an enterprise and selling his product for other dollars maybe 3 months hence, maybe 6 months hence. How much healthy, permanent business will be done if a man must plant his own or borrowed dollars today in the full knowledge that under the legislation pending in Congress Mr. Roosevelt, by a scratch of his pen, can cut in half the value of the dollars that man will collect 3 months hence or 6 months hence?

It is no answer to say that the value of the dollar, measured in purchasing power, varies under the normal system. It is true that since 1929 the man with available dollars has had an advantage because their purchasing power was steadily, and at times rapidly, increasing—just as it is true that there was a 30-year period when the man with available dollars, who put them in long-time bonds or the like, was at a disadvantage because the purchasing power of the dollar was, on the whole, declining. But to call upon a business man to adjust himself to general tendencies of trade and to call upon him to adjust himself to Mr. Roosevelt's arbitrary decision on, say, July 29 as to what the value of the dollar shall be—that is as different as accommodating oneself to the ordinary variations of weather and accommodating oneself to hurricanes and blizzards.

Nor does the old argument for a managed currency, as against a currency based on gold, have any bearing on this issue that is being fought out in Washington. An impressive case has been made by very able men for a managed currency. It might work better than a currency based on gold, if we could be sure that the managers were very, very, very wise and very, very, very honest, and would always be flawlessly wise and flawlessly honest. But the ideal sought in a managed currency is the very antithesis of what is provided in the pending inflation legislation. The ideal of a managed currency is a monetary unit that will have a stable value in relation to commodities. There would be a system of control over money, operated in accordance with clearly defined policies and rules. The legislation pending in Washington aims to give the President power to establish any relation he desires between the dollar and commodities.

His judgment determines—the judgment of a single human being. And it could be not only his judgment; it could be his whim or his caprice. He could decide how much the dollar should be cheapened just as easily and just as conclusively on a day when he was nervous and had a sick headache as he could on a day when the action of his liver was perfect and all his faculties were in exact equipoise. He could decide just as easily and just as conclusively on a day when his desk was surrounded by a mob of clamorous demagogues as he could on a day when he sat in his library to receive the advice of the wisest statesmen and practical business men. In either case he could decide to force $3,000,000,000 into the credit system through the Federal Reserve; or he could issue six billion of notes direct, cut the content of the gold dollar in half, and (if the latest proposal is adopted) coin silver as he pleased.

And for what purpose is this incredible power to be placed in the hands of the President; for what purpose is this giant wave of doubt about the value of money to be sent lapping against the foundations of commerce and eating into them? Why, to pursue a theory so damaged by the events of the last 3 years that the wayfaring man, though a fool, should cry, Beware! The rabid inflationists in Washington are playing with the quantity theory of money. Roughly, that theory is that money is a commodity, and the more you have of it, in relation to other commodities, the cheaper it becomes in relation to other commodities; and, hence, the higher become the prices of other commodities. And vice versa. It is a theory that, we believe, is held by many economists. And it is a theory that, under certain conditions, has been found to have some validity. But, plainly, glaringly, it is not infallible.

For 2 years Mr. Hoover made credit more and more plentiful. Open-market operations were carried on by the Federal Reserve Board to place abundant credit—the money of commerce—in the banks. The Federal deficits in his term, running upward to $5,000,000,000, were met by issuance of the Government's securities, and these securities were made by emergency legislation the basis for the issue of a like amount of currency. We had the hughest mass of gold in the world and most of the time were adding to it, and this mass was the basis of an enormous structure of credit and currency. As a result of it all, the Federal Reserve banks and the large commercial banks were bulging with money and credit. According to the quantity theory, the price of the dollar should have sunk and sunk, and the price of other commodities should have gone up and up. The actual experience was the reverse.

Throughout the latter part of Mr. Hoover's term, throughout the period of his provision of more credit and yet more credit, prices of commodities went down and down. What happened was that the theory ran into a few imponderables. It was not enough that money and reserves for credit should be plentiful in relation to other commodities. There had to be the will to use it in exchange for other commodities. And the will was lacking. Men who were in control of money, the bankers, lacked the will to use it in loans to others. They were terrified in a trade-strangled world. And very many of the more conservative business men were afraid to borrow money from the bankers to use in commerce, for they too were paralyzed in a trade-strangled world. The result was that the great mass of credit provided by Mr. Hoover was static and sterile. It rotted on its side of the fence, while other commodities rotted on theirs.

Fear caused that, but the lesson of fear seems unlearned in Washington. The quantity theory of money, which might have operated normally in a business society in which men were thinking and feeling normally was knocked into smithereens when it reached a business society that was crouching and cowering in terror. Yet, in Washington gentlemen in the White House and gentlemen on the Hill think that if they but pour and dump and press and force more and ever more credit and currency into the commercial organism of the Nation, the Hoover dream of a chicken in every pot and a pot on every table will be realized. Not a thought do they give to the all-important factor of fear which set at naught all Mr. Hoover's manipulations of credit reserves, although their own manipulations, actual and potential, present and future, are a hundredfold greater, and are in themselves a cause of dread.

And if a doubt should obtrude, the statesmen turn to the gamblers in the money and security and commodity markets and glory in the passing results of the gamblers' ups and downs. It does not occur to them that the prosperity of this Nation is not determined by men in Paris who speculate in the dollar or men in New York who speculate in common stocks or men in Chicago who speculate in commodities. They find it hard to realize that prosperity turns upon the sum of the trading, for use, that is done by average men who operate factories and stores and farms. In Washington, with tickers bringing exciting news from the speculative pits in New York and Chicago, since drastic inflation came to the fore, the statesmen find it hard to ask whether the small-town banker is lending the small-town manufacturer money to start up or is again cowering holding on to his money.

It is a monstrously reckless performance that is going on in Washington. There is no need and no excuse for any such colossal gamble, as a substitute for the policy of building from the bottom which Mr. Roosevelt started upon 7 weeks ago. If more credit and currency are required in trade, they can be had without setting up any such ungoverned and arbitrary presidential control of money as is provided in the Thomas amendment—a system that will leave every man with a million dollars and every man with a single dollar wondering what he is really worth. There is abundance of potential credit at present. There will be billions more as a result of Mr. Roosevelt's intended issuance of Government bonds for relief and public works, all of which may be the basis for additional currency. No Thomas amendment is necessary to give us what is called "controlled inflation."

And let not Mr. Roosevelt and his present advisers forget this one fateful fact: There are two kinds of price rises. One kind comes after building from the bottom. It is the healthy rise in prices that results when men take courage and attempt business and begin to demand goods for themselves and their families. The other kind of rise in prices, the feverish kind, comes when men so lose faith in the money in their pockets and in their banks that they exchange it for any consumable commodity. If that sort of rise in prices should rule in this country, Mr. Roosevelt will regret the day on which he entered the White House. And it is in his power to go on guard. He can reconsider the Thomas amendment, to which he has given approval. Failing that, he can give a statement to the country on his policy so clear, so explicit, that no room for fear will be left.

One or the other he had better do, and do quickly.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed a bill (H.R. 5081) to provide for the common defense; to aid interstate commerce by navigation; to provide flood control; to promote the general welfare by creating the Tennessee Valley Authority; to operate the Muscle Shoals properties; and to encourage agricultural, industrial, and economic development, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

RELIEF OF AGRICULTURE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 3835) to relieve the existing national economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I recognize in this amendment the purpose, in which we all unite, to fight the forces which have been visiting our country with unhappiness, distress, and despair. I share the intense desire we all have to do what we can to restore the welfare, well-being, and happiness of all our people. I am anxious to support the administration in every measure it favors for our country's good, and I add that I am sure that the administration intends no other sort of measure.

Accordingly, it is with the deepest regret that I am obliged to oppose this amendment as it stands; believing, as I sincerely do, that it contains features which I feel defy experience and threaten to do our country irreparable harm.

I endorse in most respects the statements about this amendment which have already been made by Republicans in the Senate and House, so I shall not attempt to go over the ground that they have covered. In further preface to the remarks I shall make here, I wish to emphasize my desire to find a basis for supporting the fundamental purpose of this amendment, which is to overcome depression and deflation and to start in more active motion our industrial and business machinery, to the end that there shall be no more unemployment. Having said as much, I now address myself to the action taken by the administration which resulted in the proposal of this amendment and to the amendment itself.

I feel that our President acted with courage to protect our economic organization by taking the dollar off the basis of gold payments in the international money market. His action needs no defense from me nor from any other of us. With domestic gold payments suspended, it is logical that gold payments should be suspended externally in the conditions to which the world's financial markets have been reduced by the prior departure of most nations from the gold standard in respect to gold payments. The President's action was indicated by the stern necessities of the world's situation and is intended, I believe, to bring about a definite preparation of the way for the world's return to stabilized currency on the gold standard. In this regard the President's action appeals to me as a convincing demonstration of the declaration in his inaugural address that it was America's purpose to be a good neighbor to all nations. It puts us in a position of opportunity to furnish constructive and cooperative leadership in the impending endeavor to restore equilibrium to an unbalanced world.

I do not believe that this amendment, which is the immediate sequel of the President's most commendable action, agrees with the purpose he has avowed. I cannot and do not believe that it is a measure of which he can avail himself, if it is enacted, to put the unemployed back on the job and keep them there. It may help to get them back on the job temporarily; but of one thing I am sure—they will not stay long employed.

"I want to fight deflation; but I do not want to fight it with explosives such as this amendment contains, and which I sincerely believe will, in the long run, have just the opposite effect to that intended and will, in fact, devastate our land.

Congress has no mandate from the American people to destroy our system of government or our institutions. We have no right to assume a mandate to be passed on to the administration to ruin that system of private ownership, subject to public regulation and control, upon which our Republic rests—the system which encourages private initiative, fosters competition in service, furnishes protection to individuals in the enjoyment of our essential liberties, and provides rewards for individual effort, energy, and thrift. Yet this amendment proposes to give to the President power to destroy our fundamental economic and political organization.

While I have implicit faith in the President, the only assurance the people of this Nation have that the sweeping and devastating provisions of the amendment will not be put into force is that he will not choose to exercise some of the powers it will give him. Much as I trust the President, I distrust the amendment. I believe that if the American people were thoroughly conversant with the provisions of this legislation, and were thoroughly informed in the sad history of other nations which have followed the road down which it is now proposed that we turn, there would be a storm of protest against the enactment by the Congress of this measure.

Mr. John Maynard Keynes, who a dozen years ago made such a remarkable forecast of the economic consequences of the peace treaty in which the Great War technically came to an end, wrote an article in 1919 in the introduction to which he made some observations based on a statement attributed to the "embalmed god" which Soviet Russia has set up for itself. I quote:

Lenin is said to have declared that the best way to destroy the capitalist system was to debauch the currency. By a continuing process of inflation governments can confiscate, secretly and unobserved, an important part of the wealth of their citizens. . . . As the inflation proceeds and the real value of the currency fluctuates wildly from month to month, all permanent relations between debtors and creditors which form the ultimate foundation of capitalism become so utterly disordered as to be almost meaningless. . . .

Lenin was certainly right. There is no more subtle, no surer means of overturning the existing basis of society than to debauch the currency. The process engages all the hidden forces of economic law on the side of destruction, and does it in a manner which not one man in a million is able to diagnose.

The amendment before us offers to the President the means to overturn the existing basis of our economic life by debauching the currency. It is unthinkable that Congress would itself exercise any such power. If then that is true, why should it vote to give such power to the administration, even on an assumption that such power would not be exercised?

As I have already indicated, I am in accord with the avowed purpose of this amendment, which is to protect our commerce and our money, and with the background of purpose in which the measure was generated, namely, to put our unemployed people back at work by providing a stimulus to industry and trade. For this reason I approve of that part of the first section of the amendment which provides for the employment of Government credit through borrowing from the Federal Reserve banks—a provision which is in line with the program of the administration as it was defined before the emergency action taken a few days ago.

This measure has been popularly called "A bill for controlled inflation." If inflation is ever controllable, that kind of inflation and so much of it as is contemplated by the first part of the first section of the amendment relating to dealings between the Treasury and the Federal Reserve banks can probably be controlled. The reserve requirements imposed on the Federal Reserve banks and the very law of their being, together with the practical controls which the whole investment market will exert against an inordinate expansion of Government borrowing, must tend to make for a controlled inflation, under the first part of the first section of the amendment.

The rest of the amendment as it stands is a measure providing for an uncontrolled inflation if any resort should be made to the other features; an uncontrolled inflation, because these other provisions of the bill contemplate tampering with our money and with our paper currency, which has been heretofore and is still soundly based upon the gold standard. The other provisions of the amendment open the door wide to precisely that debauching of the currency which the arch apostle of communism is said to have declared to be the best way to destroy our American institutions.

The greenback section of this amendment proposes to place in the President's hands the authority to confess the bankruptcy of our Federal Government, if past history can be taken as a criterion. Heretofore governments have resorted to the issuance of fiat money only when they were in the last ditch of a desperate struggle to postpone such a condition. I do not believe that our Nation, which has maintained the standard of its currency through this whole economic and world-wide maelstrom, should now be turning to the printing press to find relief.

It is no justification for the greenback section of the amendment to point to the three hundred and odd million dollars of greenbacks now outstanding. Against the outstanding remainders of these greenbacks there is almost a 50-percent gold reserve. I do not see anywhere in the amendment any definite or even indefinite signs that the power to issue greenbacks which the amendment proposes to give to the President, up to a total of $3,000,000,000, is to be qualified by any requirements to build up and maintain against the additional greenbacks which are to be issued any such proportionate gold backing as supports the greenbacks now outstanding. Perhaps this is what is meant by the reference to the act of Congress "approved February 25, 1862, and acts supplementary thereto and amendatory thereto." If so, I want the amendment to say so; and if the amendment says that as greenbacks are issued under the authority of this section there shall be simultaneously established and held against them as long as they are outstanding a gold reserve of 50 percent of the greenbacks issued, I shall be ready to change my attitude toward the greenback section of the amendment. In other words, I do not see how anyone could regard Treasury notes, which are to be retired at the rate of 4 percent per annum of the outstanding amount, and are backed by a 50-percent gold reserve, as a departure from the sound currency which the Democratic Party promised in its platform last summer to preserve at all hazards. I think that it would be in keeping with the explicit promise of a sound currency which the President made in his inaugural. If, however, the amendment is to provide for an issue of plain fiat money, I am against it.

In keeping with the currency-debauching provision of the greenback section of the amendment is the provision that the President may reduce up to 50 percent the gold content of our dollar. It makes no difference whether this power is exercised in gradual and piecemeal reductions or whether the total destruction of confidence in the integrity of the dollar is accomplished at one blow. The very proposal of such a measure is enough in itself to impair confidence in the dollar and begin the process of a total destruction of all confidence. The obligations of the Government are payable in gold coin of the present standard of weight and fineness. Yet it is proposed in this measure that the Congress of the United States shall vest in the President the authority to wreck the foundations of governmental honesty. The very proposal is itself a breach of faith, as I see it.

Aside from the aspect of the proposal as an authorization to betray trust and confidence, the provision for devaluing the dollar in terms of its gold content is unsound economically. Reducing the number of grains of gold in the dollar might make a contribution to the inflation of prices for which there is so much clamor, although this is questionable. Without regard to any other considerations, such a change in the gold basis of the dollar will only invite further change downward, if and when the country falls into any other period of depression, however slight or temporary, after it has climbed out of the present depression. What shall we have then, a 25-cent dollar, a dime dollar, or a nickel dollar?

Incidentally, the country has just won a successful battle against the hoarders of gold, and the administration is to be commended for this victory. Could Congress possibly furnish a stronger incentive to risk all the penalties of hoarding; could Congress offer a proposal better calculated to drive gold into hiding than by this deliberately proposed measure of ill faith, which, by its very terms, will offer an extraordinary premium and temptation to mine-owning producers of gold and to the holders of gold everywhere?

As for the silver provisions of the amendment, they seem to me to be relatively harmless in that they do not open the gates to any actual submersion of our currency in a flood of silver. Certainly in comparison with the greenback and dollar-debasing provisions of the amendment, the silver provisions are unimportant. Nevertheless, I am opposed in principle to the silver provision. I regard it as in a minor way supplementing the other harmful features of the amendment. The silver section of the amendment, therefore, is like the greenback and the dollar-debasing sections, a measure to debauch our currency and result in everything this will bring about.

Furthermore, separately and together, the greenback, dollar-debasing, and silver sections of the amendment attack the first part of the first section of the bill. They assail the very credit of the Federal Government. They tend to make it impossible for the Treasury to function under the provision for borrowing from the Federal Reserve banks. They offer a menace of shrinking quotations for Government credit as it is measured in the market for the outstanding obligations of the Government. They foreshadow disaster.

I do not propose to rehearse the story of inflation. History is full of chapters of the tragic misery which it has inflicted on the people of various nations. America has thus far in the present emergency refused to put its feet on the slippery road of monetary inflation, which has always led to economic chaos and disruption. I do not really believe that our President will ever exercise any of these dangerous powers to perpetrate the type of inflation which the amendment intends to give him, but I do not propose to place him in such an unfair and dangerous position. I am unwilling to shirk my own personal responsibility in this respect.

The President is engaged in negotiations which have as their primary object the stabilization of all currencies. This is the first step which must be taken to restore world trade and improve world prices which will benefit our own domestic prices. With the problem of stabilizing currencies in the foreground of the discussions which the administration is conducting, Congress suddenly offers this amendment for unstabilization of the currency of the United States. Moreover, the President has not asked Congress for these particular powers. Anyway, no official message has come to the Senate from him that I know of endorsing monetary inflation.

The idea behind this amendment is that, through its facilities, the President will be able to make money cheaper and everything else dearer. I will agree that a fundamental cause of the world's trouble is that an excessive value has been attached to gold and that gold which is the world's money has been too dear. Gold will continue to be the world's money, however, and we cannot make money cheaper by debasing currencies. The only result will be to make gold, the final basis for all money, dearer still in the long run, and prolong and intensify the world's distress.

If this amendment, as I said at the outset, is materially amended, I shall gladly vote for it, for I want to equip our President with all needed power and ability to fight deflation and to strengthen his hands in his declared purpose to work for the restoration of stable currency all over the world and for the removal of other obstacles to the revival and expansion of world trade. I want to help him prove that America is a good neighbor. I am sure that by his action in suspending international gold payments he opened the way to accomplish more than has yet been possible to end the Great War, which did not end with the Treaty of Versailles in 1919. That treaty ushered in an economic warfare which has been waged with an increasing deadliness to the present day. It is the purpose, I am confident, of our President—your President and my President—and of the distinguished representatives of other nations, who are gathering at Washington at his invitation, to bring that economic war to an end. This measure, however, will, I believe, inevitably offer a shock to confidence generally, if it is enacted, and consequences still worse will follow if resort to some of its powers should be forced upon the administration by the political pressure of public clamor.

To conclude, the amendment as it stands I honestly believe will not be of help to the President in his efforts to put our people back on the job or in his efforts to help restore equilibrium to an unbalanced world; and it offers, as I see it, definite possibilities for provoking added misery and distress at home and abroad, a continuation of economic warfare throughout the world, and a postponement of the return to prosperity we all are striving to bring about.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I am opposed to the Thomas amendment in its entirety. I shall vote for the motion to strike out the paragraph relating to a devaluation of the gold dollar. I regard that paragraph as the most vicious in an exceedingly vicious amendment. I wish in plain, unvarnished language to present a few facts that I conceive to be pertinent.

Mr. President, early in March Congress passed an emergency act to relieve the banking situation, delegating to the President authority to control "exporting, hoarding, melting, or earmarking of gold or silver coin or bullion or currency by any person within the United States." Pursuant to this authority, on April 5, 1933, the President issued a proclamation requiring every person in the United States to turn over to the Treasury all gold bullion and gold currency over the value of $100 under the penalty of a fine of not more than $10,000 or not more than 10 years' imprisonment. The effect of the Presidential proclamation is to force every citizen to turn over to the Treasury property which he had a right to earn and which he had a right to own. It is thus endeavored to stamp as a criminal the citizen who undertakes to exercise proprietorship over his own property.

Now it is proposed to delegate to the President authority to reduce by 50 percent the gold content of the American dollar. In other words, after the citizen has been compelled, under pain of heavy penalties, to deliver his property to the Government, Congress is now asked to delegate to the President the authority to cut the value of that property in two. Such a course of conduct is not only reprehensible but dishonest. It would be dishonest in an individual; it would be dishonest in a corporation; and it would be doubly dishonest in the Government itself. No court in the land would permit an individual or a corporation to pursue any such course unless it could be shown that such individual or corporation was a bankrupt; and I am unwilling to admit that the Government of the United States is now in a state of bankruptcy. In morals such an act would amount to a theft of one half of all the money now owned in the United States, if the full powers delegated were exercised by the President. It would repudiate every Government obligation by 50 percent. It would mean that the Government was at least partially bankrupt and was repudiating half its just obligations. Such a transaction would represent nothing less than a 50-percent financial bankruptcy and 100-percent moral bankruptcy.

If we commit this deed, let us quit prating about national honor. Let us cease our boast that our dollar is as sound as the Government itself, and is as untarnished as its honor. The citizen in every walk of life has always held an affectionate and reverent respect for the honesty and integrity of the Government of the United States in all its relations with its citizens. His commitments have been made upon the premise that the Government was the personification of honor. This has been accepted as a truism. It has been true throughout all the 144 years of our national existence. By traveling the pathway of national honor, the obligation of the Government of the United States has been accepted at its face value and often above its face value, and at lower rates of interest than the obligations of any institution or government in the world. No one until now ever questioned the integrity of any obligation of the Government of the United States. In this time of world-wide stress our country is the only great nation in all of the world with its credit unimpaired. Let us maintain this high standard. Let us battle to uphold the national credit and our national honor. Let us hand down to posterity a government of as sound integrity as we were fortunate enough to inherit from our fathers.

Every nation that has traveled the crooked highway of repudiation has met with disaster. Every nation that has embarked upon an unbridled course of inflation of its currency and debasement of its coin, has come to grief. Have we learned nothing from the lessons of history?

From a selfish standpoint, we cannot afford to commit this act. There is due the United States from foreign countries approximately $11,000,000,000. If the amendment of the senior Senator from Oklahoma should be enacted into law and its provisions put into effect by Presidential proclamation, it would mean that our Government could be paid with 50-cent dollars, based upon present valuation, thereby canceling one half of the foreign debt due us. This would be in direct violation of the pledge in the Democratic platform against the cancellation of the foreign debt. Foreigners owe American investors approximately $18,000,000,000, one half of which would be canceled if the full powers were exercised under this amendment.

There are 52,000,000 savings depositors in the United States, coming mainly from the great middle class of this country. Their savings approximate $29,000,000,000, equal to more than $1,000 for every family in the land. This would be cut in half, based upon present valuations. We have almost 122,000,000 life-insurance policies in this country, with a value at maturity of approximately $109,000,000,000. It may be urged that these policies, for the most part, are held by those in comparatively easy circumstances, but there are 88,000,000 industrial policies belonging to the poorer classes, representing a value at maturity of $18,274,000,000. These policies would suffer a 50-percent cancellation, based upon present standard of values, if the Thomas amendment should become law and the full powers under it should be exercised by the President.

The allowances of the veterans of all of our wars and their dependents at the end of the fiscal year will be slashed approximately $400,000,000, leaving many of them in dire and desperate straits. Under the provisions of the Thomas amendment, fully exercised, they would be bludgeoned out of 50 percent of what remains. There are 48,000,000 persons gainfully employed in the United States today. The immediate effect of this legislation, if enacted, would be to reduce the value of their wages one half.

This depression has happily been free from labor disturbances. Labor is alive to the dangers of this proposed legislation. Since it has been suggested, we have heard the just claim of William Green, the president of the American Federation of Labor, that wages must be readjusted if this measure should become a law.

When we contemplate the struggle that many industries are now having to continue to operate, and take into consideration that there are thirteen or fourteen millions of men out of employment, we can readily visualize some of the perilous avenues that would be opened in our industrial life in the days just ahead of us if this legislation should be enacted into law. It opens the door to the age-old struggle between labor and capital, and opens it all the way down the line. It may mean strikes, lockouts, riots, and further suffering and want.

The enactment of the Thomas amendment into law will not relieve the present distressed conditions, but will only accentuate and aggravate them, and delay recovery. It will paralyze commerce, industry, and business. He would be an audacious man, to the point of foolhardiness, who would make a commitment in the face of the uncertainty of conditions that would necessarily follow, if the Thomas amendment should be enacted into law. It would mean a further tightening of credit, a slowing down of business, commerce, industry, and enterprise of every character.

Let no one be deceived, by the activity of the stock exchange, into believing that the suggestion of repudiation and the debasement of the coin and currency of the country is bringing a return of prosperity. It represents fear; fear of the American dollar, and the desire to dispose of it before it further depreciates; fear that the Government of the United States is on the eve of abandonment of its age-old policy of paying its just obligations and maintaining a sound currency "at all hazards." It is similar to the first movements following the inflationary policy in Germany a few years ago, the disastrous results of which we are all familiar. While it is contended that the proposed inflation will be a controlled one, the same claim has been made for all inflationary movements in their inception. Invariably, however, the inflation has gone beyond control, with disastrous results.

What is the need for this character of legislation fraught with such tremendous danger and which has worked disastrous havoc wherever and whenever tried? If the legitimate demands of the business of the country require more currency, we can now, without additional legislation, expand the currency approximately $4,000,000,000, and every dollar would rest upon a sound foundation. From statements frequently made the uninformed would gain the impression that there is insufficient money in this country with which to transact our business. Just the opposite is true, for there is more money outstanding in the United States now than at any period in our history.

There is more money now outstanding in this country than during the World War period, when, due to war demands, business was at a feverish activity and prices and wages were breaking all records. There is more money in circulation in this country now than during the boom year of 1929. To be exact, on March 31 of this year, there was $6,319,364,484 in money outstanding in the United States. This is $1,429,241,000, or almost 30 percent, more money than was outstanding at the end of the boom year of 1929. There being more money outstanding now than it required to carry on our business during the Great War and during the boom year of 1929, does it not seem illogical to contend that there is not sufficient money now outstanding to meet our needs? There is ample money in the United States to take care of our every legitimate need, with existing machinery to increase the supply on our present sound basis should the occasion demand. What then is the difficulty?

The trouble is that, due to loss of confidence, much of the outstanding money has gone into hiding and has ceased to work. Idle money, like an idle individual, does not contribute to the welfare or prosperity of any community. What is needed today is the restoration of that confidence which will induce the return of the money now outstanding again to enter the channels of industry, and when that state of confidence shall have been reached, we will be on the road to the recovery of national prosperity. The Thomas amendment, if adopted and put into effect, will not tend toward the recovery of financial confidence, but, on the contrary, will destroy what remains of that confidence. Under its provisions, a state of uncertainty previously unknown in this country would prevail. Under such conditions the investor would withhold his money from industrial activity; the banker would curtail his loans to the minimum; and the manufacturer would produce only sufficient to meet current needs.

Let us cease the continued round of untried, speculative and experimental legislation. Let us cease trifling with the national credit and the national honor. Let the word go forth that future legislation will be based on sound fundamentals, and that all who contribute to industry, whether it be in the field of finance or labor, will be protected in the legitimate fruits thereof. Let it be proclaimed that not only will the American Government respect its own contracts, but that, so far as it lies within its power, it will compel all its citizens to do likewise. Convince the American people that such will be the national policy, and money now already outstanding will again seek investment, industry will revive, labor will be well employed, and the farmer will find a profitable market for his products.

The viciousness of this proposed legislation was disclosed in the Senate on yesterday by the author of the amendment, the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], when he frankly stated that the purpose was to transfer $200,000,000,000 of wealth from the pockets of those who possess it today to the pockets of others, merely by legislative fiat. Those who have saved, those who have accumulated, and those who have been successful, are to be penalized for the benefit of those who have not saved, have not accumulated, and have not been successful. The proposal is an infamous one, and will not meet the approval of the American people, for they are fundamentally honest.

The press announce that the administration is urging speedy action on this proposal as submitted by the Senator from Oklahoma, and speedy action will be necessary if this amendment is to be adopted. Once let the American people understand the real purpose and effect of this proposal, and there will be such an aroused wrath and flood of indignant protests that not even the present administration, with its overwhelming majority in both Houses, will dare pass the amendment.

Mr. HARRISON obtained the floor.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TYDINGS in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I have withheld myself from this discussion because of my desire to see a conclusion reached at the earliest possible moment in the enactment of the farm-relief measure. I have entertained some misgivings with reference to some of its provisions, but I have resolved every doubt in behalf of agriculture and the farmers of the country, so I am willing to give to the administration an opportunity to redeem its pledges and try to help in the deplorable situation throughout the country.

For more than 2 years, Mr. President, some of us have realized that sooner or later values must be made to increase, and commodity prices especially must be made to increase, if economic healthfulness is to be restored to the American people.

I am naturally a conservative. I prefer to follow precedents, and in this country no one suspects me of being a radical. I had hoped that the new administration just coming into power would be given an opportunity to evolve its plan of controlled inflation, that that plan might be agreed to after full consideration upon the part of the President and his advisers; and for that reason, in common with many Members of this body, I have opposed amendment after amendment touching silver and whatnot which tended toward inflation.

The committee of which I have the honor to be a member listened for many weeks to leaders of thought in this country—leaders in banking, agriculture, and business, and leading economists. Throughout their testimony ran the thought that commodity prices must be increased, and many of them expressed themselves in very strong language for inflation of some kind or other.

Mr. President, it is unfair for a man of high standing in the country, and of acknowledged leadership in this body, to make an attempt to deceive the American people. My good friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] is a leader. He is as smart as they make them. No better or more adroit or crafty a lawyer has come to this body than the distinguished senior Senator from Pennsylvania. Men who control the great steel interests of this country, men who control the great insurance companies of the country, men who control great banking interests, of the class of Mr. Mellon, never would have taken him under their wing and made this distinguished barrister their lawyer if he had not proved his worth in the great legal fraternity. He measured up in a high degree in his profession or he never would have represented those interests. So no one could present the case more strongly in this body from a legal standpoint, and surround it with all the misgivings and doubts that my friend does always when he discusses a question, than the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania, who now has set himself up as the leader in opposition to this proposal.

Of course, envious eyes will be cast at me because I have said that he is the leader of the opposition. That might not sit well with my friend from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] and my friend from Missouri [Mr. PATTERSON] and others over there who have either spoken in opposition to the proposal or are incubating speeches against it. But the country knows that the Senator from Pennsylvania is the leader of the opposition to this controlled inflation proposal.

I do not know whether he chose himself as the leader, or whether there was a meeting here in Washington of the group of men who had directed the fiscal policy of this Government for some years and made a miserable mess of it, and that his leadership was chosen by that group. I mention Mr. Mellon, who was given a vacation from the Secretaryship of the Treasury to go over to England for a while. Sometimes I wish he had stayed over there a few weeks longer, because he could have done less harm by staying over there a while longer than he is doing by coming back here and trying to incubate some conspiracy against this proposal. And, as a member of that group I mention Mr. Mills, who followed in Mr. Mellon's footsteps, and who ran the Treasury for a while, and made just as miserable a mess of it as Mellon did himself.

So those are the three—Mellon, Mills, and Reed—who are leading in this fight and one of whom is calling upon the country to appeal to Senators by telegram, letter, and telephone to stop the passage of this legislation.

It takes a good deal of nerve upon the part of this group who have directed the fiscal affairs of the Government for the last few years to come here now and attempt to lead in any movement and tell us what should be done. Do you not think it would be in a little better taste if they would rest in the shadows of their failure for at least a few weeks, and give the new administration an opportunity to carry out its policies, in the hope that they might be better than the policies of the Mellon-Mills-Reed trio?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; but the Senator is going to spoil a good speech. [Laughter.] I yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED. I think I am going to give the Senator another text on which he can make a better speech. He is talking about giving an opportunity to the administration to carry out and redeem its pledges. Does he mean to include the pledge to preserve a sound money at all hazards?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes. The Senator talks about the plank in the Democratic platform which favors the maintenance of sound money. There is nothing in this bill that is against sound money. The Democratic Party is for sound money.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator tell us any kind of unsound money that is not in this amendment?

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Pennsylvania has had his say. If he will just sit here and listen with the same degree of patience and the same measure of disapproval that I gave to his speech, he will know what my views are before I finish.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if the Senator will indulge me for one moment more—

Mr. HARRISON. I was going to answer the Senator's question. Then the Senator can rise and ask another one.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator, at some time in the course of this eloquence of his, describe this bill? He is telling us about my bad points. I wish he would tell us some good points in the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. I am going to do that.

Mr. REED. I am not the question that is up for passage. It is the bill that the Senator is trying to pass.

Mr. HARRISON. But I have not any idea in the world that the Senator is going to take my advice, because he has taken it from Mellon and Mills. [Laughter.]

The Senator talks about sound money and the platform of the Democratic Party. I expect to show that there is nothing in this bill against sound money and against the platform of the Democratic Party. The Senator started out the other day, in the first speech he made, by referring to what he terms the "greenback provision." He is making speeches daily now in order to arouse the people of the country, so that he can help the telegraph companies to send more messages to Senators protesting against this proposal. I wonder if he has had as little influence upon everyone else as he had upon me? I have received but one message against this proposal—just one. Seemingly, the Senator's appeal fell upon deaf ears. He was mighty nearly as unsuccessful in that as were his appeals in the last election in getting votes. But he started out against what he called "the greenback provision" of the bill, the Treasury-note provision. He said nothing about the proposition of cutting down the gold content of the dollar; but now he levels his guns against the reduction of the gold content of the dollar and appeals for sound money.

The former President, in his speech at Des Moines, spoke very eloquently about how he had fought in the great battle against going off the gold standard. The Senator made a speech here in which he approved the action of this administration in going off the gold standard. He offered no criticism in the world against going off the gold standard. Yet his party's platform said that we could never go off the gold standard. He has violated the pledge of his party to a greater extent than he accuses us of violating the pledge of our party with reference to sound money. There is no justification for criticism of either.

Here is what the Senator said in that speech:

I offer no criticism of the embargo on gold shipments. It seems to me that it was wise, prudent, and proper action to take at the time.

I offer no criticism of the suspension of specie payments within the United States, as was done on the 4th of March; but my criticism does go, with all of the earnestness that is in me, to the proposals that were sent to us yesterday afternoon and were embodied in the Thomas amendment.

He approves going off the gold standard, and he approves the suspension of gold payments on the part of this administration. Yet his platform said that under no circumstances should we go off the gold standard. Is there anybody now who believes that we are on the gold standard? Not even the Senator believes it, because he knows we are off the gold standard.

Mr. President, the leadership of one party is just as much for sound money as the leadership of the other party. The Senator knows that the man who sits at the helm of this Government today would do nothing that would destroy the property of the people and take from one man unjustly what should not be taken from him. The Senator has confidence in the President. In the speech that he made this morning he paid one of the greatest tributes to the President of the United States that I have heard fall from the lips of man. After the Senator from Pennsylvania had talked for an hour and a half criticizing the proposals of this bill and speaking of John Law's episode and the experience of Austria and of various other countries with their unmanaged, uncontrolled inflation, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] said, "Will not the Senator now give to us his proposal?" The Senator from Pennsylvania responded: "That is perfectly fair. That is a correct question to put." And then he answered it in this way, as the Record will show: That prices went away up after Roosevelt was inaugurated President of the United States, and for the reason that the people of the country have confidence in him. There had come a change in the leadership of this Government. One man had been driven out, and the inference was clear.

No one could read the remarks of the Senator without believing that the American people had no confidence in Mr. Hoover and Mr. Mills and in any of the crowd that had dominated this Government, but that because of the confidence of the American people in Mr. Roosevelt everything had gone up and all was "hunky dory". So all the Senator from Pennsylvania would do in these circumstances would be to elect Mr. Roosevelt, and keep him in control of the Government, and do nothing else, and there would be restored economic confidence in the country.

We know that we have to go farther than that, and we have accordingly offered this plan.

Mr. President, I stated that it takes a good deal of nerve upon the part of these distinguished gentlemen, after they had experimented, after they had tried for these more than 3 years, and after the American people have put another group in control of the Government, for them now to offer obstructive tactics and criticism of the pending measure. At least, if they cannot cooperate, they ought to stand aside for a little while and give us a chance.

They tried their little sugar-coated measures in trying to inflate slightly. It is inconceivable to me that men who have been honored in such high places as has Mr. Hoover, Mr. Mellon, and Mr. Reed would deliberately deflate values in this country, deliberately drive people into bankruptcy, deliberately deprive people of their all, deliberately cause such a shrinkage of values and securities as to close the banks of this country, and deliberately drive 13,000,000 people into unemployment. I cannot believe they did it deliberately. But their policies had that effect, and in one of the speeches of Mr. Hoover, he talked about how he battled against the deflation, and how he attempted to increase prices of farm products, and to restore confidence to the American people.

It was with the idea of trying to inflate that finally, after 2 years of procrastination, they offered us the Reconstruction Finance Corporation bill. That was going to be a measure of inflation, which would help in a way, they said. It was with that idea in view that their President offered his proposal to increase the capitalization of Federal land banks. It was with that idea in view that he suggested and the Congress gave to him the power of broadening the eligible paper in the Federal Reserve System of the country. They tried to inflate in a way, but they did not have the courage to act as they should have acted.

Mr. President, we have two possible roads to follow. One is the road which leads to a contest with the nations of the world in depreciated currencies. The other is the road which might lead to a stabilization of currencies among the nations of the world.

This gentleman in the White House surprised me. There is not a Senator here whom he has not surprised. He surprised the country, for he has shown such bigness and courage and such vision of statesmanship that, even though one might have had a high estimate of him, it was not known that he possessed such capabilities. No man in the history of this great Government has acted more promptly or more courageously or in a higher order of statesmanship than has the gentleman now in the White House.

Mr. President, I look into the face of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. PATTERSON], who says there is plenty of money in the country. Let him make that speech to Missourians. I wonder how many out there believe that everything is all "hunky dory" in Missouri. [Laughter.]

I look into the face of my friend the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT], who signed the round robin with the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania, and they together even brought "BERT" SNELL, the leader in the other House, into that appeal. Is it possible that they could not get other Senators over there to sign the round robin? Was my friend from Connecticut the only one who was falling for their wiles? [Laughter.]

These four—the leader of the Republicans in the House, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT], and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], together with Mr. LUCE—got out this round robin to the country criticizing the proposal now before us, and holding it up to public scorn. I do not know why the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] did not sign it. He is now getting ready to make a speech. It may be that he had not made up his mind at that particular time.

Mr. President, why did they not get Mr. Mellon? He had returned. They had conferred with him. Ah, but the Senator from Pennsylvania started to shake his head, but he knew he could not do it. He conferred with him a little bit.

Mr. REED. If it is of any interest to the Senator, I have not conferred with him. I have not seen him.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator has not conferred with him? The Senator does not say no message came to him from Mr. Mellon. They have a triangular arrangement. Mr. Mellon conferred with Mr. Mills, and Mr. Mills then conferred with the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. REED. If it is of further interest to the Senator, Mr. Mills was not in the East at all until Friday morning.

Mr. HARRISON. He came here just as rapidly as he could come. Even from the far West he came. I do not know whether he used an airplane or whatnot, but when the Senator sounded the tocsin call, he came forthwith, and he has been in conference with him ever since. That is the group we are running up against, and this man in the White House, elected by a tremendous vote of the people, because they had confidence in him, and because they wanted a change in affairs of this Government, takes hold.

The Senator heretofore has given him fine cooperation and Congress has given him fine cooperation. This gentleman took up where the other gentleman who left there was afraid to move. Who ever dreamed that this administration, under the leadership of Mr. Roosevelt, could drive through the Congress an economy bill which would save $800,000,000 to the taxpayers of this country? Mr. Mellon, Mr. Mills, Mr. Hoover, and Mr. Reed messed around trying to balance the Budget for 3 years. Mr. Mills made so many mistakes when he came before the committees with his estimates that it was really a comedy of errors. He changed from week to week, and after we had balanced the Budget he then said it was not balanced, even though we had just balanced it upon his own figures.

The Budget is now practically balanced. Just as soon as we enact the tax bill which passed the House the other day and as soon as the reorganization plans go through we will have balanced the Budget. Many of the leading thinkers of the country when they appeared before the Committee on Finance said that what we had to do is to balance the Budget. If they are right in their view of that, we will soon have attained that end. Others said we had to have some measure of controlled inflation, and others wanted an uncontrolled, unmanaged inflation.

The Senator from Pennsylvania spoke of Austria. He spoke of John Law's episode and the other wild and fantastic inflationary schemes which wrecked certain countries. I would not lift my voice if in my opinion the pending proposal were not a proposal for controlled inflation. I would not vote to give to the Treasury or the President, without limitation or restriction, the power to issue Treasury notes. I do not believe Congress would do anything like that. Yet that was what was done in the case of Austria. That is what was done in the case of Germany. That is what was done in the case of France and in the other countries which went wild over their inflationary schemes and wrecked their governments themselves. England did not do that. She had a managed inflation, and that is what is proposed in the pending amendment.

My friend talks about the greenbacks which are to be issued. I call them Treasury notes. Let us see about that. The Senator discussed this morning the law of 1862, and said that the pending measure was carrying out the same general scheme. In 1862 there was no such limitation placed upon the issuance of the Treasury notes as is contained in the pending proposal. There was no time limit set; there was no method prescribed for their redemption. They could go wild under that plan. In the issuance of the greenbacks in 1862 and in the days following the United States was doing exactly what was done in the case of Germany and Austria and France in their inflationary ideas—yes, and in Russia, which the Senator says got so devoid of gold that the men had to use steel for filling the cavities in their teeth.

The pending amendment first fixes a limit of $3,000,000,000 of outstanding Treasury notes, and it provides that they shall be redeemed at the rate of 4 percent every year. More than that, we appropriate the money required for their redemption. In 25 years they will all have been redeemed. There was no such provision in the cases of inflation of which the Senator has spoken and which he has held up to ridicule in order to frighten the American people again.

My God! Do Senators not want confidence restored? What have they meant by claiming they wanted to bring back confidence to the people? Was all of that lip service? Why do they want to try to arouse the people again to fear and trembling every time the man in the White House attempts to do something to restore values and to give to the people some economic peace and happiness again? Are not the American people sick and tired of such tactics? Do such practices redound to the credit of those who employ them? The people desired action. They want results. Too long have they suffered and sacrificed from timidity, procrastination, and lack of courage.

Mr. President, the Senator knows that the cases of deflation to which he has referred are not parallel at all. He employs them because they are bugaboos and because the rank and file of the American people do not want an unmanaged, uncontrolled inflation in this country.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Am I right in stating that?

Mr. REED. No; the Senator is all wrong, and I want to set him straight. If the Senator will permit me to state it, in the case of the French inflation, engineered—

Mr. HARRISON. I do not yield for all that.

Mr. REED. The Senator is wrong in all that, and I merely wanted to put him straight.

Mr. HARRISON. Was there a limit placed upon German inflation?

Mr. REED. There was.

Mr. HARRISON. What was it? Now I will give the Senator a chance.

Mr. REED. They kept constantly increasing it. I think I have the figures here. At the beginning it was very strictly controlled, in the same sense that is proposed in this pending measure. Then they increased the limit, and then it got out of hand, and they had to keep on increasing it. They all started this way, with a limitation, and they have always had to increase it.

Mr. HARRISON. Now the Senator says it started this way and it got the other way. Why is not the Senator fair enough with his colleagues and with the American people to say that this plan is not the same plan as was adopted in Germany and in France and in these other countries? Why does he want to try to deceive people by saying that they started this way, but that they changed and got the other way? The Senator admits that the German plan was changed from a controlled system to an unmanaged and wild scheme.

Mr. President, this pending measure provides for controlled inflation, and it provides only for the issuance of $3,000,000,000. It provides for their redemption, at the rate of 4 percent every year and makes proper appropriation for that redemption.

Then, again, there is something else the Senator has not taken into consideration—something which the bill provides—that is, that the Treasury notes can be used to retire the Government bonds which have been issued, and when the Treasury notes are used to pay a Government bond, the Government bond is canceled. Consequently, we would not be increasing the national debt of the country, under the pending amendment. The Senator from Pennsylvania did not tell the Senate that. He wishes to make the country believe that the $3,000,000,000 in Treasury notes are to be issued in addition to the $3,000,000,000 that might be used in open-market transactions.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VAN NUYS in the chair). Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. In addition to what the Senator from Mississippi has stated, it would also reduce the actual expenses of the Government by retiring not only the bonds but likewise saving the interest thereon.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; but the Senator from Pennsylvania is not going to tell the Senate that; that is a secret which is hidden in his and Andrew Mellon's breasts. He is not going to let the country in on that. Some of his colleagues on the other side of the aisle are going to be deceived by his wily speeches. Now, let me give them a piece of friendly advice. Do not adopt his counsel; do not follow his leadership. Many people have got into trouble before by following his leadership and that of his co-conspirators. [Laughter.] Senators on the other side will recall what happened last year to a great many of their party who followed the leadership of Andrew Mellon and Ogden Mills. They had better take an accounting and had better cooperate in this effort to consummate a new deal, because the American people know just as well as they know and just as well as I know that there are thousands on thousands of banks in the country that can never be placed on their former basis unless the securities in their coffers can rise in value. And when the price of commodities shall be increased there will be an enhancement in value of the securities held by the banks; they will be strengthened; and we will have given hope to the people. The man whose income is gone and who has been struggling for years with a heavy mortgage upon his land will be able, on the enactment of this proposed legislation, to indulge some hope that the value of the old dollar is going to be changed around a little bit and that his values will come back to a parity with the values formerly represented by the dollar. That is what 95 percent of the American people desire, and that is what we have got to have. There is nothing radical about it. There is nothing unjust in it. It is a very proper and fair policy to follow.

Have we not seen European countries adopt policies designed to protect themselves? No voice has been lifted more often or more eloquently—and if he did not associate with such bad company, no voice would have been more persuasive—than that of the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania when he has decried the policy of foreign countries with reference to debasing their currencies. I recall only a few months ago when he secured the adoption by the Senate of a resolution—though the vote adopting it was subsequently reconsidered—directing the Tariff Commission to consider a plan to counteract the effect of depreciated foreign currencies. I remember how he spoke of the Japanese sending in their goods and how the great interests of America needed higher protection against the low labor costs of foreign countries. The Senator from Pennsylvania was perfectly willing to increase the tariff still higher in order to protect a few manufacturers in this country; but he is now unwilling to give his cooperation and approval in putting through the plan which is before us with the stamp of the administration upon it and designed to restore some values to all of the American people.

The Senator from Pennsylvania helped to put through Congress the present tariff law, which is the highest in the history of the country. I will go down to my dying day believing that the enactment of that law was what started the confusion in world affairs, the battling for higher tariffs throughout the world, the deranging of exchanges, and the cause of foreign countries depreciating their currencies, thus bringing the great cataclysm from which we are now trying to escape. The Senator from Pennsylvania himself was one of the prime movers in that effort.

Mr. President, there are certain conditions that must exist before the President will be authorized to act under this proposed legislation. What are those conditions?

Whenever the President finds, upon investigation, that (1) the foreign commerce of the United States is adversely affected by reason of the depreciation in the value of the currency of any other government or governments in relation to the present standard value of gold—

Why should we not take care of ourselves? If we can stabilize exchanges, if we can adopt a policy that will open up markets abroad for the sale of our surplus goods, if we can stabilize exchanges between governments, why is the Senator from Pennsylvania not willing to adopt that kind of policy under the existing circumstances? That is what the President is authorized to do in this proposal.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi has just stated that certain conditions must be found to exist before this proposed legislation may be put into effect. I want to ask the Senator, Is it not true, beyond any doubt, that the condition to which the Senator has just referred already exists and now confronts us?

Mr. HARRISON. There is no doubt in the world but that is true. Even the opponents of this proposal have so stated in more eloquent terms that I can employ. Everybody in America knows it. Some foreign countries were smart enough to devise some kind of plan in order to help themselves. Great Britain created an equalization fund of £150,000,000 for the sole purpose, as circumstances might arise, of lifting the American dollar or driving down the English pound, and they worked it very well. I see no reason why our Government should not adopt a like plan to take care of our situation and to bring about a stabilization of our exchange.

There are other conditions provided in the amendment upon which the President must act and must make investigation accordingly. Another condition is:

Or that an economic emergency requires the expansion of credit.

Can anybody doubt that we require an expansion of credit in this country? Is there anyone on the other side, except the Senator from Missouri [Mr. PATTERSON], who believes that everybody who needs credit in this country is being taken care of, who does not think that an emergency exists requiring the expansion of credit? We know such an emergency exists.

Or an expansion of credit is necessary to secure by international agreement a stabilization at proper levels of the currencies of various governments.

Was there ever a more opportune time to clothe the President of the United States with this power, just when the statesmen of the world are here assembled making their preliminary survey and trying to arrange an agenda? Indeed, Mr. President, under the circumstances, now of all times it is opportune to give to the President this power.

We are not seeking an unfair advantage; we are not trying to put something over any other people in the world; but America has a right to protect her own interests with reference to exchanges and with reference to values. Any country that adopts a policy which results in driving down values in this country and making bankrupts of our citizens ought to be combated by American policies that can repel just such attacks as that.

The Senator from Pennsylvania says that the first section of the bill is harmless. I am glad that he gives his approval to that section, which provides for open-market transactions on the part of the Federal Reserve banks. Do you know, Mr. President, why he said that? If there was nothing else in this measure except that provision, I have not the slightest doubt that the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania would be on his feet finding a hornet's nest in it. He starts out criticizing this provision and when he gets through with that he criticizes another. I fear the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania and Andrew Mellon and Ogden Mills cannot be pleased at this time, so far as this measure is concerned, because in itself it is a reflection upon the manner in which they ran the Treasury. Ah, if they had had the courage and the statesmanship to have proposed such measures as this, they could have relieved the suffering in this country and restored some semblance of economic health sooner than now.

My friend in his speech this morning said that nothing that Mr. Hoover suggested could pass this body. Why does not the Senator look over the record? Every measure of a constructive character suggested by President Hoover in this economic crisis was adopted by the American Congress. Against my own judgment I voted for measures which were suggested on the other side of the Chamber. I cooperated with the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania, as did other Senators on this side in that Congress. Loving our country more than we did any political party, striving to restore this country to normal economic conditions, we voted for measures proposed by the Republican administration. President Hoover got legislation, but the trouble is that he delayed too long in making his suggestions. He would not have had the courage to offer such a suggestion as is now before us; but the President who now occupies the White House has the courage to do it, just as he had the courage to recommend the economy bill which will balance the Budget.

Let me call the attention of the Senator from Pennsylvania to the fact—and I know that in his fairness he will agree to the statement—that Germany and Austria and Russia and back in 1862 when the United States Government issued greenbacks and inflation was set in motion here and in Europe it was for the purpose not only of inflating but of paying deficits in governmental budgets. The portion of the decision read by the Senator from Idaho showed that such money had to be issued in order to pay soldiers who were fighting in the war; and the German Government and the French Government were just issuing paper money in order to balance their budgets. No government can do that; that is not sound; that is not stable governmental management. But we are not doing that; we are not issuing one cent in order to balance the Budget. We are balancing the Budget by taxes on the one hand, and economies on the other, so that our revenues and our disbursements shall be equal, and for that reason we will have no wild inflation as was the case in the other countries.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President—

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. In connection with the suggestion as to Germany—and I do not make this suggestion as a matter of criticism but as a matter of fact—after Germany had depreciated her currency to such an extent that it took a wagon bed to hold enough German marks to exchange for an American dollar, Germany paid all her debts in the depreciated currency and then stabilized the mark at about 25 cents in American money.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes. There is much difference between that situation and the one confronting us. This is a conservative measure which provides in its first section for open-market transactions upon the part of the Federal Reserve banks, with the assent and approval of the Federal Reserve Board. Such transactions were undertaken last year by the Treasury Department under the administration of the party of the Senator from Pennsylvania. Open-market transactions were begun last year in the early spring and those transactions continued to the extent of $1,200,000,000, and were stopped in July. The then President then made his speech in Des Moines saying we were about to go off the gold standard; and then what happened? Prices began to go down. When the open-market transactions were begun commodity prices and business improved, according to statistics, between 8 and 10 percent in this country; unemployment greatly fell off, to the extent of several hundred thousand, as shown by the report of the Department of Labor; but just as soon as open-market operations were discontinued in the latter part of July conditions became a little worse again. Prices of agricultural commodities again went down; business sagged; unemployment increased.

So the second feature of the bill, providing for the purchase of United States bonds to the amount of $3,000,000,000 and for the issuance of notes, is safe. It is sound. Provision is made for their redemption, their orderly retirement; there is no tremendously wild inflation in it, but it will put money into the hands of the people. As a matter of fact, as the Senator from Pennsylvania knows as well as I do, when the Government sells its bonds to the public and collects money, it contracts the credit. That is deflation. But when the Government issues its money and itself buys its bonds, as is provided by this bill, it gets the money into circulation; that is inflation.

We lay down the conditions upon which the President may act with reference to reducing the gold content of the dollar, with reference to the issuance of the $3,000,000,000, and with reference to open-market transactions.

Mr. President, the hope of the country lies in this proposal. It means a better day for America. It means that tens of thousands of people who have bankruptcy staring them in the face can come back. It means that thousands of banks in the country, which must now operate under restrictions imposed on their legitimate functions, can resume their normal transactions. It means that the closed banks, with $6,000,000,000 in frozen assets, will be able to go forward and that their depositors can get their money back. It means a stabilization of currencies throughout the world, and a cessation of this change warfare that has checked commerce and strangled business.

So far as I am concerned, I expect to stand to the last with the President in this fight. I expect to vote against every amendment that is offered to the bill that does not receive the approval of the administration, because it is the Roosevelt administration that must make either a success or a failure of it. Are we asking too much when we say to you gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber, "Give the President a chance"? He may be wrong, but the American people have directed him to proceed. This is the policy the administration wants. They do not believe it is dangerous. They would not ask for it if they believed it would be injurious. They think it is one of the ways for us to proceed to stabilize exchanges, to maintain balanced budgets, and to restore economic normalcy in this country.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi made the statement that only a limited number of greenbacks may be issued under the pending measure, whereas he said under the act of 1862 the greenback issue was not limited. I find on referring to the act of 1862 that it strictly limited the issue to $150,000,000, a limitation which was afterwards inevitably increased, as this one will be.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, my recollection is that it was December 10, 1928, about noontime, when I was sworn in as a Senator of the United States. I had hardly reached my seat before the distinguished Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] was recognized. He talked about an hour, and his subject matter was President-elect Hoover. I made some inquiries about whether the time of the Senate was usually taken up with that kind of speeches, and I was informed that that was a habit of the Senator from Mississippi. I came to the Senate the next day, and immediately after the roll call the Senator from Mississippi was recognized and made another speech about President-elect Hoover. This was on Wednesday. I came back on Thursday and answered the roll call again, and the very first thing that was done by the presiding officer was to recognize the senior Senator from Mississippi, who made another speech about President-elect Hoover and the Republican Party.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator must have liked the speeches if he came back as often as he said he did. [Laughter.]

Mr. HASTINGS. I did. I always enjoy the speeches of the Senator from Mississippi, but I came as a matter of duty, because that early in my career as a Senator I believed it was necessary to be here when the roll was called. [Laughter.]

That kept up all during that week until Saturday. When Saturday came my recollection is that the Senator from Mississippi, for some reason or other, was not present. That continued until Christmas time. I had hoped, when the Senator from Mississippi got away from here, returned to his home, and spent a pleasant holiday with his Democratic friends that he would become tired of preaching to the country and to the United States Senate his doctrine about the Republican Party. But, lo and behold—

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. Was it those speeches that had such a telling effect in the last election, that drove so many Republicans out of power? [Laughter.]

Mr. HASTINGS. I will come to that in a moment. After the holiday, and as soon as the roll was called, again the Senator from Mississippi was recognized. He always talked until lunchtime. He kept that up during the whole winter, as I recollect. But since the new administration came into office, since he has a President of his own party in power, I have not heard him say a word on the floor about anything. Certainly he has not made, during that whole period, any such impassioned speech as he made today. This is the first time that he has uttered a word, so far as I recollect, except with reference to one bill of which he had charge, with respect to what is being done by this administration.

Now he comes here today and makes an eloquent speech. I am sure everybody enjoyed it. I know that I did. However, he spoiled it all, Mr. President, by the last few words he employed. Lo and behold, for all I know he may agree with the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] with respect to this measure, for all I know he may agree with that distinguished Senator about the great dangers in the bill, because toward the end he bases his sole argument upon the fact that it is an administration measure and that he proposes to vote for it, regardless of any amendment that may be offered to it, because it is an administration measure.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator do me the kindness to admit that when his party was in power during these hectic days, I supported every proposal that might restore the country to an even balance, and gave it my sincere cooperation?

Mr. HASTINGS. I cannot answer that question for this reason. Every man has his own notions about what is going to restore prosperity. The distinguished Senator from Mississippi may have had a different notion from mine with respect to it and may have voted differently from the way I voted. I assume the distinguished Senator from Mississippi always votes because he hopes and believes the measure proposed is a helpful thing for the country. Is not that true?

Mr. HARRISON. That is quite true.

Mr. HASTINGS. It would not be because it was a Republican measure that he would vote for it. Is not that true, too?

Mr. HARRISON. Whatever doubt I may have had, I resolved it in favor of the administration, because I believe in these times we ought to bury any partisan differences and try to support those who are directing the affairs of the Nation.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Mississippi paid a compliment to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED]. He talked about what an able Senator he is, what a great lawyer he is, how necessary it is for him to be a great lawyer in order to hold the clients that he has, and he referred to those clients. He said something about the Senator from Pennsylvania being a self-appointed leader, and about certain Senators over here being a little jealous. So far as I am concerned, I am proud of the Senator from Pennsylvania and proud of the fact that he sits on this side of the aisle. I say that notwithstanding the fact that he counts Mr. Mellon and Mr. Mills as his personal friends.

I heard the remarks which the Senator from Mississippi made with respect to Mr. Mellon and Mr. Mills, indicating that he does not believe that the administration of the Treasury under them was helpful to the country. He complained about Mr. Mills, and about Mr. Mellon through Mr. Mills, and that they, with the assistance of the Senator from Pennsylvania, are doing what they can to defeat the pending measure. I want to ask the Senator from Mississippi this question: Did he go to the Banking and Currency Committee, where the present Secretary of the Treasury undertook to explain the bill? I went there, although not a member of the committee, because I was anxious about the bill. I was anxious to know what explanation could be made of this revolutionary measure. I saw there the Secretary of the Treasury, and I heard the questions asked; but who answered the questions? Did the present Secretary of the Treasury answer the questions? Oh, no! The present Director of the Budget sat by his side and answered all the intricate questions that were asked by members of that great committee.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. In former days Under Secretary Mills did the same thing when Mr. Mellon was testifying before either the Finance Committee or the Banking and Currency Committee.

Mr. HASTINGS. Did the Director of the Budget ever sit with the Secretary of the Treasury, telling him how to answer questions asked by the committee of the Senate?

Mr. HARRISON. We did not have as good a Director of the Budget in those days as we have now.

Mr. HASTINGS. I wondered at that situation, and I inquired of a member of the committee, when I heard the answers made by the Director of the Budget on the one hand and an occasional answer made by the Secretary of the Treasury himself on the other hand. I asked the question why it was that the Democratic administration should choose their Secretary of the Treasury from the Republican Party when they had a good man like the Director of the Budget whom they might have appointed from the Democratic Party. I would not repeat just what the answer was, because it may have been considered confidential.

When we come to compare the Secretaries of the Treasury, I say now that I shall be ashamed in the years to come, I am sure, to compare the administration of both Secretary Mellon and Secretary Mills with the administration of the present Secretary of the Treasury. I only hope that the present Secretary of the Treasury will last long enough for us to be able to make a correct comparison.

Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi said in his opening remarks that it is important that nobody be unfair and attempt to deceive the American people—referring to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED]. I want to ask the Senator from Mississippi some questions with respect to that right now. I want to ask them with respect to the bill which is now before us. I inquire of the Senator from Mississippi whether he heard the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] yesterday when he made his speech telling what is going to happen if the bill is passed? Then I inquire whether or not the Senator from Mississippi read in the morning paper what the distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the leader on the other side of the Chamber, said with respect to it?

Mr. HARRISON. I did not hear the speech of the Senator from Oklahoma. I wish I could have been here to hear it. I know that he made a good speech. I do not know that I can agree with everything he said. What else did the Senator want to ask me?

Mr. HASTINGS. I think it is important for the Senator from Mississippi to read that speech and let the country know whether he agrees with the Senator from Oklahoma or whether he agrees with the distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], for these reasons—and it is very important—

Mr. HARRISON. Which one does the Senator agree with?

Mr. HASTINGS. I do not agree with either of them. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARRISON. I thought so.

Mr. HASTINGS. But I do say that I shall hope, as the years come and go, that the Senator from Arkansas is correct and the Senator from Oklahoma is not correct; but I say that the matter is exceedingly important, and important for this reason:

Great authority is being given the President under this bill. The people of the country are anxious to know whether the Senator from Oklahoma is correctly interpreting the attitude of the President of the United States, or whether the Senator from Arkansas is correctly interpreting his attitude, with respect to this bill. I do not know what the Senator from Mississippi will say with respect to it. He calls it conservative; he calls it sound money; but I say that the people are entitled to know. We ought not to be compelled to depend upon those who want to believe with the Senator from Arkansas relying upon the President to do that, and those who want to believe that the Senator from Oklahoma is correct relying upon him to do that.

Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi, I know, is anxious to hear this speech, and I hope he will listen.

Mr. HARRISON. I hope the Senator will continue talking about me, because as long as he does he has such a good subject that he might make a good speech. [Laughter.]

Mr. HASTINGS. I expect to make a good speech anyway, and I expect the Senator from Mississippi to agree with it. I want to say, however, that after I had attended the meeting of the Banking and Currency Committee, and had spent some hour and a half there, and heard the questions asked the Secretary of the Treasury and heard them answered by the Director of the Budget, I inquired of myself, "What does this all mean?" I thought about it during the day; and toward evening I picked up a paper and I read, as I sometimes do, little pieces of poetry in that paper. Among others, I read this, and I said to myself, "This fits my situation exactly." It was entitled "Terrible Fear", and it read like this:

As plans are progressing
In many a land,
I'm sadly confessing
I don't understand.
And when they're explaining I'm sorry to say
I fear, while complaining,
That neither do they.

[Laughter.]

That is exactly the way I felt when I read that poem on that day.

Mr. President, there are two things about this amendment that distress me. I have always believed that any effort to change the value of the American dollar was a dangerous thing, and ought not to be done except after a most careful consideration by men of experience. For this reason I should hesitate to make a change in the value of the American dollar, even if I knew the kind of change I was voting for. My trouble here is I do not know what change is to be made. I should feel safer in voting for the issuance of $3,000,000,000 of paper money under the Act of February 25, 1862, as provided in paragraph 1 of section 34, than in giving to the President authority to do the same thing, even though I were reasonably satisfied that he would not issue more than one third of that amount. I should feel safer in providing for reducing the value of the gold dollar by 50 percent by congressional action than in leaving the matter to the President, although I were reasonably certain that he would not reduce it by more than 25 percent. In other words, the stability of the thing which Congress does with respect to the currency is essential for the future welfare of the people of the Nation.

It is generally conceded by those who are urging the adoption of this amendment that its success will depend entirely upon its administration; but does anybody know what will happen under this bill? Does anybody know what the actual inflation will be? Does anybody know what the President, who is given full authority in the matter, intends to do?

In this connection, I desire to quote a portion of an editorial appearing in the Baltimore Sun of Sunday last:

It may be answered that there has been paralyzing uncertainty in the field of long-term investment for several years now, an uncertainty as to whether the continuance of a devastating decline in prices would eliminate earning power and result in unwelcome foreclosure. The substitution of one type of new uncertainty for old, however, avails little by way of fundamental relief for our economic woes. For the most part it merely changes the nature of the malady, and perhaps intensifies it by making the most sweeping financial readjustments depend upon the wishes of a single individual. If, after securing the power, which seems to be assured to him, to resort successively to increasingly drastic financial readjustments, President Roosevelt were to set up definitely measurable economic tests to be applied before taking the succeeding steps, or a specific time sequence to govern them, some of the curse of uncertainty might be removed.

As matters stand, however, adoption of the program would inject a devastating element of financial uncertainty, and in a field where an element of certainty is essential to basic economic recovery, if it is to be in charge of private enterprise. It is said that by putting forward his three-way plan President Roosevelt has headed off a headlong rush in Congress toward some wilder inflation scheme. In assessing that gain, however, it should be noted that Congress would presumably adopt some specific plan, however cock-eyed, and then go home for a time, while the administration plan proposes to leave almost everything up in the air to await the pleasure of an executive equipped with power to make the most sweeping financial changes. For self-protection the administration should try to modify its plan in the direction of certainty on what steps are to be expected if it wishes to promote recovery of the prevailing economic system.

The same paper on the day before had this to say about this amendment, Mr. President:

EYES ON THE PLANNERS

With the dollar dancing around on the foreign exchanges and the stock and commodity markets boiling, there is a tendency in seeking economic bearings at this juncture to concentrate on these shows and the dazzling financial moves in Washington which have jazzed them up. It seems quite likely, however, that the economic bearing takers would serve themselves and their clients well by examining carefully what "the planners" are up to in Washington. For they hold some of the trump cards in the economic gamble, domestic and international, on which President Roosevelt has boldly embarked.

In a phrase, what President Roosevelt's financial program seems to mean is that he is prepared to shoot the works in an effort to make business and industry in the United States move out of the doldrums, from which they have been moving somewhat under their own steam of late. So far as credit and currency adjustments are concerned, he proposes first to employ a larger dosage of "easy money" through Federal Reserve System operations. That was tried on a large scale by the Hoover administration without success, but the Roosevelt administration apparently believes, with some factual support, that the business structure is straightened out enough to begin lapping up "easy money", thus expanding production and employment.

If the Reserve System, a privately owned enterprise, follows past Democratic Party preachment and does not acquiesce in being made a political subsidiary of the Roosevelt administration, or if "easy money" does not turn the trick desired, the administration then contemplates fulfilling the "sound currency" provision of its platform by printing a few billions of currency and tossing that into the business and industrial pot to see what it will do by way of making it simmer. Since 1929 we have had an enormous expansion of currency, and on April 19 the Federal Reserve Board reported $6,068,000,000 of currency in circulation, some billions more than were outside of the banks at the peak of the boom in 1929. But though this gigantic expansion of the currency since 1929 has not offset business decline, the administration apparently reasons that further dosage now may validate a therapy which thus far has proved an abysmal flop. And if credit expansion and currency expansion, or both, do not turn the trick, the administration seeks authority to change the gold content of the dollar within limits of 50 percent, or, in other words, to impose what amounts to a 50-percent capital levy upon a nation which only a few years ago was looking askance at the "subversive" British Labor Party for smiling upon the idea of a far smaller levy.

Mr. President, I cannot bring myself to the point of straining and stretching the various sections and paragraphs of the Constitution in order that Congress may find a way to relieve itself of its own responsibilities and to place in the hands of the President a power which the framers of the Constitution never intended him to have. It would seem, on the face of this amendment, that it is wholly unconstitutional. It deals with a subject that the Constitution has left wholly with Congress, and an effort is being made here to transfer that power to the President.

I assume that it is contended that the case of Hampton against United States, reported in Two Hundred and Seventy-sixth United States Reports, page 394, is sufficient authority for the constitutionality of paragraph 2 of section 34 of the amendment. While I believe the Supreme Court would distinguish the present question from its decision in that case, I do not propose to discuss in detail the decision in the Hampton case. I do desire, however, to call attention to paragraph (2) and see whether other Senators are as confused as I am with respect to its meaning.

In the first place, the President is authorized—by proclamation to fix the weight of the gold dollar in grains nine tenths fine at an amount that he finds is necessary from his investigation to protect the foreign commerce of the United States against the adverse effect of depreciated foreign currencies.

That much of the paragraph is apparently clear and definite in its meaning. If it stood alone, there would be no difficulty in understanding what it meant. In connection with that which I have read, however, I desire to read the last few lines, which qualify this broad authority by the use of this language—

But in no event shall the weight of the gold dollar be fixed so as to reduce its present weight by more than 50 percent.

The present weight of pure gold in a dollar is 23.22 grains. Under the terms of this measure the President would be limited in his proclamation, and could not reduce the 23.22 grains to less than 11.61 grains; but it will be observed that there is nothing in the section which prevents the President from increasing the gold content of the dollar to—an amount that he finds is necessary from his investigation to protect the foreign commerce of the United States against the adverse effect of depreciated foreign currencies.

It may be urged by those who know more about it than I do that it is not necessary to put a limitation upon the President which would prohibit him from increasing the amount of gold in the gold dollar, because the conditions just read are not likely to make such increase necessary; but what we are doing here is taking congressional action under that provision of the Constitution which gives us authority—to coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin, and fix the standard of weights and measures.

The act of Congress in the Hampton case referred to limits the President's power in both increasing and reducing the tariff; but here no limitation at all is placed upon his power to increase.

Now, let us take the next provision of the paragraph, which reads as follows—

Or in case the Government of the United States enters into an agreement with any government or governments under the terms of which the ratio between the value of gold and other currency issued by the United States and by any such government or governments is established, the President may fix the weight of the gold dollar in accordance with the ratio so agreed upon, and such gold dollar, the weight of which is so fixed, shall be the standard unit of value, and all forms of money issued or coined by the United States shall be maintained at a parity with this standard and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to maintain such parity—

And then follows the exception which I have heretofore quoted, limiting the reduction to 50 percent.

It will be observed that here are two conditions which warrant the President, under this paragraph, in fixing the weight of the gold dollar by proclamation. If the President finds it necessary to act under the first part of the paragraph, and he does act, does his action thereby become final, and is he unable to act subsequently under the second condition? In other words, if he acts to protect the foreign commerce of the United States against the adverse effect of depreciated foreign currencies, can he subsequently enter into an agreement with a foreign government whereby the weight of the gold dollar is changed from that originally fixed by him? He may conclude, for instance, under the first condition that it becomes necessary to reduce the value of the dollar by 25 percent and under the second condition that it becomes necessary to reduce it 50 percent. What I am interested in knowing is whether he can do both; and when he does both, and one is different from the other, which is the one that is controlling?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. HASTINGS. I do.

Mr. AUSTIN. I should like to ask the Senator if he has considered the possibility of the President's being obliged by circumstances to make two different bases or standards with two different countries at the same time, and, if so, which one would govern as the standard for the United States under this measure.

Mr. HASTINGS. From a practical point of view it certainly seems to me that under the law he could fix only one; but the intent of the amendment and the language of the amendment are so drawn that we may reach any conclusion that we care to reach with respect to it. If we want to argue that he may do that, we may do so with some reason. If we want to argue that it seems unreasonable to do that, we may contend that. It is impossible for me to answer the Senator's question; and I propounded the question with the hope that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], if he finds an opportunity, may take occasion to explain it to me.

That is not the only difficulty with this section. The second condition is based upon a case in which the Government of the United States enters into an agreement with another government under the terms of which the ratio between the value of gold and other currency issued by the United States and by such other government or governments is established. Does this section intend to give to the President the power to enter into agreements with other countries touching the question of the value of currency of this Government as compared with the value of the currency of such other government?

It seems to me that the constitutional provisions, leaving to Congress the power to regulate the value of money and leaving to the Senate the ratification of treaties, never intended that any such important contract should become binding upon this country until the specific law had been approved by the Congress and the specific agreement with respect to it had been approved by two thirds of the Senate.

It has been pointed out that there is nothing mandatory in the amendment and that it merely gives to the President certain discretionary powers. Indeed, this makes the whole thing all the more objectionable. If the amendment itself set forth a definite and fixed policy, and gave to the President certain and specific authority to do a particular thing upon the happening of some event, it would not be so objectionable. There is, however, no policy set forth in the measure. It refers to an economic emergency, requiring an expansion of credit, and so forth, but there is no guide by which the Congress or the public can determine what the results will be.

Mr. Frank R. Kent, under date of April 23, aptly described what is being attempted and what may be expected. He states:

The fact is, there is no substance in the argument that the permissive character of the powers granted minimizes the force of such measures. The history of legislation is that when such discretionary authority is conferred the pressure to use it has been irresistible. Forces strong enough to compel the granting of the power are always strong enough to compel its use after the grant. There was no deep design upon the part of Mr. Roosevelt, either in the farm bill or the inflation amendment, to please every man with a patent-medicine cure by putting in his prescription and then not giving it to the patient. On the contrary, the various schemes were put in because legislation on these lines had to be passed, and there was no way of getting reasonable unity without including all the schemes in sight.

And if enacted they will all be used. Each prescription will be given a trial. The political druggists powerful enough to have them put in will be powerful enough to have the dose administered. Further, that is the administration philosophy. Here is a very sick nation. If one thing does not effect the cure, try another. Call in all the doctors. Put in all the prescriptions. Mix the quacks up with the qualified practitioners. Try everything. How does anyone know something won't work? It shouldn't, but it might.

I quote again from the Baltimore Sun an article by the editor, Mr. John W. Owens. I want to say, in this connection, that this paper is making the best fight among all the papers of the East against this dangerous legislation. Mr. Owens' article of Sunday has this to say with respect to it:

REVOLUTIONARY CHANGES FORESEEN IF ROOSEVELT KEEPS PRESENT COURSE—ADMINISTRATION HELD NEARING EDGE OF LEFT-WING RADICALISM, WITH POSSIBILITY PROGRAM OF REGIMENTED DOMESTIC ECONOMY WILL BE ADDED TO INFLATION

By John W. Owens

BOWS TO INFLATIONISTS

What happened was that Mr. Roosevelt bowed to the inflationists in Congress, and also to those outside of Congress. Precisely as the passage of the Black 30-hour bill through the Senate on April 6 set in motion strong forces for a planned economy to govern industrial production—forces to which Mr. Roosevelt has been giving encouraging nods of the head—so the powerful demonstration in favor of inflation in the Senate on April 17 turned his attention to inflation and caused more nods of the head. From the hour the Wheeler 16-to-1 bill was beaten by only 10 votes, and the House inflationists took heart and began yelling, the White House has been making inflation more and more respectable.

The gold embargo was a sympathetic nod to the inflationists, a nod that was coupled with the hope that the embargo would have a psychological effect on the markets, if not an intrinsic effect on prices. And then, in rapid order, came the agreements with the inflationists. These agreements were set about, it is true, by the administration's friends with garlands of cleverness. The President had agreed to assume discretionary power to institute one or more forms of inflation, and by his assumption of discretionary power Congress was robbed of the opportunity to rush pell-mell into some crude system of turning out printing-press money.

MAY NULLIFY OWN POWERS

But this may well prove to be another of those victories that no nation can afford. It is possible that Mr. Roosevelt will sit on the powers that are to be given him and crush them into nullity. But it is also possible that he has given character to a movement which his past professions and his party platform would lead one to believe were forbidden. If people are so formidable that they must be given a taste of victory, is it likely that they then will become submissive?

Mr. President, the author of the bill frankly states that if $200,000,000,000 should be taken from the credit class and given to the debtor class of the Nation no injustice would be done. It is impossible to listen to the speech he made on the floor of the Senate without reaching the conclusion that, in part at least, that is his expectation of what will happen when the bill goes into operation. It is known that the amendment had the approval of the administration before it was offered. It is assumed, therefore, that the author of the amendment has some concrete notions about what the President may be expected to do under this amendment. Our attention has been called to the fact that the products of the farm are selling at a very low level, that wages are low, and that men are out of employment, and it is expected that this inflation scheme will cure all of these ills, and cure them quickly. The history of the world furnishes no evidence that any such results will follow.

The Washington Post, under date of April 23, with respect to what may be expected under the operation of this measure, has this to say:

It is a well-known fact of history that the workingman is hit harder than anyone else by the debasement of monetary values. The wealthy interests protect themselves by shifting their holdings into stocks and various forms of tangible wealth. But the workingman whose wages are measured in terms of dollars must accept the cheap money from week to week and do his best to secure a larger number of dollars to offset their decline in value.

Prices cannot be permanently lifted by inflation unless the process of cheapening money is carried to such disastrous proportions that money becomes worthless. Great Britain experienced a moderate rise in prices after going off the gold standard, but prices soon subsided again, even in terms of the depreciated pound. At present commodity prices in England are lower than they were when depreciation of the pound began.

If the experience of the United States should be similar, workmen in this country may be handicapped by higher living costs for a brief period. If the fundamental causes of industrial stagnation should remain uncorrected, further price declines or further inflation to offset such a tendency would be inevitable. In either case the country must come back face to face with elementary economic problems which cannot be solved by taking the value and certainty out of money.

Grover Cleveland, in his first annual message to Congress on December 8, 1885, in discussing the effect of cheap money upon labor and other classes, had this to say:

It may be said that the latter result will be but temporary, and that ultimately the price of labor will be adjusted to the change; but even if this takes place the wageworker cannot possibly gain, but must inevitably lose, since the price he is compelled to pay for his living will not only be measured in a coin heavily depreciated, and fluctuating and uncertain in its value, but this uncertainty in the value of the purchasing medium will be made the pretext for an advance in prices beyond that justified by actual depreciation.

The words uttered in 1834 by Daniel Webster, in the Senate of the United States, are true today: "The very man of all others who has the deepest interest in a sound currency, and who suffers most by mischievous legislation in money matters, is the man who earns his daily bread by his daily toil."

The so-called "debtor class", for whose benefit the continued compulsory soilage of silver is insisted upon, are not dishonest because they are in debt; and they should not be suspected of a desire to jeopardize the financial safety of the country, in order that they may cancel their present debts by paying the same in depreciated dollars. Nor should it be forgotten that it is not the rich nor the money lender alone that must submit to such a readjustment enforced by the Government and their debtors. The pittance of the widow and the orphan, and the income of helpless beneficiaries of all kinds, would be disastrously reduced. The depositors in savings banks and in other institutions which hold in trust the savings of the poor, when their little accumulations are scaled down to meet the new order of things, would, in their distress, painfully realize the delusion of the promise made to them that plentiful money would improve their condition.

Some 11 years later the great Bryan brought the cheap money issue before the American people in his sensational "cross of gold" speech, in which he said:

If they dare to come out into the open field and defend the gold standard as a good thing, we will fight them to the uttermost. Having behind us the producing masses of this Nation and the world, supported by the commercial interests, the laboring interests, and the toilers everywhere, we will answer their demand for a gold standard by saying to them: You shall not press down upon the brow of labor this crown of thorns; you shall not crucify mankind upon a cross of gold.

Following the nomination of Mr. Bryan this country waged a very sensational and exceptional campaign. It was finally decided in favor of sound money. The issue shortly thereafter disappeared, and in the last campaign, 36 years later, the Democratic Party in its platform declared:

We advocate a sound currency to be preserved at all hazards and an international monetary conference called on the invitation of our Government to consider the rehabilitation of silver and related questions.

An editorial in the New York Herald Tribune of April 21, entitled, "The Strategic Gains", enters into a discussion of the Thomas amendment. The editorial emphasizes the dangers of the amendment in the following language:

The risks of the new position, the appalling powers which it will place in the President—powers at a stroke to make and unmake the dollar, the price level, the wage level—lie on the other side of the scales. The plan proposed has an all too professorial air of neatness; it would undoubtedly work beautifully in a perfect world, where there were neither politicians nor selfish groups nor hungry nations. In a world of sin and confusion, operating under the jealous eye of a Congress that yearns to start the printing presses, it can hardly fail to start as many new problems as it has solved.

It then proceeds to call attention to the fact that in the Congress there exists a strong feeling in favor of inflating the currency, and the editorial concludes that the matter is probably safer in the hands of the President than it is in the Congress. I quote, referring to the President:

We are glad to reiterate our confidence in the essential soundness of his financial faith. We still believe that he has no intention of abandoning his pledge to uphold the dollar, and that he will use wisely and carefully the extraordinary powers for which he asks.

I am wondering if the writer of that editorial was relying upon the pledge in the Democratic platform and the speeches made by the President relating to this question.

On July 30, 1932, the President in opening his campaign and in discussing the various provisions of the party platform, said:

To meet this staggering deficit the administration has resorted to the type of inflation which has weakened public confidence in our Government credit both at home and abroad.

Again, he said:

Let us have the courage to stop borrowing to meet continuing deficits. Stop the deficits. Let us have equal courage to reverse the policy of the Republican leaders and insist on a sound currency.

And again in the same speech:

Muddled government finance creates a general uncertainty concerning the value of national currencies; this uncertainty has a way of spreading from country to country. The world is tormented with it now.

It is obvious that sound money is an international necessity, not a domestic consideration for one nation alone.

We face a condition which at first seems to involve either an unbalanced Budget and an unsound currency or else of the Government to assume its just duties—the relief of distress and protection against loss of savings built up through many years by numberless small investors. This concerns you, my friends, who managed to lay aside a few dollars for a rainy day.

In his inaugural address he used this language:

There must be an end to speculation with other people's money, and there must be a provision for adequate and sound currency.

I am wondering, Mr. President, as I read these extracts from the speech of the candidate who was elected in November last, whether it could have been reasonably anticipated by any person casting a vote for such candidate that he would request or approve any such measure as that now before the Senate. The quotation from his inaugural address was, of course, made after the election, but was there anything in that sentence I have quoted which would indicate that he believed any such measure as this could be called "sound currency"?

He rightly condemns the practice of speculating with other people's money. I take it that that refers in particular to the banks of the country. It has been stated time and again that the banks are merely trustees for the depositors, and as trustees they should be held strictly accountable for the funds of the depositors. It may be said also that the directors of the banks are the trustees of the stockholders, so that they act in a dual capacity, as trustees for two groups of persons. The speculation here referred to applies to the money of the depositors only.

As I read this language of the President, and believe with the great mass of the American people in his sincerity when he stated it, I am wondering how he can justify placing himself in a position where he can by merely writing his own name to a paper change the value of the purchasing power of the American dollar; make $1 pay a $2 debt; increase the necessities of life for a family from $10 to $20; and reduce the value of Government bonds, payable in gold, to one half their present value.

I, of course, do not use the word "speculate" in the same sense that the President used it in his inaugural address, but when we pass this bill and the President begins to exercise the authority given him under it, how can it be said that he does not immediately begin speculating with all the money of all the people of the Nation?

This speculation immediately creates an uncertainty and cause for speculation on the part of every person in the land whether that person be a wage earner, a widow with a small income, or of that class which the Senator from Oklahoma insists has $200,000,000,000 more than it ought to have.

Mr. President, in the same inaugural address, the President comments upon the fact that the "money changers" had been driven out of the temple. "Money changers" are rather ugly words and, as used here, were intended to apply to people who had done something wrong. There was no definite description by the President as to just what class of people he had in mind. He certainly did not intend it to apply to reputable bankers of the country, and I do not suppose that he meant it to apply to all members of the stock exchange; but I think the people of the country got the impression that he referred to that group of speculators that had so much to do with taking the stock market to its great height prior to the end of 1929. We have been led to believe by the author of this amendment that its specific purpose is to cheapen the dollar; raise agricultural and commodity prices, and he says:

If the amendment carries and the powers are exercised in a reasonable degree, it must transfer that $200,000,000,000 in the hands of persons who now have it, who did not buy it, who did not earn it, who do not deserve it, who must not retain it, back to the other side—the debtor class of the Republic, the people who owe the mass debts of the Nation.

And now let us see what has happened since it was known that the administration had changed its course with respect to currency. Let us see whether the farmers have been benefited, or whether the speculators have been injured.

On April 19 at 10:30 in the morning, the President announced to the newspapers that the American dollar would not be supported abroad. On the very morning of April 19 there began a sensational rise in the stock market. The newspapers carried the story of the many millions of shares of stock that were traded in that very day. The next day, the 20th, the announcement was made that the President would support an inflation of the currency. The newspapers also carried the story in this connection that on the evening of the 18th of April the President had his advisers about him, conferring with them upon this subject. How can it be explained that the stock market had such a sensational rise on the 19th, except that the speculators had what may be called "inside information"? I want it distinctly understood that in making this suggestion I am in no sense reflecting upon the President, nor am I reflecting upon any of his advisers. I am quite certain that that conference was a confidential one and was so understood by all those who participated in it. I merely call attention to the fact that it is impossible for the President, who must of necessity consult other people, to prevent his plans from being known to a few people before they are announced to the world. I call attention to this as being a fact which cannot be controverted and which cannot be prevented by the most scrupulous and the most careful. In other words, it is a perfectly natural thing that when a few people know a secret, many people know it very shortly thereafter. Therefore, in the operation of this bill by which such tremendous power and authority are given to the President, he will of necessity consult those in whom he has confidence, and it will be impossible for him definitely to decide upon any action and announce it to the world without it being known beforehand to a few of the so-called "speculators", who will undoubtedly take advantage of it. Under this identical amendment the first proposition is to be submitted to the Reserve Board. The energetic newspapers will soon ascertain whether that Board is to act or will refuse to act. If they do act, and it be ascertained that the $3,000,000,000 inflation under the scheme laid out for the Federal Reserve Board is not sufficient, then the President is authorized to issue $3,000,000,000 additional under the act of February 25, 1862. His action will have a tremendous effect upon the Nation and upon the world. Will it be possible for him to keep it a secret? Will it be possible to prevent a few people from ascertaining that fact before it is made known to the Nation, and does anybody doubt that the speculators will have some way of getting the information and taking advantage of it before the farmers of Oklahoma will reap much benefit from it?

Between the opening of the stock exchange on Wednesday, April 19, and the closing of it on Monday, the 24th, a period of 4 days' operation, the value of the stocks listed on the Stock Exchange of New York increased by approximately $5,000,000,000.

If the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania had been sitting on the other side of the aisle and had been urging the adoption of the pending proposal and the stock market had gone up at the same rate during the 4 days, he would have been charged, I insist, with being controlled by the money interests of the Nation and would be condemned on that account. I say it is just as fair to charge the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma with being in the pay of the speculators as it is to charge the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania with being opposed to this measure because he represents interests in his own State that have large stakes in connection with the inflation of the currency.

The prices of farm commodities have increased also, perhaps, but I am wondering if any farmer in Oklahoma up to this point has been able to feel the effects of it or get any of the benefits from it.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to read a telegram that I received yesterday morning from Chicago. It is as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., April 24, 1933.

HON. DANIEL O. HASTINGS,
Senate Office Building:

In this great national emergency I hope you can give your sympathy and support to a program of controlled and sound inflation and to cooperate on pending legislation. It has been currently demonstrated that only the mere talk of controlled inflation has brought about a substantial recovery in prices and buying power, and obviously the actual passing of effective legislation will certainly bring immediately a much greater advance in prices and buying power. This program will naturally help not only the great mass of individuals but will also on a wide scale thaw out and liquefy a high percentage of the present frozen assets of banks, insurance companies, and other institutions. In addition to the many important financial benefits to our Federal, State, and local Governments the relationship of the debtor and creditor classes would quickly tend to a more fair and equitable basis. Your cooperation at this time would prove most valuable.

Mr. President, I have no notion that the distinguished Senator from Mississippi [MR. HARRISON] had anything to do with that telegram being received by me, but I did not know the sender of it, and I was interested to find out whether he was a farmer and hoped to get benefit from this measure or just what his interest was. So I made some inquiry in Chicago about him, and I found that he is the president of an aviation company. I also found that the stock of his company is listed on the New York Stock Exchange; and I also found that within the past 4 days it has increased 50 percent. That is the kind of interests that are urging me to support this bill so far as I have been able to ascertain them. I may add that I understand other Senators have received similar telegrams.

Mr. President, there is one other article to which I desire to refer, but I cannot, for the moment, put my hands on it. I do, however, want to call attention to an open letter which was sent by the People's Lobby, dated April 24. I desire to call attention to the fact that Rexford G. Tugwell, who, I think, is Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, is a member of the council of the People's Lobby. I have previously had communications from the People's Lobby. I do not agree with all they say, but I do want to read portions of this letter into the Record. It is directed "To Members of Congress":

The soapsuds-money advocates are vociferous, but by 1934, and probably within 6 months, their stupidity would bring increased suffering to countless millions of voters, who will act accordingly at the next election.

A reported $8,000,000,000 increase in the price of stocks during the past week is the advance "benefit" of soapsuds-money advocacy.

They were too high a week ago, but neither farmers, the unemployed, nor wage-earners shared in this increase, though probably several soapsuds-money advocates made a killing, as well as other wealthy Democrats.

Debts and interest rates, Government and non-Government, must be reduced at least a third, but no one except a fool advocates tearing down a house in order to repair the roof.

Senator THOMAS' proposal, carried to its logical and probable conclusion, would produce the following results:

1. Start another 1929 bull market, with equally disastrous results, but large profits to the owners of both parties.
2. Cut wages and salaries a quarter to a half.
3. Take away from farmers in higher prices for what they buy most, if not all, of such benefit as they might possibly derive from higher prices if the lure of anticipated higher prices didn't result in the inevitable orgy of overproduction.

Even Democrats should be realists, not theorists.

4. Start disastrous speculation in city and farm lands.

5. Compel Federal, State, and local Governments to increase several fold their appropriations for relief of the unemployed and their dependents.

6. Compel the Federal and State and local Governments at least to restore wage cuts, if not to increase them above the level before wage cuts.

7. Reduce the face of life-insurance policies and the purchasing power of savings accounts by two thirds to three quarters.

8. Unbalance Federal, State, and local Governments beyond possibility of balancing without a drastic capital levy.

Inflation is a coward's or a crook's method of evading the program of economic reconstruction which the aftermath of the Democrats' World War has made immediately necessary.

Mr. President, before closing I desire to refer to what I consider the most offensive part of this amendment. I have heretofore at various places undertaken to defend the Congress of the United States. In my own State I hear criticism of Members of the Senate who disagree with me and who sit on this side of the Chamber. I undertake to defend their attitude, to insist upon their sincerity, to insist upon their honesty, and to call attention to the fact that they come from States and live among people where the conditions are entirely different from those with which the people of my State, for instance, are accustomed. I have on more than one occasion referred as an illustration to the fact that it would probably be impossible for the distinguished Senator from Nebraska [MR. NORRIS] to be elected to the United States Senate from the State of Pennsylvania, and I have in the same breath said that I know it would be impossible for the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania [MR. REED] to be elected to the United States Senate from the State of Nebraska. The whole difficulty is that we have our points of view, depending upon our contacts with out people at home.

I have undertaken to defend the Congress. I have done it against the attacks of the newspapers, the editorial writers and the magazine writers all over this country of ours. But I say that if the Congress keeps on I shall undertake to defend it no longer. I say if this bill becomes a law of the land with this amendment in it, then the Congress ought to fold its tent and go home. I say that at the same time it ought to fold the Constitution and seal it and appoint a distinguished committee to take it to the White House and lay it in the lap of the President of the United States.

What is it we have done in the last few weeks that makes the people say that the Congress amounts to nothing and cannot amount to anything in the future? The first thing we did was to pass the bank bill. Many of us believed it was necessary. Many of us believed it was necessary to give extraordinary powers, and notwithstanding the criticism of the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], we agreed heartily with all the administration recommended.

Then came the economy bill. After a protest about the authority given to the President, it was urged upon me that it was necessary to save the Nation, and I put my tongue in my cheek and voted for that bill also.

Then came the farm bill, which undertook to make a king out of the Secretary of Agriculture, giving him powers over the farmers of the Nation, giving him powers over the processors of the Nation, giving him power to license or refuse to license them, powers that no individual ought to have. As the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] said with respect to those powers:

I might say that there is no human being who has ever been created by God upon whom I would confer the authority and the power that this bill undertakes to confer upon the Secretary of Agriculture.

May I invite the attention of the Senator from Virginia to the fact that what we have given the Secretary of Agriculture is nothing compared with what we are about to give the President of the United States—power in dealing with the American dollar, shifting it back and forth from day to day until nobody will know what it will be worth tomorrow or next day or next week, and we will have to look at the papers to see what it was worth the week before.

That is not all that is being asked of us. We hear it said through the newspapers that the Secretary of Labor is urging upon the lower House to modify the Black labor bill so it will be possible to control the industries of the Nation and see to it that no more is produced than the Nation is ready to take and use. That is an additional power for which the distinguished Secretary says she is not asking. For what is she asking? She suggests that instead of giving her the power it be given to a board of certain members of the administration mentioned by her.

Our attention was called to the fact by the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] the other day that this is not all. There is before the House of Representatives a recommendation from the President that he be given authority to change and modify and cancel the contracts made by the United States Government with its citizens.

These are the 4 or 5 things we have been asked to do, and I repeat that we ought to fold this miserable congressional tent and go to our homes. We ought to take the Constitution, preserve it as much as we can by sealing it, and take it to the White House and lay it in the lap of the President.

Mr. President, if the situation were not so serious, I would suggest that before we do that we should create some crowns for these new kings. To the President we ought to give a crown of gold. The distinguished Secretary of the Treasury perhaps will be satisfied with one of silver. For the distinguished Secretary of Agriculture we might make one of cotton. In doing this we ought not to forget the "brain trust." I suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania that we take some of the greenbacks and make decorations out of them and present them to these advisers of the President, these professors of the Nation, giving them these decorations in memory of what they have done to eliminate Congress from further use for all time to come.

Mr. President, before I close I want to read into the RECORD an editorial. So far as I can recall, William Randolph Hearst has never written an editorial with which I thoroughly agreed before, but I want to read this one because I admire the stand he has taken. We all know what influence he had in the nomination of President Roosevelt. We all know what influence he had in his election. I congratulate him upon having the courage at this time—I am sorry he did not have it a few days ago—to write this editorial so that the poor people of the Nation, for whom he is always fighting and who read his papers, may look and as they run may read what he says with respect to this miserable, insane bill that is presented here, and which we on this side of the Chamber, regardless of what we think about it, know in the end we have to swallow. The editorial is as follows:

A SUPINE CONGRESS

TO THE EDITOR OF THE WASHINGTON HERALD:

I think we should have a series of editorials insisting that Congress resign and allow the people to elect a Congress which has the capacity and the disposition to perform its functions under the Constitution.

The people admire Mr. Roosevelt very much, but they admire him as a President, not as a dictator.

Congress is going contrary to the registered vote of the people, and contrary to the spirit of the Constitution, and contrary to the purposes of the founders of this republican form of government when it shirks its own duties, abandons its functions, and turns over its powers to the President.

Mr. Roosevelt is a good President, and he might not abuse these powers; but the wisdom of the founders contemplated the possibility of a bad President, who would misuse powers which were too largely entrusted to him.

They created a government of three coequal branches: the executive branch, the legislative branch, and the judicial branch.

They defined the powers of each, and they took pains to see that one branch should not encroach upon the powers of another.

There is nothing in the character of the present Congress to lead anyone to suppose that they have more wisdom than the founders of this Government.

In fact, the abandonment of the powers of Congress, who are the most direct representatives of the people, is not based on any worthy motive.

It is due in the main to cowardice as well as incompetence. If there is anything to be done which obviously ought to be done in the interests of the whole country, but which nevertheless might jeopardize the seat of some Congressman, these Congressmen can almost certainly be found regarding the situation from the point of view of their own interests and not from the point of view of the Nation's interests.

Consequently, these Congressmen decline to do the rightful thing and prefer instead to turn the powers of Congress over to the President, with the purpose of letting him do it and take the consequences.

A Congress of such cowardly and incompetent character is unworthy to represent the people of the United States.

It is willing, in order to save itself some onerous obligations, to try to make a dictator out of the Executive, to upset the balance of the coequal branches of government which the fathers of the Republic provided for in the Constitution of the Nation, and to establish evil precedents which may return to plague us, and possibly to destroy the democratic character of our Government, if at some future time a less worthy and less unselfish Executive should occupy the Presidential chair.

We have, in fact, the singular spectacle and the disturbing situation of a Democratic Congress which does not believe in democracy, and which furthermore does not apparently believe in the fundamental principles of republican government on which this Nation is founded.

It is idle to hope that this Congress will resign; but an amendment to the Constitution should be offered which would enable the voters to recall Congressmen who are incapable of performing properly and constitutionally the duties of their office.

WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I shall be very brief in the remarks I am about to make. I particularly want to bring to the attention of the Senate not merely some theories on the subject of inflation and the subject of depreciated currency but to show, if I may, some actual experiences which have been taking place throughout the world in the last 2 years.

It is not a question of what effect this procedure may have. It is a question of what has been the experience of the various countries for the past 2 years. I should like to point out that there seems to be considerable confusion on the subject of going off the gold standard and on the subject of what inflation means, what deflation means, what reflation means, what "controlled currency" means, what the gold standard means, what the silver standard means. I do not wonder there is confusion about it, because people generally have not devoted very much attention to the subject. It is more or less complicated. In order to understand the monetary problem or the currency question one would have to devote a great deal of time and study and concentration to it. We cannot understand it by a casual discussion here and there. It would take a great deal of time to go into the science of the whole question, and I shall not venture into it at this time.

Generally speaking, the people have not given it a great deal of attention and they do not understand it. Very few people understand it. I think some of the classical economists, the conservative economists, the progressive economists, the economists of all varieties, and the experts of all varieties, indulge in a great deal of theory when as a practical matter they do not really grasp the whole problem. It is confusing to read what they have to say about it.

The question, of course, is a very important one. As the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] said the other day, there is no matter of more importance that has confronted the Senate or the country than the question now before us. What is money? What is currency, gold, silver? What is money? We have a general idea about it, but we rarely ever fully appreciate the importance of money.

Recently I read a very interesting pamphlet on the subject of money by Lord Desborough. It is quite an interesting pamphlet. He shows the significance of that question—what is money and how does money measure value? This is the situation in which we find ourselves, as quite well expressed by him:

The world is admittedly suffering from a catastrophic fall in the level of commodity prices, followed by contraction of credit, wide-spread bank failures, financial crashes, state defaults, and repudiation of debts, which have diminished the available money of the world and caused serious economists to state in an official document (see the Report of the Gold Delegation of the Financial Committee of the League of Nations, June 1932) that it is doubtful if this process continues whether our present civilization can survive.

What is wanted is a stable measure of value for the whole world, East as well as West, which can be secured by having one standard founded on the two precious metals linked together by a ratio.

His thesis is that the money for the world ought to be upon the metallic basis of gold and silver on a ratio settled by agreement among the nations of the world, at least among the important nations. I do not need to go further into that question. That is foreign to my thought now—whether we ought to have the gold standard or the silver standard, or both gold and silver, or whether we ought to have any metallic standard at all. We can get along perhaps with a standard that does not involve either metal.

I submit that if Senators will read the argument presented by Lord Desborough, they will be strongly convinced that he makes out a splendid argument for the bimetallic standard of both gold and silver, holding that there is not sufficient money in the world to supply the needs and requirements of world business, and that there is need of both gold and silver as a standard. Someone has suggested half of each, on a ratio, however, which may be agreed upon, not fixed arbitrarily by one nation.

Lord Desborough says further in his discussion here, emphasizing the situation and the needs:

Money, we are told, among other things, is a measure of value and a medium of exchange. How does money measure value? That is the most important point.

And then he proceeds:

Aristotle, who lived in the fourth century before our era, showed this insight when he said, "Money, then, has been made by agreement, as it were, a substitute for demand, and is so called because it exists, not by nature but by law, and it is within our power to change it and make it useless for the purpose. But money itself is not always of the same value."

Undoubtedly Aristotle laid down some very sound views about 400 B.C. when he set up these principles: First, that money exists by law and not by nature; second, that money derives its power not from the mis-called intrinsic value of the substance of which it is made but from the law, which can give or take away that power; and, third, that money is not always of the same value.

A great writer has compared the operation of money upon society to the circulation of the blood in the human body, and yet another has declared that without money organized society was inconceivable. * * * The historian Allison does not hesitate to attribute the two greatest events in the history of mankind—the fall of the Roman Empire and the resurrection of mankind from the disintegration of society which is known as the Dark Ages—as directly due to monetary causes. The Roman Empire fell because it was bankrupt, owing to the decline in the produce of the gold and silver mines of Spain and Greece and elsewhere. Her home agriculture ceased, as it no longer paid to till the ground, and her hardy agricultural population had been driven from the soil to swell the needy rabble of Rome; Italy was a husk through which the invader marched almost without opposition, and the Empire being bankrupt could no longer put armies in the field. Following the fall of the Roman Empire we have the Dark Ages, when money practically disappeared.

I need not dwell any longer upon that subject to indicate the importance of solving this question of a proper monetary policy.

In elaborating on his views, Lord Desborough cites John S. Mill, who says:

The value of money—other things being the same—varies inversely as its quantity, every increase of quantity lowering the value, and every diminution raising it in a ratio exactly equivalent.

In other words, he developed a quantitative theory of money. It may be summed up in the words of Professor Nicholson, namely, that it is admitted by every economist of repute. Those who indulge in that view went so far as to hold that the essence of money is quantity and limitation.

In considering money as a measure of value we are brought face to face with the fact that its essence consists in its numerical relation to the commodities and services which it measures. The value of each unit depends upon the number of units which are out; in short, the unit of money is all money.

Money * * * is a creation of the law, which can make it and unmake it, and it is not always of the same value, and, as was laid down by the jurisconsult Paulus, it derives its power not from its substance but from its quantity.

Those are views that are set forth very strongly in this pamphlet, and I submit that they are quite impressive.

At page 16 the author says:

I am now considering metallic money, the money made of the two precious metals, gold and silver, gold for the West and silver for the East, on which there has been raised a great volume of credit on a very insecure basis. There never was enough gold to pay debts in gold or to carry on the business of gold standard countries; indeed, if all the monetary gold in the world were collected, it would only pay about one third of our national debt.

There was some discussion here the other day with regard to paying our bonds that are payable in gold and gold certificates with gold upon demand, and all that sort of thing; and because the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] said that there was not enough gold in our possession to pay off all the obligations of the Government that are payable in gold, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] raised a great disturbance about it and was wondering if the Senator from Nevada meant to contend that we had to repudiate our obligations. Not at all. What the Senator from Nevada said then was precisely what Lord Desborough says here:

If all the monetary gold in the world were collected, it would only pay about one third of our national debt.

In other words, we have about $4,300,000,000 of gold in our possession, with $21,000,000,000 of bonds payable in gold. Of course, if all the millions of bondholders from all over the world mobilized and marched in solid phalanx to the Treasury at the same hour of the same day they could not all get the gold for their bonds; but everybody knows that that never would happen in the world. It would be utterly impossible to get all the bondholders and gold-certificate holders together at the same time and have them call upon the Treasury on the same day for their money in gold. As a matter of fact, we know that the bonds themselves are payable in different years, 20 years apart, and all that sort of thing. So that while we have not in our possession enough gold to pay all our obligations in gold at one time, neither will we ever be called upon to perform such an act as that. It is utterly out of the question. We will take care of our obligations in good faith, every one of them, and pay them in gold.

It is estimated that $4,000,000,000 of actual gold would justify the issuing of obligations of over $20,000,000,000 and be on perfectly safe ground. All wise economists admit that, and all kinds of economists that I ever heard of. So that we are not in danger of repudiating any obligation. There is no call for any such thing as that. We are in a sound position in every respect and could issue five times more bonds and gold certificates than we have the gold on hand to meet now. So that that is just what is stated here.

This author goes on further to say:

The pyramid of credit reared on the narrow gold basis has toppled over, and, for various reasons has collapsed. Bank failures all over the world, defaults of governments, nonpayment of dividends, financial crashes of great speculative concerns, following on the fall in prices, have reduced the composite money of the world and impeded the velocity of its circulation, and so reduced its effective power.

He is here advocating the use of silver, together with gold, as a basis of currency.

What is wanted—

He says—and this, I think, is absolutely sound—is a stable monetary measure of value, not indeed to stabilize prices at their present level, which the MacMillan report said would be disastrous, but at the level of 1928—

The talk here is about stabilizing prices at the level of 1926. I think perhaps that would be a sounder basis—the wholesale commodity price index of 1926.

and to keep them at that level. Objections are raised to what is called a "manipulated currency"—

And so forth. He says:

That some remedy must be found and found soon is, I think, very generally admitted, and a grave warning is to be found in the note to the Report of the Gold Delegation of the Financial Committee of the League of Nations, June 1932. It is signed by M. Albert Janssen, Sir Reginald Mant, and Sir Henry Strakosch, and concludes with these words:

"It may be truly said that international trade is being gradually strangled to death; if the process continues, millions of people in this economically interlocked world must inevitably die of starvation, and it is indeed doubtful whether our present civilization can survive."

That shows the importance of the question we are dealing with now; and it is the view of thoughtful men speaking seriously not only to their own body but to the world. That is the situation in which we find ourselves.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. I agree that that is the situation. Does not the Senator feel that we will achieve the aim which these gentlemen inferentially think we should try to achieve by not devaluing our money and going into the very spiral which they warn us not to enter upon?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think it is very important, I will say to the Senator, that we reach some international agreement with reference to the basis of the currencies of the world. I think it is very important to do that. If we have to wait too long for that—if that is not possible or feasible—then each country must act for itself, just as they have been doing.

Mr. TYDINGS. May I borrow the Senator's pamphlet for just a minute, at the point where the Senator was reading?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me read this, and show what this will mean:

It may be truly said that international trade is being gradually strangled to death; if the process continues, millions of people in this economically interlocked world must inevitably die of starvation, and it is indeed doubtful whether our present civilization can survive.

I think that is 100 percent true; and what I wanted to observe was that if we adopt the policy incorporated in this amendment we are doing the very thing which the pamphlet the Senator has in his hand says should not be done.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not quite agree that the premises stated call for the conclusion that is reached. It is, of course, a question about which people may differ as to what our policies are leading to, and what the conditions will be if we adopt this particular policy, or what they will be if we do not adopt it. It is very difficult to say; but in a few minutes I am going to cite some actual examples of what has been done in other countries, and with what effect.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President—

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. As I recall, the distinguished British author of that pamphlet finally comes to the conclusion that the remonetization of silver is the solution of the problem which he discusses.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes. He believes in both silver and gold being the metallic basis of currency.

Mr. BARKLEY. And he suggests international agreements.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. As a matter of fact, in 1890, I think, the Congress of the United States authorized the President to enter into international agreements for the stabilization of coined money by the remonetization of silver. Of course, nothing came of that; but it was because of that that in 1896, in the famous Bryan-McKinley campaign, Mr. Bryan took the position, without regard to anybody else's consent, or any agreement, that our country ought to enter upon that policy, and it was largely in view of the fact that for 6 years the President had had the authority and it had not been exercised.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BYRNES in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. One reason why I have not supported the 16-to-1 silver proposal, although I recognize that sooner or later nations must buy up silver in order to stabilize silver money, is the fact that if we set that ratio, silver countries would be tempted to melt up their remaining silver coin and dump it in the United States for sale. Our Government would be called upon to buy all the dumped silver money in the world, now amounting to about four and a half billion dollars, in order to keep our ratio of 16 to 1.

If the Senator will permit me to go on for just a moment more in his time—I do feel, however, that if we can effect, in the coming world conference, through international agreement, a situation where nations will state that silver will not be dumped in the future, then we will be in a position to stabilize silver, which we cannot do very well in the absence of such an agreement.

There have been 541,000,000 ounces of silver money melted up and sold on the silver markets of the world since 1920. If we had a 16-to-1 standard in this country, we would have to buy in exactly that quantity of silver from the other countries of the world in order to stabilize silver and gold in the United States, because it would seek the highest market for a place of sale.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I trust the Senator will not entice me off onto the silver question. I do not want to get into that discussion now. I want to hurry on and make just a few points with reference to the matter before us, referring to the position taken by this author. He says:

Owing to the increase of trade and population the stock of gold is quite insufficient at the present time to form the basis of the great volume of credit on which the business of the world has to be carried on. More legal-tender money is required to stop the catastrophic fall in commodity prices; confidence is not enough; the more confidence you have when prices are falling the more money you lose. Deflation should be cured by reflation, and a return to the old bimetallic system of one money founded on the two metals, linked together by a ratio, would seem to provide the best method of reflation where a metallic basis is required for a currency.

That is the argument he makes. He says further:

The ideal solution would be an agreement between the leading countries of the world to establish an identical ratio, but the British Empire with India and the countries on sterling might well be able to establish and maintain a ratio. . . .

Faced as we are by the most deplorable conditions of general bankruptcy, not only of individuals but of States which cannot meet their obligations, of unremunerative trade, of unemployment, and of crushing taxation, it is our duty to study the causes and if possible find a remedy.

While our friends on the other side criticize what is proposed here and undertake to tear the whole plan to pieces and ridicule it, they do not offer anything themselves. There is not a constructive suggestion they can make.

What are we going to do about this situation? That is the problem. We must do something. All thinking people admit that the present conditions are intolerable and that we have to do something. This author says further:

The chief cause seems to be admitted to be the great drop in the price of staple commodities.

I think that is true. What are we going to do to raise the prices of commodities? Are we just to wait and let ourselves drift until we are supposed to strike bottom permanently and then hope to recover from that condition? Something ought to be done about it. This author continues:

This is not due to overproduction, as can be shown in the figures of production of such leading commodities as wheat, copper, silver, and cotton, the production of which has fallen off rather than increased during the last 3 years. So, if there is any truth in the quantitative theory of money, the crisis may well be a — one and the cause of our misfortune be not the overproduction of commodities but the underproduction of money.

This may be cured in various ways, and in the present circumstances the reflation of silver to its old place in the monetary system would seem to be the sound one.

As I have said, we cannot afford to just say we are going to let things take their course and expect that things will eventually wear themselves out and the country come back. Some effort ought to be made to relieve the situation, and the rise in commodity prices is conceded by economists and other thinking people all over the world as the essential thing to be reached now.

There is considerable confusion about the question of going off the gold standard. I read now from a pamphlet entitled "How to Restore Values", by Ambrose W. Benkert, in collaboration with Earl Harding. I do not know these gentlemen personally, but I have read their pamphlet, and I think it is well written. It is logical and clear, and they certainly have shown by what they have furnished here that they have been studying this subject. They say, at page 21, under the heading "Currency Depreciation":

This procedure demands that the value of the circulating medium—in our country the dollar—shall be brought below parity with gold. This cannot be accomplished as long as it is possible, on demand, to exchange currency for gold, dollar for dollar. It requires a suspension of specie payment, or, as it is popularly called, "going off the gold basis", or "abandoning the gold standard."

"Going off gold" is a misnomer, inasmuch as the Government does not abandon the use of gold as a metallic reserve or as a foundation for its currency system; nor does suspension of specie payment affect the use of gold for settlement of international balances.

I think it is well to keep in mind, and it is quite understood, when people talk about abandoning the gold standard, going off gold, and so forth, that they think gold is absolutely discarded. We are still on the gold base and gold is the foundation of our currency. It must be used in all international settlements.

I was going to speak about the subject of what some call inflation, but it may be called expansion, it may be called depreciation of the gold dollar.

The primary objection to any arbitrary and immediate reduction of the gold content of the dollar arises from the impossibility of determining in advance what amount of depreciation is necessary to restore fair price levels.

That, I think, is true.

Since the war many important nations have reduced the weight of gold in their monetary units, but in no case was it done until actual depreciation of the currency had taken place following the country's abandonment of the gold standard and not until such depreciation had restored relatively fair price levels within the country. Revaluation of the currency in terms of gold was then based upon the generally accepted sound ratio between the volume of currency and the amount of the country's gold reserves. In France, under this procedure, the weight of gold in the franc was reduced by four fifths; in Italy, in the lira, by three fourths.

While approximately 30 other nations are off the gold standard at present and the currency in each has depreciated, none of them has redefined the gold content of its monetary unit. In the experience of these nations, and not in the realm of theory, lies the answers to the questions:

1. What effect does currency depreciation have upon domestic price levels and prosperity?
2. How can depreciation be best accomplished?

We have observed the operation of currency depreciation during years of recurring and prolonged visits in 16 foreign countries, including all the leading nations of Europe and South America.

I am reading from page 23:

Opponents of currency depreciation usually cite as a warning example of what happened in Germany.

We have heard repeated here over and over again the alarming results experienced in Germany. Quite a dramatic performance was furnished us when the Senator from Michigan offered the Senator from Pennsylvania a hundred billion German marks and the Senator from Pennsylvania generously exchanged for them 10,000 Russian rubles. Of course these currencies all go to smash. Take Russia, for instance. What were the conditions there, and what are they now, for that matter? There has been one revolution after another and no stable government. We could not expect any kind of currency to last. The ruble took a tailspin and a crash.

As to Germany, quite a different situation existed, and still the circumstances were most extraordinary. Right at the close of the terrible war property values went down to the very bottom.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. FLETCHER. Certainly.

Mr. REED. The Senator is Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, and is an expert on this subject. I wonder whether the Senator would be willing to give us an illustration or a definition of the term "unsound money." What kind of currency would the Senator consider to be unsound?

Mr. FLETCHER. That is rather a large order.

Mr. REED. Would the Senator consider the greenbacks issued during the Civil War to be unsound currency?

Mr. FLETCHER. I can say this with reference to the greenbacks they were issued in order to help prosecute the war. They served their purpose, and they were being redeemed. The Budget of the country was balanced, and then Congress placed greenbacks on a parity with gold. There never has been any trouble about the greenbacks. They are just as good money as we have anywhere.

Mr. REED. They sold down to 35 cents on the dollar.

Mr. FLETCHER. Liberty bonds sold down to 80, but now they are worth 102.

Mr. REED. The question is, Are greenbacks sound money, or unsound?

Mr. FLETCHER. The greenbacks today are perfectly sound money, absolutely sound, and have always been sound, in my judgment.

Mr. REED. Were the greenbacks of the Civil War sound money?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think they were. They had back of them the assets of the Nation. They never failed anybody at any time. They were being redeemed. There was no reserve back of them, but they were being redeemed in regular order when they were put upon a gold basis.

Mr. REED. Then the greenbacks are sound money. Does the Senator consider the unlimited coinage of silver to be a movement in the direction of sound money?

Mr. FLETCHER. I would not say unlimited coinage. I would not say unlimited issues of any kind of money.

Mr. REED. Then the Senator would not consider the Wheeler amendment a compliance with the Democratic pledge to maintain sound money at all hazards, would he?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not know just how far the Wheeler amendment goes.

Mr. REED. The Wheeler amendment expressly provides for the unlimited coinage of silver.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think that is rather risky.

Mr. REED. That is hardly a compliance with the Democratic pledge, is it?

Mr. FLETCHER. I should not like to say that there ought to be unlimited issues of any kind.

Mr. REED. I am very glad the Senator has given us his opinion on that point. Does the Senator consider it is a move in the direction of sound money to cut the gold content of the dollar in half?

Mr. FLETCHER. That depends on circumstances. It might be perfectly sound for domestic purposes, for instance, internally, and might not be sound externally.

Mr. REED. Then, that depends on circumstances?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator consider that to pay off our Liberty bonds in gold of a new and different standard of value is a compliance with our pledge to pay in gold of the present standard of value?

Mr. FLETCHER. I should not think so, unless everything else is put on the same gold basis, not only here but everywhere throughout the world.

Mr. REED. Every one of our outstanding bonds has in it the promise to pay in gold dollars of the standard of value at the time those bonds were issued. Does the Senator regard it as an honest thing to do, to pay in gold dollars of only half that standard?

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator is now asking me something that is entirely supposititious. I do not think anybody contemplates that.

Mr. REED. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] contemplates it. He said so on Friday.

Mr. FLETCHER. He said that we did not now have in our possession enough gold to redeem all the obligations of the Government which are payable in gold.

Mr. REED. Oh, he went beyond that; he said he did not expect that we would pay the Liberty bonds in gold dollars of the present standard of value. He said we would not comply with our promise.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not think the Senator from Pennsylvania quite understood him in that regard.

Mr. REED. I am quoting him fairly. I was so shocked that I asked him to repeat his statement, and he did so.

Mr. FLETCHER. I thought he just said what Judge Farwell said in England, that we did not have one third enough gold to pay our gold obligations.

Mr. REED. That was true at the time we issued the bonds. We issued more bonds than there was gold in all the world.

Mr. FLETCHER. Absolutely.

Mr. REED. But until last week it was never suggested that we were not going to perform our promise to pay in gold.

Mr. FLETCHER. I heard the very able speech of the Senator from Nevada and I did not get that impression from it. I do not agree with that expression. I think we ought to pay just as we agreed to pay.

Mr. REED. I respect the Senator for that sentiment.

Mr. FLETCHER. I feel that way, but the Senator is taking me away from my line of thought. I was going to speak about Germany.

The money was progressively depreciated by a series of ever-increasing issues of currency until it finally became worthless. What started these emissions of currency and caused their continuance?

In the first instance, after the World War, the issuance of more currency was made necessary by the demands of the Allies for delivery of reparations "in kind." For example: A demand was made for delivery of 100,000 cows. The German Government was forced to find money with which to buy them from its own citizens. This was obtained by the issuance of Government Treasury notes which were discounted at the Reichsbank in the same way as our Federal Reserve bank discounts or buys United States Treasury bills. This operation, of course, expanded the German currency, but a tax was promptly levied to retire the Government's notes and automatically contract the currency issued against them.

Before this tax was collected Allies demanded delivery of a tremendous tonnage of coal. The German Government was compelled to repeat the same operation as with the cows. These demands for deliveries "in kind" continued until the value of the currency of Germany was wrecked.

Somewhat similar developments occurred in Austria and Hungary, but they did not lead to the extremes reached in Germany, because the demands were relatively less.

Those were extraordinary conditions and the explanation of why German currency finally became valueless is that the demands of the Allies were such that it was an utter impossibility to comply with them without flooding the country with paper issues.

Since 1929 there have been some illuminating examples applicable to our own condition, which are found in those countries which have depreciated their currencies during the existing economic crisis.

Argentina: Gold payments were suspended on December 16, 1929.

That was quite a little time ago, and they have had time enough to find out what it means.

At that time the Argentine currency was backed by a gold reserve of approximately 78 percent. Abandonment of the gold standard was deliberate, in order to depreciate the currency and raise internal price levels of Argentina's principal products, wheat, wool, meat, etc., in terms of Argentine pesos, to a fairer level with taxes, debt burden, and other inflexible items.

I think these are very pertinent examples and we ought to learn something from the lessons they afford.

There has been no expansion or inflation of currency. The gold reserves have been reduced to approximately 45 percent coverage for the currency, due to the necessity for making large payments abroad for interest and principal of external debts. The balance of trade, while increasingly favorable, has not been sufficient to create the amount of foreign exchange necessary to meet these debt services.

The peso has depreciated approximately 50 percent in terms of gold, but it has been maintained at that ratio for more than a year and a half. In consequence, the Argentine producer of wheat, for example, is receiving twice as many pesos for his wheat as he would be receiving were the peso linked to gold; but his peso has lost none of its value in paying taxes, interest, freight charges, etc. The wave of bankruptcies, foreclosures, evictions, and other deflationary disasters which has overtaken us has not engulfed them. Further depreciation of the peso could undoubtedly be brought about, if desired, by increasing or inflating the currency; but this is entirely under control of the Argentine Government.

That is an important lesson.

Australia: So long as the currency was linked to the British pound sterling and Great Britain remained on the gold standard, Australia was suffering the deflationary ills which characterize our present situation. Ranch mortgages were being foreclosed; bankruptcy was rampant and property generally was being handed over to creditors. The Government budget was unbalanced, trade was demoralized, and the state of mind bordered on fear and panic.

With abandonment of the gold standard by Great Britain, the Australian pound followed suit and has since been depreciated still further than the British pound. Since "going off gold" the Federal Government of Australia not only has balanced its budget but enjoys a surplus; trade has revived; the Government's credit abroad has been improved, and the internal price level fairly well ironed out.

Recent visitors to Australia with whom we have discussed developments state that the country is buoyantly optimistic and has undergone a revolution in sentiment and feeling. The amount of depreciation of the currency is under effective control by the Government.

Now take Canada—

Unofficially Canada went off the gold basis over a year ago. None of the woeful consequences predicted for our own country, should we abandon gold, has taken place in Canada. There is a growing conviction there that the depreciation of Canadian currency, which recently approximated 20 percent, should be carried much farther so as to restore a more balanced equation in Canada between the flexible and inflexible items.

Take Great Britain—

Specie payment was suspended by Great Britain in September 1931. The currency has depreciated approximately one third in terms of gold. Generally speaking, the amount of depreciation has been under continuous and effective control by the Government. There has been no inflation of the currency.

Commodity and raw material prices within the country have resisted the downward trend of gold prices abroad, and in some items have risen. The price level in general has acted consistently with the theory of currency depreciation. Leading bankers and officials of the British Government are opposed to resuming the gold standard and are mainly concerned with holding down the price level of the currency so as to continue to assist foreign trade and effectuate stabilization of the internal price level.

These authorities say—

During the first 9 months of 1932 the steel production of the United Kingdom had increased by 1.8 percent over the corresponding period in 1931, whereas it had declined by 38 percent in Germany, 32 percent in France, and 50 percent in America.

Sweden: The gold standard was abandoned, and Sweden created a scientifically managed currency which is operating with admirable results and is enthusiastically acclaimed by the population.

Japan: After abandonment of the gold standard, Japan experienced internal prosperity, a cessation of farm foreclosures, and an increase in foreign trade. One of the leading parties in the Diet deliberately adopted the policy of further depreciating the yen to a point where the internal price level would represent a balance fair to all.

EFFECTS OF CURRENCY DEPRECIATION

Advocates of currency depreciation are also vitally concerned with the restoration of property and securities values which have been impaired or destroyed by the deflationary process.

They point out that such price recovery follows automatically the reestablishment of business and prosperity incident to the raising of the flexible items to balance with the inflexibles. Thus property and securities values tend to return to the level which existed before the deflation began.

We must concede, for it is recognized everywhere, that—

The credit of such Governments as Canada, Argentina, Australia, and Great Britain, now functioning with depreciated currencies, has not been destroyed; to the contrary, it has been improved internally and externally. Their banks and insurance companies, as well as individual holders of fixed interest-bearing obligations, have not suffered the disasters which have been inflicted upon our institutions and individuals through adherence to the policy of deflation. Currency depreciation has restored solvency to individuals and soundness to fiduciary institutions. Internal obligations in such countries are selling at normal levels.

There is not any doubt that, as this summary of the experience of other nations indicates, the only feasible solution is the suspension of specie payments—and that we have done—and an adequate depreciation of currency if the evils of continued deflation are to be avoided.

Experience has shown that suspension of specie payment—that is, abandonment of the gold standard—leads to a depreciation of the currency.

If mere "going off gold" does not produce the desired degree of depreciation—

These authorities say—

It should be brought about to the required extent by an expansion of the currency under strict Government control.

One of the best methods for Government control is through the operation of the Federal Reserve bank in the Government securities market.

And that is provided for by the pending amendment—

Currency or credit, or both, can be expanded by buying Government securities—

That is also provided for by the amendment—and contracted by selling them.

And there is not any question that that is perfectly sound. These authors, in discussing this subject, further say at page 30:

A monetary system so controlled is known as a "managed currency" system. The advocates of a "managed currency" recognize that it is impossible to maintain a specific price relationship for each particular commodity; they are concerned with maintaining a stable relationship between the average of commodity prices and the prices of the inflexible items, such as taxes and debt burden.

For the past 30 years the United States Bureau of Labor has recorded the wholesale prices of all important commodities, comprising currently 784 items. It has scientifically adjusted the importance of each commodity to economic life and, on the basis of such adjustments, has arrived at a true average price, which is known as "the Labor Bureau's price index." As of March 11, 1933, this index stood at 60.2, based on average prices for 1926 equaling 100—that is, the average wholesale prices were 60.2 percent of the average prices of 1926. This commodity price index measures the general level of prices of commodities and affords a scientific basis for establishing and maintaining a stable and fair ratio between the flexible and inflexible items of the economic equation.

The advocates of a "managed currency" would make the maintenance of such a fair price ratio mandatory through appropriate legislation.

The dollar, they argue, has to be rubber either as to weight or as to value. It cannot have a fixed weight and also a fixed value. A scientific money is one with a constant buying power for all commodities rather than a fixed weight of one commodity (gold). Our whole tax and debt structure rests on commodity prices. If this structure is to be kept sound, either for the creditor or the debtor, it is commodity prices that need to be kept stable, not the weight of gold for which a dollar will exchange.

A solution of the problem of immediate unemployment relief transcends the power of private initiative or municipal and State programs. It calls for prompt Federal action.

Permanent solution of the problem of unemployment rests not only on the maintenance of fair price levels but also, in the opinion of many, will require coordinate action by the Federal Government to control scientifically the hours of labor and the increase of productive capacity, as well as social insurance to meet the increasing unemployment dislocations of the machine age.

These are collateral problems for which intelligent social planning must find solutions. They lie outside the scope of this discussion.

Putting first things first, the maladjustment of price levels is of primary importance and should be the first point of attack.

This amendment would enable us to do that.

Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate longer. I have a number of telegrams and letters from various portions of the country. I am going to venture to read one from Tampa, Fla., as follows:

TAMPA, FLA., April 22, 1933.

Senator DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,

Washington, D.C.:

Strong sentiment here favors immediate but controlled inflation and grant of power to regulate gold content of dollar. Arm President with power to negotiate international agreement for more ample medium of exchange and stop disastrous struggle among nations for gold. Hope aroused by recent events and if disappointed, conditions will be much worse than formerly.

R. H. LIGGETT.

E. P. TALIAFERRO.

R. A. LIGGETT.

These gentlemen are prominent business men and bankers of Tampa. That is the kind of expression I am receiving on the subject. I think it is encouraging. I believe the people have absolute faith in the accomplishment of the President if we put this power in his hands.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I have the attention of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY]? Some days ago it was announced by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] that in his opinion a vote could be reached on the pending amendment not later than Wednesday, which is tomorrow. I am going to ask unanimous consent that after the hour of 4 o'clock tomorrow debate be limited on the bill now before the Senate so that no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 15 minutes on the bill or any amendment or motion that may be pending or offered or made with reference thereto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I share the view of the Senator from Pennsylvania that a vote may be had tomorrow on the so-called "inflation amendment." I am advised by two Members on this side of the aisle, who are now absent on account of public business, that they would oppose and have asked me to oppose any consent agreement at this time for a limitation of debate.

I am as anxious as the able leader of the majority for a vote upon the amendment and also upon the bill. I want to cooperate with him to that extent. However, I realize the necessity of open debate, unlimited by any agreement of this kind. I know only of three other Senators on this side of the aisle who desire to discuss the amendment; but until the discussion proceeds tomorrow, and until those Members may have opportunity fully and freely to express themselves, I must at this time object to the request for unanimous consent submitted by the Senator from Arkansas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I desire to enter notice of a motion to reconsider the vote taken on last Saturday by which what is known as the "Wagner amendment" was agreed to and the vote by which the amendment known as the "Shipstead amendment" to the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] was agreed to. I merely desire to enter notice of that motion now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The notice of the motion will be entered.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I should like to secure recognition so as to be able to speak tomorrow upon the convening of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas is recognized.

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield now to the Senator from Arkansas.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider executive business.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Reports of committees are in order.

Mr. TRAMMELL, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported favorably the nomination of Capt. Ernest J. King to be Chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics, in the Department of the Navy, with the rank of rear admiral, for a term of 4 years, which was ordered to be placed on the calendar.

GREAT LAKES-ST. LAWRENCE DEEP WATERWAY TREATY

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further reports of committees, the calendar is in order.

The legislative clerk announced Executive C, Seventy-second Congress, second session, a treaty between the United States and the Dominion of Canada for the completion of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence deep waterway, signed on July 18, 1932, as first in order on the calendar.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The treaty will be passed over.

TREATY WITH MEXICO—RECTIFICATION OF THE RIO GRANDE

The legislative clerk read Executive E, Seventy-second Congress, second session, a convention between the United States of America and the United Mexican States for the rectification of the Rio Grande in the El Paso-Juarez Valley, signed at Mexico City on February 1, 1933.

Mr. McNARY. That may go over.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, was objection made to the ratification of the treaty?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection was made.

Mr. McNARY. I objected in the absence of the ranking minority member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. I think in his absence no action should be taken upon the treaty.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me say that we are very anxious to have the treaty ratified. It has been unanimously reported by the committee. If I had known that we were going to have an executive session, I would have communicated with the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I happen to be a member of that committee. So far as I know, no member of the Foreign Relations Committee is opposed to the ratification of the treaty.

Mr. McNARY. In view of that statement, the Senator from Pennsylvania being a member of the committee, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. REED. It is within the power of any Senator to move for reconsideration in case my statement should be incorrect.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I may add to what has been said by the Senator from Pennsylvania that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] was present when the treaty was ordered to be reported, and indicated his acquiescence.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the treaty, which had been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with an amendment.

The amendment was, in the last line of article V, to strike out "November" and in lieu thereof to insert "March", so as to make the treaty read:

CONVENTION BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA AND THE UNITED MEXICAN STATES FOR THE RECTIFICATION OF THE RIO GRANDE (RIO BRAVO DEL NORTE) IN THE EL PASO-JUAREZ VALLEY

The United States of America and the United Mexican States having taken into consideration the studies and engineering plans carried by the International Boundary Commission, and specially directed to relieve the towns and agricultural lands located within the El Paso-Juarez Valley from flood dangers, and securing at the same time the stabilization of the international boundary line, which, owing to the present meandering nature of the river it has not been possible to hold within the mean line of its channel; and fully conscious of the great importance involved in this matter, both from a local point of view as well as from a good international understanding, have resolved to undertake, in common agreement and cooperation, the necessary works as provided in Minute 129 (dated July 31, 1930) of the International Boundary Commission, approved by the two Governments in the manner provided by treaty; and in order to give legal and final form to the project, have named as their plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States of America, J. Reuben Clark, Jr., Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Mexico; and

The President of the United Mexican States, Doctor José Manuel Puig Cassauranc, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs;

Who, after having communicated their respective full powers and having found them in due and proper form, have agreed on the following articles:

I

The Government of the United States of America and the Government of the United Mexican States have agreed to carry out the Rio Grande rectification works provided for in Minute 129 of the International Boundary Commission and annexes thereto, approved by both Governments, in that part of the river beginning at the point of intersection of the present river channel with the located line as shown in map, exhibit No. 2 of Minute 129 of said Commission (said intersection being south of Monument 15 of the boundary polygon of Córdoba Island) and ending at Box Canyon.

The terms of this convention and of Minute 129 shall apply exclusively to river rectification within the limits above set out.

The two Governments shall study such further minutes and regulations as may be submitted by the International Boundary Commission and, finding them acceptable, shall approve same in order to carry out the material execution of the works in accordance with the terms of this Convention. The works shall be begun after this Convention becomes effective.

II

For the execution of the works there shall be followed the procedure outlined in the technical study of the project. The works shall be begun and shall be carried on primarily from the lower end, but at the same time and for reasons of necessity work may be carried on in the upper sections of the valley.

III

In consideration of the difference existing in the benefits derived by each of the contracting countries by the rectification works, the proratable cost of the works will be defrayed by both Governments in the proportion of eighty-eight per cent (88%) by the United States of America and of twelve per cent (12%) by the United Mexican States.

IV

The direction and inspection of the works shall be under the International Boundary Commission, each Government employing for the construction of that portion of the work it undertakes, the agency that in accordance with its administrative organization should carry on the work.

V

The International Boundary Commission shall survey the ground to be used as the right of way to be occupied by the rectified channel, as well as the parts to be cut from both sides of said channel. Within thirty days after a cut has been made, it shall mark the boundaries on the ground, there being a strict superficial compensation in total of the areas taken from each country. Once the corresponding maps have been prepared, the Commission shall eliminate these areas from the provisions of Article II of the Convention of November 12, 1884, in similar manner to that adopted in the Convention of March 20, 1905, for the elimination of bancos.

VI

For the sole purpose of equalizing areas, the axis of the rectified channel shall be the international boundary line. The parcels of land that, as a result of these cuts or of merely taking the new axis of the channel as the boundary line, shall remain on the American side of the axis of the rectified channel shall be the territory and property of the United States of America, and the territory and property of the United Mexican States those on the opposite side, each Government mutually surrendering in favor of the other acquired rights over such parcels.

In the completed rectified river channel—both in its normal and constructed sections—and in any completed portion thereof, the permanent international boundary shall be the middle of the deepest channel of the river within such rectified river channel.

VII

Lands within the rectified channel, as well as those which, upon segregation, pass from the territory of one country to that of the other, shall be acquired in full ownership by the Government in whose territory said lands are at the present time; and the lands passing as provided in Article V hereof, from one country to the other, shall pass to each Government respectively in absolute sovereignty and ownership, and without encumbrance of any kind, and without private national titles.

VIII

The construction of works shall not confer on the contracting parties any property rights in or any jurisdiction over the territory of the other. The completed work shall constitute part of the territory and shall be the property of the country within which it lies.

Each Government shall respectively secure title, control, and jurisdiction of its half of the flood channel, from the axis of that channel to the outer edge of the acquired right of way on its own side, as this channel is described and mapped in the International Boundary Commission Minute number 129, and the maps, plans, and specifications attached thereto, which Minute, maps, plans, and specifications are attached hereto and made a part of this Convention. Each Government shall permanently retain full title, control, and jurisdiction of that part of the flood channel constructed as described, from the deepest channel of the running water in the rectified channel to the outer edge of such acquired right of way.

IX

Construction shall be suspended upon request of either Government, if it be proved that the works are being constructed outside of the conditions herein stipulated or fixed in the approved plan.

X

In the event there be presented private or national claims for the construction or maintenance of the rectified channel, or for causes connected with the works of rectification, each Government shall assume and adjust such claims as arise within its own territory.

XI

The International Boundary Commission is charged hereafter with the maintenance and preservation of the rectified channel. To this end the Commission shall submit, for the approval of both Governments, the regulations that should be issued to make effective said maintenance.

XII

Both Governments bind themselves to exempt from import duties all materials, implements, equipment, and supplies intended for the works, and passing from one country to the other.

XIII

The present Convention is drawn up both in the English and Spanish languages.

XIV

The present Convention shall be ratified by the High Contracting Parties in accordance with their respective laws, and the ratifications shall be exchanged in the City of Washington as soon as possible. This Convention will come into force from the date of the exchange of ratifications.

In witness whereof the Plenipotentiaries mentioned above have signed this Convention and have affixed their respective seals.

Done in duplicate at the City of Mexico this first day of February one thousand nine hundred and thirty-three.

J. REUBEN CLARK, JR.

[SEAL.]

PUIG

The amendment was agreed to.

The treaty was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The resolution of ratification was read, as follows:

Resolved (two thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive E, Seventy-second Congress, second session, a convention between the United States of America and the United Mexican States for the rectification of the Rio Grande in the El Paso-Juarez Valley, signed at Mexico City on February 1, 1933, with the following amendment:

In the last line of article V strike out "November" and in place thereof insert "March."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRATTON in the chair). The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of the treaty as amended? [Putting the question.] Two thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution of ratification is adopted and the treaty as amended is ratified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there are no further reports of committees, nominations are in order.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Daniel W. MacCormack, of New York, to be Commissioner General of Immigration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, if there is no objection, I ask that the President be notified of the confirmation of the nomination of Daniel W. MacCormack, of New York, to be Commissioner General of Immigration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified.

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Christian J. Peoples to be Paymaster General and Chief, Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, with the rank of rear admiral, from April 29, 1933, for a term of 4 years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Theodore A. Walters, of Idaho, to be First Assistant Secretary, Department of the Interior.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Thomas F. Thomas, of Utah, to be registrar of the land office, Salt Lake City, Utah.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of James B. Young to be consul general.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed. That completes the calendar.

The Senate resumed legislative session.

ALLEGHENY RIVER BRIDGES, PENNSYLVANIA

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (H.R. 4332) granting the consent of Congress to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Allegheny River, at a point near the Forest-Venango county line, in Tionesta Township, and in the county of Forest, and in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was read, considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge, and approaches thereto across the Allegheny River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, near the Forest-Venango county line, in Tionesta Township, Forest County, in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters" approved March 23, 1906.

Sec. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce, I also report back favorably without amendment the bill (H.R. 4225) granting the consent of Congress to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Allegheny River at or near Parkers Landing, in the county of Armstrong, Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was read, considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge and approaches thereto across the Allegheny River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Parkers Landing, in the county of Armstrong, Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906.

Sec. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I move that the Senate stand in recess until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will not the Senator make it 12 o'clock?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I cannot do so in view of our inability to secure an agreement to limit debate.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 27 minutes p.m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Wednesday, April 26, 1933, at 11 o'clock a.m.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate April 25 (legislative day of Apr. 17), 1933

PROMOTION IN THE NAVY

Christian J. Peoples to be Paymaster General and Chief, Bureau of Supplies and Accounts.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, APRIL 25, 1933

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Reverend John Compton Ball, pastor of the Metropolitan Baptist Church, Washington, D.C., offered the following prayer:

O Thou Eternal God, we bow before Thee in recognition of Thy majesty and the wonders of Thy wisdom, the long-goings of Thy love, and we pray that Thy long-goings today may meet our shortcomings, that the union between our souls and Thyself may be complete, and that Thou mayest have Thy way with us in all that we say or think or do. We pray that Thy blessing rest upon the President of these United States, the Senate, and especially on this House in all its deliberations. Bless our Speaker and every Member, and in these trying times when we have so much to think about, so many important decisions to make, we pray, above all, for the guidance of Thy holy spirit. In the name of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H.J.Res. 135. Joint resolution to amend section 2 of the act approved February 4, 1933, to provide for loans to farmers for crop production and harvesting during the year 1933, and for other purposes.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

I withhold the point, Mr. Speaker, for the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] to submit a unanimous-consent request.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Messrs. PERKINS and BROWNING may be excused from attendance upon the sessions of the House for 2 weeks. They will be absent attending to the public business.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I renew my point of order that there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and sixty-one Members present; not a quorum.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 20]

Bankhead	Cartwright	Ford	Montague
Beck	Celler	Gambrill	Muldowney
Blanton	Christianson	Gifford	Perkins
Brand	Cravens	Glover	Peterson
Britten	Crowther	Hoeppel	Sabath
Brooks	Ditter	Hornor	Scrugham
Brown, Ky.	Dowell	Kennedy, Md.	Waldron
Browning	Duncan, Mo.	Kennedy, N.Y.	Warren
Buckbee	Eagle	Kleberg	Wood, Ga.
Burke, Calif.	Englebright	Lamneck
Cannon, Wis.	Fiesinger	Lindsay

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and eighty-nine Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

On motion of Mr. BYRNS, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

MUSCLE SHOALS

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the reservation of a point of order I made yesterday on the motion to recommit; and now, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold that a moment?

Mr. McSWAIN. I am very sorry I cannot. The House insists that we have action.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RANKIN. Would it be permissible to ask unanimous consent at this point for a limited amount of time for each side, say 10 or 20 or 30 minutes to the side, to explain the difference between these two bills, the Norris bill, which I am offering in my motion to recommit, and the Hill bill, for which I am asking that the Norris bill be substituted?

The SPEAKER. If the previous question is ordered, it will be in order to ask unanimous consent to do that.

Mr. McSWAIN. I can save my friend's breath. I shall be obliged to object to the request.

Mr. RANKIN. I would like to save the gentleman from South Carolina some breath.

Mr. McSWAIN. I have not circularized the House, either.

Mr. RANKIN. I have. It was the only way I could get the facts before the Membership, as a result of the gag rule.

Mr. McSWAIN. And we will find out the truth about this before it is all over.

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; we will. I wish the House knew the facts now.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

Mr. RANKIN and Mr. SNELL demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 68, nays 327, not voting 36, as follows:

So the bill was passed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call my name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. RAINEY, and he answered "aye", as above recorded.

The following additional pairs were announced:

On the vote:

Mr. Doughton (for) with Mr. Crowther (against).
 Mr. Bankhead (for) with Mr. Beck (against).
 Mr. Warren (for) with Mr. Perkins (against).
 Mr. Buckbee (for) with Mr. Englebright (against).

Until further notice:

Mr. Blanton with Mr. Dowell.
 Mr. Gambrill with Mr. Gifford.
 Mr. Burke of California with Mr. Thurston.
 Mr. Scrugham with Mr. Christianson.

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Speaker, the following Members are unavoidably absent; if present, they would vote "aye" on the passage of the bill: Mr. SABATH, Mr. FIESINGER, Mr. CELLER, Mr. MONTAGUE, Mr. SISSON, Mr. BROWN of Kentucky, Mr. PETERSON, Mr. LINDSAY, Mr. BRAND, Mr. KENNEDY of New York, Mr. CANNON of Wisconsin, Mr. BROWNING, Mr. KLEBERG, and Mr. HORNOR.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday, expecting that the vote would be had that day, I had a pair with the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. DOUGHTON. He is not present today, and I will allow that pair to stand and vote "present."

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, under the statement I was compelled to make in order to gain recognition to offer my motion to recommit and substitute the Norris bill for the present measure, I am not permitted to vote for the bill. So I withhold my vote and answer "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. McSWAIN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS—MUSCLE SHOALS

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have 5 legislative days to extend their own remarks on the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, it is my purpose to discuss only one of the many features of the bill creating the Tennessee Valley authority which is before us, and a feature to which apparently not much attention has been given. While it may not appear important at first glance, I believe a consideration of this subject and what is proposed will bear out my concern in the suggested legislation.

I have reference to the navigation features of the bill. The express purpose of the legislation, among other things, is to improve navigation in the Tennessee River, and to carry out that and other purposes there is created a body corporate by the name of the "Tennessee Valley Authority of the United States", with full rights and powers necessary for the transaction of the business of the corporation and to fulfill the provisions of the act.

The bill provides that this authority—shall have power to acquire real estate for the construction of * * * navigation projects at any point along the Tennessee River or any of its tributaries * * * shall have power to construct * * * navigation projects in the Tennessee River.

And it is—declared to be the policy * * * to provide cheaper navigation in the Tennessee River.

I have quoted from section 4 of the bill.

In section 17 it is stated:

In order to enable * * * the board to carry out the authority * * * conferred * * * it is authorized and empowered
* * * to exercise the right of eminent domain.

Thus it is apparent that one of the functions of the authority is to provide for navigation on the Tennessee River, and in the absence of any provisions to the contrary is to have full responsibility for such improvement.

It is true in section 16 of the bill the Secretary of War is authorized to construct the Cove Creek Dam and provides such construction shall be not only for the purpose of "generation of electric power" but—for the purpose of promoting navigation by increasing and regulating the flow of the Clinch River and the Tennessee River below.

Aside from this specific authorization and direction of the War Department for the improvement of Cove Creek Dam, all responsibility and authority for carrying out the navigation provisions of the act is vested entirely with the officials of the—Tennessee Valley authority, an instrumentality and agency of the Government of the United States.

And just as it is apparent that the provisions of the act place the full responsibility for the development of navigation on the Tennessee River in the hands of the authority, to the same extent it can be judged the authority will proceed only in the interests of the Tennessee Valley. This, of course, means such development will be made with little regard for national plans of waterway development, of which it would have but meager knowledge and in which it would have only a secondary interest.

Now let us consider for a moment the policy which the Government has practiced in the past in the development of navigation. We are all familiar with the work of the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army and realize the principal duties of that branch of the Army in peace times are in flood control and rivers and harbors work throughout the country. For many years this navigation work has been intrusted to the Corps of Engineers, made up of highly trained officers, under a policy which has become more and more free from outside interference and which has developed a thorough understanding of the water-borne commerce requirements of the entire Nation and a consequent familiarity with this problem.

Since 1902, when the basic law for consideration and study of specific projects was adopted, the practice outlining the procedure for the study, report, and adoption of navigation projects has been much amplified and made more specific by legislation. Today the procedure for the adoption of a project requested of Congress for rivers and harbors work calls for a preliminary examination to be made by the engineer in charge of the district in which the project is located to ascertain the probable public usefulness of the proposed improvement. The report of the district engineer goes, in turn, for approval to the division engineer, the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, the Chief of Engineers, and the Secretary of War. If recommendations are favorable, an estimate of costs is authorized, and this follows the same route, finally being transmitted to Congress for authorization and appropriation if it is indicated the project can be advantageously carried forward. After authorization and appropriation by Congress, the work is then carried on by the same group which studied and recommended the improvement and is familiar with the problem in all its details.

It is under this procedure that the great activities of the Government in the development of navigation have been pursued for the past several years, and, contrary to criticisms which have been heard, this work has been done in a manner distinctly favorable to the Government in efficiency and in cost. When it is remembered this organization engaged in rivers and harbors work comprises about 50 districts spread throughout the country, the activities of the Engineers may well be considered an irreducible minimum of organization, as well as a maximum of efficiency in problems of this character.

Today our waterway development is carried on with the requirements of the country as a whole in mind in order that the ultimate development and improvement of our rivers and harbors may mean a uniform system of waterway transportation. The desirability for this policy of improvement is apparent, and the results to be obtained equally clear.

It is now proposed that the practice of many years of having all navigation projects throughout the country handled by one branch of our Government, and with one definite purpose in view, be disregarded by the legislation under discussion, and the Tennessee Valley authority be given full charge and responsibility for the development of one of our great waterways.

Irrespective of the fact that the engineers have studied the development of the Tennessee River for over 10 years, having expended over a million dollars in surveys and studies of this territory, regardless of the fact that Congress has approved of the project submitted by the War Department for the improvement of the river from Knoxville to its mouth, under plans submitted by the engineers, and has authorized $5,000,000 to be expended in accordance with those plans, this bill proposes to place the entire authority for the development of navigation in the Tennessee Valley in the hands of a newly constituted board to carry out in such a manner as that board deems proper, without an estimate or plan of what is contemplated, and without any instructions to conform to the general scheme of development of water-borne commerce. Further, all acts, or parts in conflict with this authority, are repealed, although it is only fair to say the able chairman of the Military Affairs Committee has limited such repeal so that it applies only so far as other acts conflict with operations proposed by this legislation.

It is this disregard of existing practice to which I desire to call attention and voice my objections to the unnecessary duplication of effort and expense at a time when we are calling for economy, as well as to the abandonment of past practice and experience and the general plan of development of our waterways.

We recently have had instances of proposed legislation under which authority placed by law on the Engineers and on Congress was attempted to be disregarded. Today we have an even more flagrant violation of this practice. The question naturally arises, what will result from this tendency? If similar activities, such as the Tennessee Valley Act, are proposed in other parts of the country, it is fair to assume this same policy of abandoning efforts for a unified system of development will be followed, with the result that in time the effectiveness of the Government, through the Corps of Engineers, in its supervision and administration of waterway development throughout the country and the desire for a unified system as a goal in waterway development will disappear.

I feel very strongly that this action would be disastrous to the waterway interests of the country and would bring a break-down of our general water-borne transportation system. I would urge all who have an interest in the furtherance of our inland waterway system, and those who believe in a general plan covering the entire country as the most practical and efficient procedure to give careful thought to this point, with a realization of what it may mean to the country in the future.

I regret that in the desire to create a new and untried instrumentality of our Government, it has been felt necessary to disregard functions and practices of the Government, which, by past performance, have proven their value and ability to render service in an able and efficient manner and which I believe should not be cast aside for something uneconomical and unsound.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I confess I look upon the bill now before the House, the so-called "Hill Muscle Shoals bill", with mixed emotions.

If this were a proposition to start the United States Government on such an enterprise as the one at Muscle Shoals, I would be found among those in opposition. I am not in favor of Government ownership, nor would I support any movement to project the Government into any original enterprise of this character, such as the much-talked-of proposal that the Government shall take over and develop the Columbia Basin reclamation project. As far as I am concerned, Government ownership will end at Muscle Shoals.

I shall vote for this bill for two reasons, the first being that it is a part of President Roosevelt's program on which he hopes to rehabilitate the country economically and to bring back prosperity to a sorely distressed nation. As a representative of a constituency that believes in President Roosevelt and wishes him well in his patriotic efforts to restore confidence and prosperity, I conceive it to be my duty to uphold his hands, even to the extent of supporting some measures about which I may have misgivings, if my opposition would obstruct or handicap his general purpose, because I believe his general purpose is in every way commendable and praiseworthy.

The people of the congressional district which I have the honor to represent admire President Roosevelt for his splendid initiative and courage. There is no division between Republicans and Democrats on that score. They have adjourned politics in order to give the President the inspiration and support he so well deserves. The Indianapolis Star, one of the ablest newspapers in the United States and one of the fairest, expressed the universal thought in its leading editorial yesterday morning when it said:

The country is standing squarely behind President Roosevelt in his efforts to cope with a serious economic and unemployment situation. The public may have doubts as to the merit of some proposals, but it is willing to accept the motive which has prompted them. * * * Attempts to improve conditions, however, seem preferable to continued drifting in the hope that betterment eventually will be forthcoming.

That editorial expresses the keynote of popular opinion about President Roosevelt. The people like him because he has initiative, because he has daring, because he does things in a courageous and big way. They know that he is human, and they expect him to make mistakes, but they believe that he is driving ahead in the direction that ultimately will lead to the salvation of the country.

President Roosevelt has said that he wants this Muscle Shoals bill passed and that if the authority which it conveys is granted he believes he can do a great deal of good for the country. He wants it to fit in with his general scheme of economic rehabilitation, as a link in the chain that leads toward recovery, and I believe it to be my duty to give to him the support he asks.

In the second place, I am for it because it simply provides for the development of property which the Government already owns and not for any new incursion into the realm of Government ownership. But someone may say, "Do you favor the entrance of Government into business?"

To that I reply, "I do not, but this is a case where the Government already has entered business."

The Government has long owned the property. It has put $150,000,000 into it. The question on which we are voting today is whether the plant shall be allowed to stand and rot or whether the Government shall salvage the holdings it already has by developing and operating the property so as to bring it out of the red and put it in condition to bring some returns to the people of the United States, who are the owners. While I would have much preferred that the property be leased, efforts in that direction always have met with failure, and that alternative is not now offered to us.

I have noted with interest that Representative JOSEPH B. SHANNON, of Missouri, chairman of the celebrated "Shannon committee", and the most outstanding exponent in the United States Congress of the doctrine that the Government shall stay out of business, is supporting this bill. He evidently feels as I do that in this particular case the Government should do something with its white elephant except to permit it to eat hay at the expense of the taxpayers, and perhaps Mr. SHANNON also shares the common desire to help President Roosevelt in carrying out his program.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, following the close of the World War the tabulated figures of the cost of Muscle Shoals disclosed that $150,000,000 had been spent of the money of American taxpayers.

President Woodrow Wilson had looked into the future, as the following words indicate:

It is not merely a war-time measure—

He said in speaking of the Muscle Shoals project—

When the need for battle munitions is ended we shall have the plant making fertilizer for our farmers.

But the years came and went with selfish interests robbing this Nation of a potential economic giant, and the longest dam in the world, with its accompanying nitrate plants, has, like the fictional giant from Gulliver's tales, remained prostrate while political pygmies tightened their cords of pettiness.

In the May issue of the American Magazine we are told vividly by Morris Markley of his visit to the ghostlike section of northern Alabama where Muscle Shoals lies. In his interviews with the natives he asked them the following question:

"Suppose", I said, "that we could get the project going one way or another—power actually coming from the generators, and fertilizer from the nitrate plant. What would happen? What would it mean?"

My friend thought for a moment. Then he said, "I think that cheaper power would stimulate all sorts of small local industries. Cheaper and better fertilizers would make the farmer's problem simpler.

"One result of the operation of Muscle Shoals which, I think, would affect people everywhere in the country would be its influence on private power companies. You know, there's been a lot of talk about these companies. They have been accused of trying to monopolize the Nation's power resources, of using these resources for their own gain rather than for the benefit of the public, of charging unwarranted rates, and so on. Here in Muscle Shoals the Government has a great chance to show by comparison how far some of these charges are true, and to give the private companies an object lesson.

"And we can't deny that it would be a wonderful thing for us here. It would put thousands of men to work. It would help us to get rid of that feeling of futility, of helplessness, that's come over us. You see, friend, it makes us folks pretty blue to remember all the energy and enthusiasm and human ingenuity which built Muscle Shoals—and to see all that enterprise thrown away. It makes us suspect that hard work and hard thinking don't count for much, after all.

"Start Muscle Shoals to working, and you do more than improve property values, set men to work, stimulate business. You restore the faith of a whole people—the people living in this part of the world."

Passage today of this measure will breathe life into a dream that was dead, and that dream will become dynamic. Success of this legislation will bring back a vision that had vanished, and that vision will become vitalized.

Effective action will mark a new beginning in an epoch-making enterprise which will become a potent part of progressive America.

Mr. GILLESPIE. Mr. Speaker, it is folly for those who oppose this bill to argue now that the Government should be kept out of business, for the reason that the Government is already engaged in and is financing all kinds of private business enterprises.

The Government has been in the business of regulating railways since 1887.

From its beginning the Government has been expending millions on rivers, harbors, canals, and all manner of internal improvements.

The Government runs barges; it is in the shipping business; it is in the aviation business; it has been granting big appropriations, sometimes called "pork-barrel appropriations", for navy yards, Army posts, and so forth; it is in the school business; in the tariff business; in the farm business by way of the Federal Farm Board and many other business bureaus erected by acts of Congress.

The Government is in the business of building and controlling public highways; the Government has jurisdiction over post roads, and owns and operates our great and useful mail transportation system, and is directly engaged in thousands of other business enterprises, and all in the interest of the people.

Why should anybody at this late time—too late—advocate that the Government should be kept out of business and the people's great Muscle Shoals turned over to a monopoly—the Power Trust, or private control of any kind?

The people have invested in Muscle Shoals the sum of 150 millions. It is bought and paid for and belongs to all of us.

Rugged individualism in America, like the law of supply and demand, has become a myth.

The law of supply and demand has been destroyed by man-made laws and differential privileges in the form of monopolies granted to favored individuals and groups.

There is no longer any free flow of commerce, because commerce is controlled by artificial man-made laws.

It started with Government regulation of railroads in 1887, when people on account of unfair freight and passenger tariffs and other abuses were compelled to turn to the Government for relief.

It was not the Socialist who got the Government into the business of running barges on some of its improved waterways.

The World War got the Government in the ship-subsidy business, and business men have clamored for mail subsidies, and certain groups have petitioned the Government to provide cheap money for shipbuilding.

Who is responsible for having the Government to send out drummers over the world to drum up business? These emissaries should be paid out of the capital of private enterprises, but the Government has been paying them; and then there is a Federal Trade Commission, and then there is the Tariff Commission and many other commissions and bureaus operated at Government expense.

Since it is a fact that the Government is actually in business, then why should it not operate for the benefit of all the people that great natural opportunity, Muscle Shoals? Why throw away 150 millions already invested in this enterprise pretending that you are keeping the Government out of business?

All must admit and none can deny that this plant would benefit the farmer by furnishing him cheap fertilizer and would benefit the artisan and workers and the general public as well if the Government operates and controls Muscle Shoals for the people.

I shall vote that way.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I will vote in favor of the motion to recommit in order to substitute the Norris bill for the pending bill.

In my campaign for election to this body, I stated to the people of my district that I favored the development of Muscle Shoals in the interests of all the people by the Federal Government, as advocated for many years by Senator GEORGE W. NORRIS, of Nebraska, and it has been my understanding, and still is, that this has also been the position of President Roosevelt. In every vote I have cast as a Member of this House, I have kept faith with the people who sent me here, and my vote on this roll call will accord squarely with the promises and pledges I made to them.

I have the highest regard for the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN] and for the author of this bill, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HILL], and if the motion to recommit does not prevail, which it probably will not, then I shall vote for their bill on its final passage, in the hope, however, that in the Senate the bill of that grand old leader in this long fight [Senator NORRIS] will be substituted. I also hope, Mr. Speaker, that this great project will be named Norris Shoals in his honor and that it will be speedily developed in the interests of all the people in the manner which has been advocated by him for more than a decade.

Mr. Speaker, I also commend our great Democratic President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, for the courageous and patriotic act he will perform when he signs the law, which has been vetoed by two former Republican Presidents. The American people from one end of the land to the other will rise up and call him blessed.

Mr. TERRELL. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that I cannot go all the way with the Democrats of the House in supporting H.R. 5081, the Muscle Shoals proposition.

The whole theory of the republican form of government is gradually being undermined, and we are substituting therefor another theory which instead of leaving the individual free to work out his own destiny in the business world is gradually encroaching on the grounds of individual activity by projecting the Government into all lines of activity.

Regardless of whether this enterprise pays or not, the principle of putting the Government into private business is wrong, and I shall oppose all laws which attempt to put the Government further into private business. Past experience proves beyond question that the Government has lost money in all ventures into private business, and taking these experiences as an example we may be sure that the Government will lose millions of dollars in this enterprise. The law cannot determine in advance how much money should properly be spent on this enterprise, and the Government stands to lose hundreds of millions of dollars besides what has already been sunk in the project. The invariable policy of the Democratic Party has been against the Government's entering the field of private industry. The Democratic platform of 1932 said:

We advocate the removal of Government from all fields of private enterprise except where necessary to develop public works and natural resources in the common interest.

What is the common interest is a debatable question.

The Government's proper function is to leave the people independent in their business transactions in all respects except to protect the weak against the strong by preventing a monopoly and prohibiting any form of coercion against individuals or weaker groups of citizens engaged in business.

I voted to recommit this bill in order to substitute the Norris bill for it for the reason that Senator NORRIS has studied the Muscle Shoals project more closely than any other Member of Congress; and if we must enact legislation of this character, I should prefer to have the law he approves.

I do not think the Government should make fertilizer or electric power in competition with private enterprises, nor do I think the Government should own and operate the railroads or other business concerns; but the Government is destined to own and operate the railroads or lose the money advanced them through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. I prefer to lose this money and also lose the hundreds of millions of dollars already spent on Muscle Shoals rather than embark on the vast scale of industry now contemplated by this bill. The Government lost the only opportunity it ever had to test the feasibility of economic production of electric power and fertilizer for sale to the public when it refused to lease this property to Henry Ford, who would have spent all the money necessary to develop it and agreed to sell the fertilizer and power at a profit of 6 or 7 percent.

I would take the Government out of the private printing industry and every other private industry, if I could do it, and return to the simple form of government contemplated by the Constitution, and followed for a hundred years before branching out into untried fields of business ventures. Our Government in those days was simple and inexpensive and answered every governmental need of the citizens and has not been improved upon by recent vast expansion of operations in business and industry conducted by boards and bureaus far removed from the people. The Government cannot save the situation by issuing billions on interest-bearing bonds to carry on public works and place future generations under bondage, for the "borrower is servant to the lender."

It is my solemn prediction, not as a prophet, but as a student of history, that this Government will not stand in its present form and method of management 100 years longer. It cannot be saved unless we retrace our steps and return to a strict compliance with the Constitution in which the authority of the three separate departments of government, legislative, executive, and judicial, is recognized and rigidly maintained and the authority of the States in all local matters is preserved inviolate.

HOME MORTGAGE RELIEF BILL

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have until midnight tonight to file a report on the home mortgage relief bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up the home mortgage relief bill tomorrow. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE], the ranking minority member on the committee, does not seem to be present at the moment, but I am prepared to say for him that an hour for general debate upon the bill is satisfactory. I submit the request upon that basis.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the home mortgage relief bill shall be in order tomorrow. Is there objection?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. A matter may come in from the Rules Committee of an emergency nature, which may not take much time, but which we had in mind calling up tomorrow. I think we might well proceed with that before debate on the home mortgage relief bill.

Mr. STEAGALL. I had understood that it was the desire of the majority leader that we should give the right of way to the home mortgage relief bill tomorrow.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I might say to the gentleman that this matter was called to our attention just recently, and I discussed it with the majority leader a short time ago.

Mr. STEAGALL. It is quite satisfactory to me to have any proposition from the Rules Committee come first.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, have the hearings on the bill been printed?

Mr. STEAGALL. They have.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. By giving unanimous consent today to confine debate to 1 hour will we be estopped from asking unanimous consent to extend the time further?

Mr. STEAGALL. No; the gentleman would not be.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, can the gentleman tell me whether this bill is to be brought up under a rule, or will there be opportunity to amend the bill?

Mr. STEAGALL. We expect to consider the bill under the general rules of the House, under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, do I understand the gentleman to say that amendments may be offered from the floor of the House?

Mr. STEAGALL. Oh, yes. The bill will be considered under the general rules of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I now ask unanimous consent that general debate upon the bill continue for 1 hour, to be divided equally between the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] and myself.

The SPEAKER. One hour on a side?

Mr. STEAGALL. One hour in all.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I do not know whether that is agreeable to the gentleman from Massachusetts or not.

Mr. STEAGALL. I can assure the gentleman that it is agreeable to him.

Mr. SNELL. If it is agreeable to him, I would not want to object.

Mr. STEAGALL. It is. I discussed it with him a little while ago.

Mr. SNELL. There will be plenty of time under the 5-minute rule?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that general debate continue for 1 hour, to be equally divided between himself and the gentleman from Massachusetts. Is there objection?

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object in order to ask whether it is possible to get some time on this bill. With only half an hour on this side I do not see where any Members are going to have opportunity to discuss the bill at all.

Mr. STEAGALL. I stated to the House that I had discussed the matter of time with the minority ranking Member [Mr. LUCE].

Mr. McFADDEN. But there are other Members here who have some rights. Unless more time can be arranged, I shall object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. STEAGALL. I have no objection to extending the time. I shall be very glad to meet the wishes of my friend from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GOSS. Do I understand that general debate is to be confined to the bill?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes; I will put it that way.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman going to permit only half an hour on a side for the consideration of this bill?

Mr. STEAGALL. I am submitting that request now.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, we passed a bill in the last session which we were told was for the relief of the home owners. We created a home-loan bank, and what was it? It was nothing but a political fraud, and up to this hour not one single individual in this country has been able to get 5 cents from that home-loan bank to retire a mortgage. It was a bill for the relief of building-and-loan associations. The bill which is to be considered now should be a real relief bill for home owners in the large cities. We have given everything to the farmers, we have given everything to the corporations, but what have we done for the man who owns a little home in the city, representing his life savings. The bill should be worded so that that man can borrow money and save his home if it is necessary, and it should not be left to any board to say you can or you cannot borrow.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this legislation is to accomplish the very thing that the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I hope so, but the gentleman from Alabama stood on this floor and in answer to my question, as the RECORD will show, gave me that same assurance when the other bill was pending; but what happened? In the end all one could borrow was 40 percent of the value of his or her property. You do not have to go to the Government to borrow 40 percent of the value of your property. This is a most important measure, Mr. Speaker, and there should be more time for debate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I object, Mr. Speaker, unless the time is extended for more than 1 hour.

Mr. STEAGALL. I will make the time 2 hours if that is satisfactory.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Make it 2 hours and I shall not object.

Mr. STEAGALL. Very well.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that debate upon the home mortgage relief bill be limited to 2 hours, to be divided as indicated, between himself and the gentleman from Massachusetts, debate to be confined to the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, if the Speaker will permit, I submit the request that the home loan bank bill may be in order tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. That request has been granted. There has been objection to the request for 2 hours' general debate. Consent has been granted that the bill may be in order tomorrow, but no arrangement has been made as to time for general debate.

PAY OF UNITED STATES NAVAL ACADEMY GRADUATES

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to make a statement to the House. The Chair at this point has promised to recognize the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] for the purpose of calling up a bill, H.R. 5012, which seems to be a matter of public interest and an emergency. It affects the surplus graduates in this year's graduating class at Annapolis.

Mr. SNELL. But the gentleman from Georgia must ask unanimous consent for that?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H.R. 5012) to amend existing law in order to obviate the payment of 1 year's sea pay to surplus graduates of the Naval Academy, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of the act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat. 285, ch. 391), as is contained in the proviso at the end of section 1057, title 34, United States Code, is hereby amended by repealing the words "and 1 year's sea pay", so that the said proviso will read as follows: "Provided, That if there be a surplus of graduates, those who do not receive such appointments shall be given a certificate of graduation and an honorable discharge."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to change the present existing law by which sea pay of 1 year is given to midshipmen who do not receive commissions. Under the law today when a midshipman graduates at the academy and does not receive a commission, the Government pays him $780. The purpose of this bill is to repeal that provision of the law, due to the fact that 192 midshipmen will fail to receive their commissions. When they graduate and have been honorably discharged their retainer pay that they will receive amounts to about $1,000. So if this bill does not become effective between this date and May 26, every midshipman who does not get a commission will receive $1,000 retainer pay plus $780. This bill was considered by the committee and it was favorably reported, 18 to 1. It is recommended by the Budget and recommended by the Navy Department.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. McCLINTIC. In order that the Members may have detailed information I should like the chairman to explain whether or not a midshipman, after he has been given an honorable discharge, under the terms of this bill will receive any kind of gratuity, annuity, or payment in the future?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. He receives his retainer pay, which has been accumulated to his credit during the 4 years during which he has attended the academy, an amount in the neighborhood of a thousand dollars. He has no other claim on the Government.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to read from the committee report:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H.R. 5012) to amend existing law in order to obviate the payment of 1 year's sea pay to surplus graduates of the Naval Academy, having had the same under consideration, report favorably thereon, without amendment, and recommend that the bill do pass.

The Naval Academy class of 1933 now contains 437 midshipmen. In accordance with the Act of May 6, 1932, not less than 50 percent of those graduating will be commissioned in the line of the Navy. In addition about 20 will be commissioned to fill vacancies in the Marine Corps and about 5 in the Supply Corps of the Navy. The remainder, about 192, cannot be commissioned, because there are no vacancies for them and they must be discharged to civil life.

The pay of a midshipman is $780 per annum, from which he must pay for his uniforms, textbooks, etc. During his 4 years at the Naval Academy not less than $960 is withheld from the pay of each midshipman for the purpose of providing him upon graduation with funds sufficient to buy the uniforms and equipment required by an ensign. In the case of a graduate who does not receive a commission the sum which has been withheld is paid to him. This will provide him with approximately $1,000 plus an excellent education which has been given to him by the Government.

The present situation is not at all analogous to that which obtained when the Act of August 5, 1882, was passed. At that time midshipmen performed 2 years' sea service after completing the 4 years at the Naval Academy before being commissioned as ensign. For those who did not receive a commission there was no such fund as the retainer pay which now provides each graduate who is not commissioned with a substantial sum upon his separation from the service. It would appear that the grant of 1 year's sea pay was intended to provide a nest egg which would enable him to make a start in civil life. Since the present-day midshipman upon discharge will receive about $1,000 from the Government, it does not seem unfair to deny him the additional gratuity of $780.

If this bill is enacted, it will result in a saving to the Government of some $156,000 for the current year and about the same amount for the next 2 or 3 fiscal years.

Mr. SHANNON. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHANNON].

Mr. SHANNON. This is not economy; this is a breach of contract.

I want to explain the operation of this law with respect to these boys, the best boys in the world, who accepted appointments at the hands of their Congressmen and went to Annapolis. If a boy is commissioned, upon his graduation he is paid a salary. The purpose of this law was to provide for those who, because the Navy does not need them, do not receive a commission. It serves as an equalizer between those who are commissioned and those who are not. For 4 years, these boys who are to be graduated in a few weeks have believed that upon their graduation they would receive either a commission or this pay. If you deprive them of the pay, after permitting them to believe for 4 years that they would receive it, I say to you you are liable to upset nine tenths of them in their examinations which are going on at this very moment. For 4 years they have believed they would get this money. Now, in the name of economy you want to deprive them of it. I say to you, nothing was ever as unfair as that. Those boys have had no notice of such action. An admiral appeared before the committee and said he could save this money. He is not saving it. He is taking it from 200 American boys by changing a law which has been in operation for 50 years. I want to read the act that this bill proposes to repeal. It is the Act of August 5, 1882, and provides:

That hereafter there shall be no appointment of cadet midshipmen or cadet engineers at the Naval Academy, but in lieu thereof naval cadets shall be appointed from each congressional district and at large, as now provided by law for cadet midshipmen, and all the undergraduates at the Naval Academy shall hereafter be designated and called "naval cadets"; and from those who complete the 6 years' course appointments shall hereafter be made as it is necessary to fill vacancies in the lower grades of the line and Engineer Corps of the Navy and of the Marine Corps; and if there be a surplus of graduates, those who do not receive such appointment shall be given a certificate of graduation, an honorable discharge, and 1 year's sea pay, as now provided by law for cadet midshipmen; and so much of section 1521 of the Revised Statutes as is inconsistent herewith is hereby repealed.

At the time of the passage of this act the course at the Naval Academy was 6 years—4 years at the Naval Academy and 2 years at sea as a passed midshipman—cadets or midshipmen not being commissioned in the service as ensigns until after they had completed the 2 years' service at sea. At present the course is but 4 years at the Naval Academy, the midshipmen being commissioned as ensigns upon graduation from the 4-year course.

That act specifically provides that—

Those who do not receive such appointment shall be given
• • • 1 year's sea pay.

If this is an abuse, and if the law should be changed, then let the change go into effect in the future and do not make it applicable to those already in the academy.

Those who do not receive a commission upon their graduation will receive only this sum referred to by the gentleman from Georgia, which is the amount saved out of the allowance made to them. Those who are commissioned also receive this sum. The boy who is not commissioned is the one who will be discriminated against under the bill now under consideration.

Every midshipman who has been at the Naval Academy is fully aware of the provision of the Act of August 5, 1882, authorizing the payment of 1 year's sea pay to him if he is graduated and there is no vacancy for him in the Navy or Marine Corps to which he can be commissioned. It would not be so bad if the law was so amended that it would only be applicable to the boys who enter the academy after the passage of the bill, but to apply it to the boys who will graduate in a month or two is unjust and unfair.

There was an implied contract between the Government and these boys that upon the completion of the 4-year course the boys would either be commissioned or would receive 1 year's sea pay. The boys have faithfully performed their part of this contract and are about to be graduated. Shall the Government, through the passage of this bill, fail to carry out its part of that contract? This bill is not only unfair but its effects are retroactive.

The courts have frequently held that where a student completes the course prescribed by a school, private or public, that school can be compelled, by mandamus, to issue to him a proper certificate. In the case of a boy entering the Naval Academy there is an agreement that upon the completion of the prescribed 4-year course there will be issued to him a certificate of graduation, and either a commission or an honorable discharge and 1 year's sea pay. The Naval Academy, as any other school, should perform its part of this agreement.

Mr. MOTT. Can the gentleman inform us whether the bill is a part of the President's economy program?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHANNON. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. In reply I may state that it is sent to the committee by the Navy Department with a favorable recommendation. It is also included in a Budget message to Congress, including it in an appropriation bill.

Mr. MOTT. Does the gentleman know whether the President has approved it?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I do not know, but I presume when the Budget Director sends a matter to Congress it has the sanction of somebody in authority.

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman understands what I am trying to find out, which is whether this is a part of the President's economy program?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. This is a part of the program to more economically manage the military affairs of the country.

Mr. SHANNON. I may say in answer to the gentleman from Oregon that I do not think the President ever heard of it. The President is being charged with a lot of things that are not correct. A man in his position could not possibly pass on everything. He has to trust to others. This matter originated with some admiral who wanted a transfer of funds, who probably has something else he wants to effect somewhere, and what could be more convenient than to take $150,000 from these boys?

I repeat again, you are in grave danger of doing something that not only will upset the boys on the eve of their examinations, but you are apt to send out 200 of them with a bitter feeling toward this Government for taking this money away from them. This is theft, nothing more nor less than theft, to take it away from these boys who graduate at this time.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHANNON. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Does not the gentleman think that when we educate these boys at Annapolis at an expense of approximately $16,000 each, give them 4 years' tuition, we have certainly given them a wonderful education and that they should be satisfied?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. And $1,000 in addition.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SHANNON: In line 10, after the word "discharge", insert "Provided further, That this act shall take effect July 1, 1936."

LXXVII—149

Mr. SHANNON. This amendment, Mr. Speaker, would make the change applicable to the boys who would be admitted to the academy in 1936. Those boys would have notice that this money will not be paid to them. But the boys now in the academy, who entered with the understanding and belief that they would receive this pay, would not be deprived of it.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I trust the House will vote down this amendment, because if it is adopted it will mean an additional expense between now and 1936 in the neighborhood of $500,000.

Let me call attention to the fact, as stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that these boys are educated at the expense of the taxpayers. The average cost per capita of the boys at the Academy is from $10,000 to $12,000. In addition to this, we give every one of them $1,000 when he leaves the Academy without a commission.

I think the Government has been exceedingly generous to these boys who cannot get commissions due to the reason we have no vacant places in the Navy for additional officers.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that the amendment be voted down.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. FULLER. This money is not given to those boys who receive commissions?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. In that case they go into the service and earn it.

Mr. FULLER. Now the effort is being made to take it away from these boys who have chosen the Navy as a life profession and devoted their efforts to obtaining an education for that profession. It is now sought to throw them out and not pay them what the Government owes them.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. No. We give him $1,000 when he graduates without a commission. The proposal of the gentleman from Missouri is to give him $780 in addition to it. The committee and the department are opposed to giving him the $780 in addition.

Mr. FULLER. He still gets his $1,000, does he?

Mr. SHANNON. He gets approximately $1,000, but that is simply the unexpended balance of his allowance at the rate of $780 a year. Out of his yearly allowance of $780 is taken the cost of his uniforms, equipment, food, and incidental expenses, and the difference between such actual expenses and the allowance is permitted to accumulate and is paid to the boy when he is graduated from the Academy. This is true of those who receive a commission as well as those who do not.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Is not this $1,000 the graduate receives who does not get a commission taken out of his own salary?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Not at all.

Mr. SHANNON. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. He gets no salary at the Academy. He is educated and maintained at the expense of the Government.

Mr. O'MALLEY. That is his allowance?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is his allowance.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. BEEDY. Does not the gentleman think this great country might find a more honorable way to economize than to break faith with these youngsters who for 4 years have assumed that their Government, through the Navy Department, would carry out the traditions of the Navy and deal squarely with them?

I want to economize, but I hesitate to support this kind of economy.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I may say to the gentleman from Maine there is no contract between the Government and any officer of the Army or Navy. It is entirely discretionary. Congress at any time may change their compensation.

Mr. BEEDY. I realize that, but does not the gentleman think we are under the strongest kind of moral obligation not to do this?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I think this about it. I think when the Government has taxed its people to educate these boys at an expenditure of approximately $13,000 per boy, and then he fails to get a commission because the Government has no need for him, and then the Government gives him $1,000, the Government has been exceedingly generous; and to give him $780 additional, with economic conditions as they are today, I think would be extravagance on the part of the Government.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am interested in the last remark of the gentleman. Why does the Government educate these boys?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. They educate them for the reason that they want to put them in the Navy whenever there are vacancies in the Navy.

Mr. McCORMACK. In other words, it is a part of the development of our national defense.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. But we have no vacancies in the Navy, and what is the need of putting 192 additional officers in the Navy when there is no need for them?

Mr. McCORMACK. I am not completely in disagreement with my friend the gentleman from Georgia, but I was somewhat concerned about letting go into the RECORD the statement that these boys are receiving an education at the expense of the Government without having in the RECORD the further statement that they are educated as a part of our national defense.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Of course that is the purpose for which they are sent to the academy.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. RICH. Does the gentleman think the taxpayers of the country would be satisfied to know that it is considered the right thing for Congress, under present economic conditions, to give these boys $1,000 additional in view of the fact they are being educated by the Government at an expense of nearly $15,000?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I do not.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Why not make this saving on further retirement of the older officers?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is exactly what the Budget officials are doing, and I may state to the gentleman now that it is proposed to cut the Budget appropriation for the Navy in the neighborhood of $55,000,000, and there will be other economies that must necessarily be made.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHANNON. I will ask the chairman of the committee to state whether or not these boys were permitted to present their side of the case to the committee, and if it would not have been considered bad form for them to seek an opportunity to present their side of the case? I should also like to ask the gentleman if he does not believe that every boy in the Naval Academy at this moment considers that he has an equitable claim on the Government for this money?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I do not agree with the last statement at all.

Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

Mr. SHANNON. Answer my first statement.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I ask for a vote, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHANNON].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SHANNON) there were—ayes 64, noes 106.

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. KVALE) there were—ayes 123, noes 47.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. VINSON of Georgia, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 112, a privileged resolution, from the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall proceed to the consideration of House Joint Resolution 157, and all points of order against said joint resolution shall be considered as waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the joint resolution and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the Chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the joint resolution to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes of the time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY].

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman whether there will be a roll call on this measure this afternoon?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I cannot answer that question. There may well be a vote this afternoon.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee that question.

Mr. PARKER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I shall demand a roll call on the passage of the measure.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I think what the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE] is interested in, as well as several other gentlemen, is this: The rule, in all probability, will be debated for an hour, the bill will be debated for an hour, and the gentlemen are wondering whether the roll call would go over until tomorrow.

Mr. PARKER of New York. I shall not object to that.

Mr. RAYBURN. That is entirely agreeable to me.

Mr. SNELL. Is this a political engagement?

Mr. RAYBURN. Partially so; yes.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Then it is understood, Mr. Speaker, the vote will go over until tomorrow.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, this rule is brought in at the request of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce for the purpose of considering the resolution to provide for the proportion that the State of New York shall pay toward the cost of maintaining the St. Lawrence waterway.

Under the rule general debate will continue for 1 hour. The resolution will not be read for amendment and no points of order will lie against the resolution.

That is the form of rule requested by the committee, and we bring it to you in that shape.

As I understand it, the treaty between the United States and Canada with reference to the St. Lawrence waterway was signed July 18, 1932, and the ratification is now pending in the Senate.

In 1931 the State of New York created the Power Authority of the State of New York, when President Roosevelt was Governor. By unanimous vote of both houses of the legislature there was delegated to this corporate political entity the right to enter into contracts for the development of the St. Lawrence River in the interest of the State of New York.

In the development of the St. Lawrence waterway all the power sites are on the New York side and in the State of New York. The cost to the Federal Government is several hundred million dollars as its share of the cost of the development of the waterway for navigation and for power.

The Federal Government has entered into an agreement with the State of New York whereby the State shall use all the power developed on the New York side and contribute to the cost of the navigation and power development. As I understand it, that cost will be about $89,000,000.

Mr. TARVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Not for an intricate question that I may not be able to answer.

Mr. TARVER. I am asking this for information. The gentleman stated that the cost would be several hundred million dollars to the Federal Government. Can the gentleman make the statement a little more definite so that we may be advised how much it is going to cost the Federal Government?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am sorry but I cannot answer that. I understand the total cost to the United States is about $275,000,000. This resolution merely provides in advance of the ratification of the treaty that New York shall pay in accordance with the agreement for the use of the power developed on the New York side of the river. If the treaty is not ratified, the agreement is of no effect. If it is ratified, this resolution fixes in advance of the ratification the cost that has been agreed upon that the State of New York shall pay to the Federal Government.

Mr. EDMONDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. EDMONDS. Why do you bring this up now, when the treaty has not been ratified; why the hurry?

Mr. O'CONNOR. The Rules Committee was informed that there was an immediate need for the resolution, and I shall yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], the chairman of the committee, to answer that question.

Mr. RAYBURN. The reason for reporting the matter now is to have this fixed between the United States Government and the State of New York so that they would know that it would be in effect if the treaty were ratified, and not wait until after the ratification.

Mr. EDMONDS. Will the gentleman kindly tell me whether it is not in effect an attempt upon the part of the House authorities to impress upon the Senate that the House is in favor of this measure?

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not know anything about the treaty; I never have read it. I do not think this has one thing on earth to do with the treaty. I think it is a matter of settling these rights as between the Federal Government and the State of New York so that they will know what their rights are when the treaty is under consideration.

Mr. EDMONDS. I do not see the use of settling any rights, when they have not any rights.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, all this discussion will be brought out in detail in debate upon the resolution. Just now this is a discussion on the rule. It does not go to the merits of the resolution.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. CULKIN. In line with the questions asked by my colleague, the passage of this resolution will enable the United States Government to know what the amount of its disbursement will be for the construction of this waterway; is not that true?

Mr. O'CONNOR. It will show what proportion of that cost New York will bear, and will determine that in advance. As I understand it, such a procedure is nothing exceptional.

Mr. DOUGLASS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. DOUGLASS. In order to inform the Chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce that we in New England are decidedly opposed to this St. Lawrence waterway project, and we are very much afraid that the adoption of this resolution before the treaty is accepted by the Senate will place this House in the attitude of approving the treaty. Does not the gentleman feel that by our action here today in the approval of this resolution we are practically, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania suggested, putting the House in the position of approving the ratification of the treaty?

Mr. RAYBURN. That is not my thought and I do not think it is the thought of the majority of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. DOUGLASS. Does not the gentleman think it will have that psychological effect?

Mr. RAYBURN. I cannot search the minds of other men. It does not appeal to me in that light.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I might say that I know of several members of another body who will vote for this resolution who presently have no intention of voting for the ratification of the treaty, and the Record might well show that what we do here today is not to be taken in any sense as being in favor of the treaty at present pending in the other body.

Mr. DOUGLASS. The gentleman understands that the House will not have any chance or any constitutional right to vote on the treaty. That being the case, I want to know, and I want a definite answer, why, before that treaty is approved by the Senate, we in the House have to act in this manner? Why cannot we wait until that treaty is approved, if it is to be approved—and I hope that it will not be.

Mr. RAYBURN. I can state to the gentleman in a few words why the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce considered this matter. It was a direct request, enclosing this resolution, in a letter from the President of the United States. I do not know anything about the controversy in New York and New England with reference to this matter. I have stated what I feel about it, however.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield in order that I might ask the Chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce another question?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Very well, but this is the last question to which I shall yield as to the merits of the resolution.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. The gentleman is familiar with the treaty. In the original treaty, from a report sent out by, I think it is, the Power Authority of the State of New York, it was stated that the Aluminum Co. of America had a 25-percent diversion at a certain point in the river, the cost of the improvement to be paid for by this Government, guaranteeing a permanent flow of 25-percent diversion at that point. Does the gentleman know whether that is still in the treaty?

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not know anything about the treaty. I have never read it.

Mr. CULKIN. I will say to the gentleman that that provision has been eliminated.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I am informed that the administration is in favor of the present passage of this resolution, and for sufficient reasons, in advance of the treaty. I know that the administration of the State of New York thinks it advantageous that these rights be fixed now and that the proportion be fixed in advance of the treaty.

Mr. MCGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. MCGUGIN. The gentleman seems to be discussing the resolution. I am wondering whether in the course of the gentleman's remarks he will be good enough to enlighten us why it is necessary to bring in this resolution under this rule. I thought the gentleman was going to discuss the rule. The rule has a provision that we cannot even offer an amendment to the resolution.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I state again, as I said the other day in respect to this type of rule, that the particular form was requested by the legislative committee, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and there was no protest before the Rules Committee as to the form of the rule by Mr. McGugin's Republican colleagues on the committee. Therefore, the Rules Committee did what it was asked to do by the standing committee of the House.

Mr. PARKER of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. PARKER of New York. What good would it have done if we had protested?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Well, the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER] was before the Rules Committee, and we did not hear him protest.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert at this point as a part of my remarks a letter from the Power Authority of the State of New York with reference to this matter.

THE SPEAKER. Is there objection?
There was no objection.

THE POWER AUTHORITY OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK,
New York City, April 22, 1933.

HON. JOHN J. O'CONNOR,

House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: The trustees of the power authority respectfully direct your attention to the importance to the people of the State of New York of the joint resolution, House Joint Resolution 157, which will be considered by the House under special rule on Monday, April 24.

The enactment of this resolution will mark the culmination of a long contest on the part of the people of our State for the right to utilize the great natural power resources of the St. Lawrence River. It will aid the homes, farms, and small businesses throughout the State to secure cheaper and more abundant electricity.

Under the law, enacted by the unanimous vote of both branches of the State legislature, approved by Governor Roosevelt April 27, 1931, the power authority is charged with the duty of carrying out the State's policy as defined in that act. The law specifically authorizes the power authority "to apply to Congress for legislation, or take such other action in the premises as it may deem necessary or advisable, in the furtherance of the project and for the protection of its rights and those of the State."

The law further directs the power authority to proceed immediately, in cooperation with the Federal Government and the proper Canadian authorities, to develop the International Rapids section of the St. Lawrence River. It imposes upon the trustees the duty of maintaining this power development as the inalienable possession of the people of the State.

The joint resolution which will come before you on Monday, April 24, specifically carries out this provision of the law of the State. It gives effect to a joint recommendation agreed upon during the last administration, under date of February 7, 1933, by the United States Army engineers and the power authority. It is confined to determining the ownership of the water power to be developed on the St. Lawrence River within the boundaries of the State of New York and fixing the division of the cost of the works as between the Federal Government and the State.

The joint resolution was introduced in both branches of Congress as an administration measure, but it is nonpartisan in character. It has the support of Representative SNELL, of New York, and other leading Republicans, as well as Democrats. Last Wednesday Senator WAGNER and Senator COPELAND, of New York, assured the trustees of the power authority that they would support this resolution in the Senate. The agreement which it embodies has the endorsement of Governor Lehman.

The resolution will enable the power authority to proceed under the State law to develop the water power within the boundaries of New York for distribution to domestic and rural consumers at the lowest possible rates.

Your attention is particularly directed to the fact that the issue involved in this joint resolution, i.e., State development of St. Lawrence power in the interest of low electric rates, has been a vital one in the State of New York for more than 20 years. The last three chief executives of the State—Governors Smith, Roosevelt, and Lehman—have made the public development of St. Lawrence power by the State one of the principal features of their economic programs.

Today the people of the State are demanding lower electric rates. The Board of Estimate of the City of New York has just voted unanimously to seek a reduction in utility rates in the city. Such a movement is under way in numerous other communities. Development of St. Lawrence power will create an abundant supply of electricity which can be so distributed as to assure lower rates throughout the State.

The purpose of the resolution is to protect and safeguard the rights of New York if the St. Lawrence Treaty is ratified. If it is not ratified, the joint resolution will be of no force or effect. A vote for the resolution does not, therefore, involve any commitment whatever with respect to the treaty. Its adoption will, however, for the first time give full Federal recognition to the right for which New York has been contending for a quarter of a century.

Whatever may be your attitude toward the treaty, therefore, we should be failing in our duty under the laws of New York if we did not urge you to support the resolution.

Very truly yours,

THE POWER AUTHORITY OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK,
By DELOS M. COSGROVE, Vice Chairman.

Mr. DOUGLASS. Has the gentleman the letter from the President he received with regard to this matter?

Mr. O'CONNOR. No; I have never seen that letter.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Does the gentleman know what the effect of the ratification of this treaty and the development of the St. Lawrence waterway will be upon water diversion in the Great Lakes; for instance, the Sanitary District of Chicago?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I have no knowledge of that subject whatever.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I am going to take my time on the rule for discussion of the resolution itself and I would like to proceed for a few moments without interruption, and then if I have any time remaining I shall be glad to answer any questions that anyone cares to propound.

In order to intelligently discuss this situation I think it is proper that I should give a little history or background to show why this resolution is before us at the present time.

There has been a legal controversy between the State of New York and the Federal Government for at least 25 years, to my knowledge, relative to the rights of the State of New York in the rapids section, or where power can be developed, of the international boundary stream—the St. Lawrence River. That has not only been a controversial subject between the Federal Government and the State government but it has been a matter of politics in our own State for a great many years. About 3 years ago various men of both political parties became more sensible, and we definitely agreed upon a power policy for our State. The result was the establishment of the power authority of the State, and two of the principal objects were, first, to apply to Congress for legislation, or take such other action in the premises as it may deem necessary or advisable in furtherance of the project and for the protection of its rights and those of the State. This resolution here presented is for the protection of the rights of the State. Secondly, the power authority is directed to proceed immediately in cooperation with the Federal Government and the proper Canadian authorities to develop the international rapids section of the St. Lawrence River. The power authority of the State represents the citizens of the State of New York, and that authority was set up by the unanimous vote of both branches of our legislature.

While some of my friends may try to raise the issue that this action is not approved by our people, yet right there is definite proof of it. The power authority was set up for this special purpose. That legislation was passed by unanimous vote of both parties in both houses of the legislature.

As a result of practically 2 years' negotiations, conferences, and meetings of all kinds, the engineers of the War Department of the Federal Government and the engineers of the State of New York, the State Department of the Federal Government, and the power authority of our State have come to a unanimous agreement for determining the rights of the State of New York in this power situation. I will go into the definite rights a little later; but up to the present time, in private conversation or in the public press, I have never heard a single man criticize the terms of this agreement. So far as I know, it is absolutely fair to the Federal Government and fair to the State of New York. Furthermore, there is nothing political or partisan about it, as this agreement defining these rights has been approved by the State Department of two administrations and had the approval and support of President Hoover and, I am informed, has the whole-hearted support of President Roosevelt. When you consider the fact that a sovereign State and the Federal Government have been in controversy for 25 years and the legal representatives of both parties come to an amicable solution of the problem and a solution that is fair and just and right, it seems to me it is incumbent upon the Congress to ratify that agreement when they are in perfect agreement, and that is all we want you to do at the present time. We have enough controversial matters left to decide at a later time.

Let us see just exactly what the resolution provides, so that there can be no mistake on the part of Members of the House. It is a very short and very simple resolution. It consists of only two paragraphs.

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Not just now. Later I will yield if I have time.

The first paragraph simply provides that the prior use of all the waters of the St. Lawrence River within the boundaries of the United States is necessary for the proper regulation of commerce and the improvement of navigation. That simply says that the State of New York agrees to the contention that the Federal Government has always made in regard to navigable streams. So there can be no question as to the first part of the resolution.

Now, I wish Members would listen carefully to this second provision, because I want you to understand perfectly what is in it and all there is in it. The second section provides that in the event of the ratification of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Deep Waterway Treaty and the construction of the works provided therein, the Power Authority of the State of New York, as the accredited agency of the State and in accordance with the policy set forth in the act creating said power authority, shall be entitled to use for the generation of hydroelectric power all of the United States' share of the flow of the water in the international rapids section of the St. Lawrence River, subject to the prior use of such water under the treaty for the purpose of navigation and the operation of reservoirs, canals, and locks, and shall have title to the power houses and works appurtenant thereto upon the United States side, and so forth. It also further provides that no part of the United States' share of the water in the international rapids section of the St. Lawrence River shall be diverted for the benefit of any person or private corporation, nor shall the use of any part of said water or the rights pertaining to said water be sold, leased, or otherwise alienated to any person or private corporation for the generation of hydroelectric power.

In other words, the second resolve of this resolution simply provides that the State of New York, if the treaty is ratified, shall have the power that we claim belongs to the State of New York, by paying the Federal Government the cost of developing that power. Furthermore, that the title to this power shall remain for all time in the power authority, for the benefit of the people of the State of New York. That is all there is in this resolution. There is nothing hidden or covered up. It just settles a legal controversy in an amicable manner.

Now I want to explain just what this power authority is, so you will understand the whole proposition. This power authority was created under chapter 772 of the Laws of the State of New York, approved by Governor Roosevelt on April 27, 1931, and unanimously adopted by both branches of the legislature. The State set up the power authority as a corporate municipal instrumentality of the State, charging it with the development and control of the St. Lawrence power for the benefit of domestic and rural consumers through the distribution of hydroelectric energy at the lowest possible rates. The power authority is a body corporate and politic, a political subdivision of the State, exercising governmental and public powers, perpetual in duration, and capable of suing and being sued.

The statute further provides that the natural resources of the St. Lawrence River available for creation and development of hydroelectric power shall always remain inalienable to, and the ownership, possession, and control thereof shall always be vested in the people of the State of New York.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to insert in my remarks at this point the law setting up the power authority. It is very short.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the manner indicated.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

Chapter 772 of the Laws of 1931, creating the power authority provides as follows:

"SECTION 1. That part of the St. Lawrence River within the boundaries of the State of New York is hereby declared to be a natural resource of the State for the use and development of commerce and navigation * * * and for the creation and development of hydroelectric power.

"SEC. 2. For the purpose of effectuating the policy declared in section 1 and of improving the St. Lawrence River as an instrumentality of commerce and navigation and developing the hydroelectric power resources thereof, there is hereby created a corporate municipal instrumentality of the State to be known as 'The Power Authority of the State of New York.'

"SEC. 5. Forthwith upon the appointment and organization of the trustees * * * the power authority, in cooperation with the proper Canadian authorities and those of the United States * * * shall proceed with the improvement and development of the international rapids section * * * for the aid and benefit of commerce and navigation and for the development of the hydroelectric power inherent therein. The power authority is authorized and directed:

"(1) To cooperate with the appropriate agencies and officials of the United States Government to the end that any project undertaken under the authority of this act shall be consistent with and in aid of the plan of the United States for the improvement of commerce and navigation along the St. Lawrence River, and shall be so planned and constructed as to be adaptable to the plans of the United States therefor so that the necessary channels, locks, and canals and other navigational facilities may be constructed and installed by the United States in, through, and as a part of the said project.

"(2) Negotiate with the appropriate Canadian authorities and agencies respecting the improvement and development of * * * the St. Lawrence River for the aid and benefit of commerce and navigation and the development of the hydroelectric power therefrom * * *. Such negotiations and agreements shall be conducted and concluded with due regard to the position of the United States in respect to international agreements and any such agreements as may be reached with Canadian authorities or agencies may be submitted by the power authority to Congress for its approval, if it be advised that such approval is necessary or desirable.

"(5) To develop, maintain, manage and operate that part of the project owned or controlled by it in such manner as to give effect to the policy hereby declared, namely, that the said project shall be in all respects for the aid and improvement and benefit of commerce and navigation in, through, along, and past the St. Lawrence River and the International Rapids section thereof, and that in the development of hydroelectric power therefrom the said project shall be considered primarily as for the benefit of the people of the State as a whole and particularly the domestic and rural consumers * * *.

"(7) * * * The Power Authority is specifically authorized to undertake the construction of said project in one or more steps as it may find economically desirable or advantageous and as it may agree with the appropriate Canadian and United States authorities.

"SEC. 6. The State of New York hereby consents to the occupation and use by the Power Authority of any and all property of the State * * * within the International Rapids section * * *, and hereby vests the Power Authority with and delegates to it the right to exercise any and every right and power of the State in connection therewith, * * * provided that such consent and delegation of power shall not permit the infringement or limit or prevent the future improvement of the navigability of the International Rapids section of the said river, consistent with the maintenance of this project, but on the contrary, the project shall be such as will improve and benefit commerce and navigation therein. * * *.

"SEC. 7. It is hereby found and declared that the project authorized by this act is for the aid and improvement of commerce and navigation, and that such aid and improvement of commerce and the development, sale, and distribution of hydroelectric power is in all respects for the benefit of the people of the State of New York for the improvement of their health and welfare and material prosperity and is a public purpose, * * *."

Mr. SNELL. Let me now explain the agreement this resolution puts in force. It is a joint recommendation of the Power Authority of the State of New York and the Board of Engineers of the War Department, dated February 7, 1933, by which $89,726,000 of the cost of the works in the International Rapids section of the St. Lawrence River will be assumed by the Power Authority of the State of New York. This will reduce the United States half of the cost of the works in this section of the river forming the boundary between the Province of Ontario and the State of New York from $137,371,000 to $47,845,000, or a reduction of 65 percent, representing the amount the State of New York will pay for this power.

This joint resolution allocates the cost on a basis which will permit the Power Authority of New York to compete on an equal footing with the Hydroelectric Commission of Ontario. It will make available 720,000 firm horsepower of electricity to rural and domestic consumers and to American industry in one of the most populous sections of this country, a part of the country that now has a developed market.

The adoption of the joint resolution will greatly reduce Federal costs and afford the United States the same advantage now held by Canada in determining capital expenditure and defining a policy for the development of water power; and it should be done in advance of the ratification of the treaty. The Dominion Government of Canada has already reached an agreement with the Province of Ontario authorizing the Hydroelectric Commission of this Province to conduct the power project on the Canadian side of the river under practically the same terms as those proposed between the United States Government and the State of New York. They are doing it in advance of the settlement of the treaty.

The question of the need for doing this may be raised. You must understand that this is the largest unit of undeveloped power in the northeastern part of the United States, and, as far as I know, it is the largest undeveloped unit of firm horsepower in continental United States.

One reason for doing this is that during the last 20 years many important American industries have been induced to locate plants in Canada because of an almost unlimited supply of cheap hydroelectric power available there. The migration of American industries has caused great economic loss to the United States. It has involved the transfer of millions of dollars of American capital to Canada, loss of employment to thousands of American citizens, and shrinkage of the American market for American food products.

If you look over the history of this whole situation, you will find that the opposition of the Province of Quebec to the development of the St. Lawrence River has always been frankly based upon a desire that the movement of American industry shall be allowed to continue.

In addressing the Quebec Legislature on January 13, 1932, Premier Taschereau said:

The pressing need of the United States is for power. Do you think we are ever going to get industrial development in the Province of Quebec by permitting the United States what she needs now for the development of her own industries? I have seen many captains of industry, so called, and they all tell me that same thing: keep your hydro power at home, and you will have American capital going into your Province for the development of industries and your Province will profit and progress.

The entire Nation is interested in preventing further migration of industries to any foreign country. It inevitably results in loss of taxes to the Federal Government, loss of employment to American workers, and loss of markets for the products of our farms. The people of every State of the Union, as well as those of the State of New York, are vitally interested in this problem and want to do what they can to halt the outflow of American wealth for the development of industries in the Canadian Provinces.

Another reason why this resolution should be adopted is that it is directly in line with the declared policy of the Federal Government that States and municipalities shall be granted preference in connection with the development and operation of water-power sites over which the Federal Government asserts control under the commerce clause of the Constitution.

This policy was embodied in the Federal Water Power Act of 1920, and has repeatedly received congressional approval in legislation applying to particular water-power projects.

I want to call to your attention further and have you keep in mind the fact that the agreement entered into was between the engineers of both parties, and, as far as I am able to find out, it is absolutely fair to both parties. No one has ever raised any objection to it. It is based on practical considerations and principles of equity rather than legal technicalities.

In closing I simply want to say it is the only large undeveloped natural resource available for power generation in the northeastern section of the United States, the most highly industrialized and densely populated section of the country.

The adoption of the joint resolution utilizes the public agency provided by a sovereign State for the disposition of the power to be developed in that State. It will perpetually safeguard the public rights in the St. Lawrence River and provide an abundant supply of hydroelectric energy at the lowest possible cost for the benefit of rural and domestic consumers.

I now yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. I want to call attention to the phraseology of the last proviso in the bill.

I may say, Mr. Speaker, I am very much in favor of the resolution and believe it is the proper thing for the Government to turn this over to the power authority, but in the study of the power-authority legislation of the State of New York, in the consideration of the Tennessee authority bill, there was a great deal of attention paid to the various provisions with respect to this matter. Technically construed, I believe the last proviso here will defeat, in a way, the object of the resolution. In line 23 of page 3 it is provided that none of the water of the St. Lawrence River shall be diverted for the benefit of any person or private corporation, nor shall the use of any part of said water or the rights pertaining to said water be sold, leased, or otherwise alienated to any person or private corporation for the generation of hydroelectric power. I think there ought to be an exception or a further provision that this shall not be done except under the authority of the Power Authority of the State of New York.

Mr. SNELL. Under the law setting up the Power Authority of the State of New York, I think they cannot go any further than this. They can never do anything that alienates the title to this property from the authority or the citizens of the State of New York.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. MAY. If I may make one further observation, I think it ought to be unquestioned here that the Power Authority of the State of New York will control this matter.

Mr. SNELL. Absolutely; that is the basis of the whole proposition.

Mr. MAY. And a contract by which it would be permitted to manufacture hydroelectric power at these stations and then distribute it and sell it might be in conflict with the provisions which provide that the rights or the use of the water shall not be diverted.

Mr. SNELL. I do not want to take up all my time on this question, and I may say that this has been gone over very carefully by the engineers of the Federal Government and the engineers of the power authority, and I know the gentlemen on the power authority from the State of New York have given it most careful and well-considered attention and their heart is in this, and I believe the phraseology is correct.

Mr. MAY. But the legal phraseology may not be understood by the engineers.

Mr. SNELL. We had engineers and legal men also consider the matter, and I may say that the vice chairman of this power authority is one of the best attorneys in the State of New York. Unfortunately he happens to be a Democrat.

Mr. DINGELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I yield.

Mr. DINGELL. It is a conceded fact that the State of Michigan, as a watershed, yields most of the water involved here. What are the rights of Michigan, which is a great industrial State, insofar as taking part in the distribution of power?

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman has asked me a question I cannot answer.

Mr. DINGELL. It is unanswerable.

Mr. SNELL. I do not think it has anything to do with this proposition at the present time, for we are now dealing only with the water power in or adjacent to New York State.

Mr. DINGELL. Is it possible for the Commission established by the State of New York to divert a part of this power to the State of Michigan?

Mr. SNELL. They could sell it to the State of Michigan or the State of Massachusetts or the State of Pennsylvania.

I know of no restrictions. They will sell it at the best price possible.

Mr. DINGELL. That is exactly what I wanted to know.

Mr. SNELL. They can sell it to anybody who wants it, and can pay for it.

Mr. EDMONDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I yield.

Mr. EDMONDS. I have no objection myself to the treaty between New York and the United States. I think the question before us today is why it is brought up at the present time and what is the necessity for it now.

Mr. SNELL. Now is the time that the Federal Government and the State of New York are in entire agreement. They have been arguing this question for 25 years; and whenever you get two parties as important as a sovereign State and the Federal Government in agreement, that is the time to nail the matter down.

Mr. EDMONDS. Will they not be in agreement 30 days from now?

Mr. SNELL. I do not know, but they have this agreement now and I may say also that there is nothing partisan or political about this agreement. It was entered into by a Republican administration, and it has been approved by a Democratic administration. It had the approval of President Hoover, and it has the enthusiastic approval of President Roosevelt.

Mr. EDMONDS. As I have told the gentleman, I have no objection to it, but I do not understand the bringing up of the question at the present time.

Mr. SNELL. The time to determine these rights is when the parties are in agreement; and if they do ratify the treaty, the first question that is going to come up is with respect to the rights of the State of New York, and it should be determined now when we are in agreement about it, and then one of the hurdles of this important economic question will be settled.

Mr. EDMONDS. How long has it been since they have agreed upon it?

Mr. SNELL. Within the past week or 10 days.

Mr. EDMONDS. No; it has been longer than that.

Mr. SNELL. Well, it may be a little longer, but it has been just a short time.

Mr. EDMONDS. It was printed in a document here a month ago.

Mr. SNELL. The original agreement was made by a former State administration, but it was not entirely consummated at that time. It has been gone over and rechecked by the present administration, and they finally agreed on it, and about week before last final action was taken.

Mr. EDMONDS. The gentleman means the present administration of New York, and does not mean the present administration here?

Mr. SNELL. I mean the present administration here in Washington has approved this resolution.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. CULKIN. Is not one of the reasons this matter is brought up now due to the fact that the President of the United States sent a letter to the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce?

Mr. SNELL. That is one of the reasons; yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Does the gentleman really believe it is essential that this resolution should be passed now before we know definitely whether the Senate is going to ratify the treaty?

Mr. SNELL. I think it is of great importance to the State of New York to have this question decided once and for all, and the unanimous vote of your own legislature said that this is what they wanted done, and that is what they set up this authority for.

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. PATMAN. I expect to support this resolution, but I should like to ask the gentleman this question: Has any treaty or agreement given or attempted to give to the Aluminum Co. of America any franchise or right in connection with this waterway which would be at public expense?

Mr. SNELL. Absolutely not, as far as I know. I know that our power authority would not be in favor of it.

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. PATMAN. Has the gentleman noticed the report that the Aluminum Co. of America would profit considerably by this development?

Mr. SNELL. I do not understand how they would profit in any way.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I yield.

Mr. McDUFFIE. May I ask the gentleman what this project will cost the taxpayers of this country in the development of the St. Lawrence River?

Mr. SNELL. The total cost of waterway from Duluth to Montreal is $543,429,000, and United States pays one half of the total.

Mr. McDUFFIE. That is outside of the expenditure of the State of New York?

Mr. SNELL. Oh, no; that is the total cost of the entire contemplated development.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I asked the gentleman the total cost of the project.

Mr. SNELL. That is the total cost, and the cost of the international section we are considering today is $274,742,000 for power and navigation. Of this last amount the United States will pay $137,371,000, but in turn will collect from the State of New York $89,726,000, which will leave for the Federal Government only $47,645,000 for its cost in the international section of the river.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Those are the figures that have been agreed upon?

Mr. SNELL. They have been agreed upon by both parties.

Mr. McDUFFIE. When were they arrived at?

Mr. SNELL. The estimate of cost was made in 1926, and it can be done for less now. I am told at least 25 percent less.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I yield.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The resolution seeks to determine the rate that New York shall pay in advance of the ratification of the treaty. There are other States affected by the ratification of this treaty. Why not determine those figures now?

Mr. SNELL. I know of no other State that has any water-power problem, and that is all we are dealing with today.

Mr. O'MALLEY. My State will be affected.

Mr. SNELL. In what way and what does your State want?

Mr. O'MALLEY. To determine its rights on the diversion of water.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, in this brief statement I have tried to put plainly before the House the very simple problem we have before us; that is, that the State of New York and the Federal Government have agreed and defined the rights of both parties, in and to the water power to be developed in the international section of the St. Lawrence River, and I honestly believe it in the interest of all parties concerned for Congress to now pass this resolution ratifying and approving this agreement. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, in casting my vote for this resolution I want the RECORD to show that I am not voting on the merits of the treaty. This is a good resolution. It must be when the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], the minority leader, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] are agreed. [Laughter.]

A vote for this resolution must not be construed as endorsing the treaty.

The part of the resolution that is pleasing to me is the proviso on page 3. As I understand it, if the canal is constructed the waters of the International Rapids section will always be preserved for the people, never to be sold or leased to individuals or a corporation.

Mr. GOSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. GOSS. I call the gentleman's attention to the language of the proviso:

That no part of the United States' share of the water in the International Rapids section on the St. Lawrence River shall be diverted for the benefit of any person or private corporation, nor shall the use of any part of said water or the rights pertaining to said water be sold, leased, or otherwise alienated to any person or private corporation for the generation of hydroelectric power.

It excludes them from the benefit of it.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. That is just exactly what I said. I said that this is for the benefit of all the people. Is not that correct?

Mr. GOSS. I do not think so.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Then I shall ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] what is meant by this proviso starting in line 21. Does it mean that the Power Authority of New York will forevermore control the waters for power purposes and cannot lease the power to corporations? It will hold it for the benefit of the people?

Mr. SNELL. The title to this power plant and all the works must forever remain in the power authority, which represents the people, the citizens of the State of New York.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. That is exactly what I stated, and that is the reason I propose to vote for the resolution. [Applause.]

As to the canal or the treaty, I confess I know little about it. The people of the section of the country where I come from have had some experience with one canal. It is impossible to estimate the damage to the great Mississippi Valley that has resulted from the construction of the Panama Canal. The amount of commerce that has been lost to my city, St. Louis, cannot be estimated, and as I said, though I know little about this project, I think that, too, is going to interfere with our commerce. It is going to be beneficial to a certain section of the country, but it is going to injure the Middle West, and I think a careful study will so disclose to anyone.

Mr. CULKIN. Is not the theory of this canal largely based upon the proposition that its construction will equalize matters for the Middle West and offset the damages done by the Panama Canal construction?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. That was the story that we were told about the Panama Canal, but what was the result?

Mr. CULKIN. But it was inevitable that the Panama Canal would hurt the interior of the country. This, however, affords the Middle West an outlet through the Great Lakes to the sea, and brings the sea 1,000 miles inland. It is bound to reduce carrying charges in the western country.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. In my estimation it will result in that the leading metropolis of the United States in the future will be in Chicago. Commerce will stop there, it will be Chicago that will probably secure more benefit than any other section.

Mr. CULKIN. I think the gentleman differs from all other economists on this question.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Probably so, but I know that the people of my city have been before the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations opposing the ratification of the treaty. The Panama Canal and I might also say, the intercoastal canals in Texas, have taken many millions of tons of commerce away from my city. Freight is diverted through the canal from the East to West and West to East. Before the construction of the canal the freight came through our section of the country. We could ship years ago in competition with the East and West to any part of the country, but now we are at a great disadvantage. We have lost our trade territory.

Again I say my vote is not an endorsement of the treaty but in supporting this resolution I feel if the treaty is ratified then we will save the power sites for the general public. If this resolution is not passed and the treaty ratified no telling what will happen. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER].

Mr. PARKER of New York. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], has given you a very good picture of what has happened. I am a New Yorker, and far be it from me to say anything that would be detrimental to New York State. This agreement that was made is as advantageous to New York as any treaty that could possibly be made. The average cost of horsepower produced under this treaty will be $9.11. The Aluminum Co. of America are paying at Messina, just above where this power starts, $15 per horsepower on a 20-year agreement. If that is not a good deal for New York, then I do not know what is, but my proposition is that this agreement has no place before the House of Representatives at this time or until the treaty has been ratified. There is no more reason for our sitting here today or tomorrow and passing this resolution than there is for trying to lift ourselves by our bootstraps because it is entirely dependent upon the ratification of the St. Lawrence Canal Treaty.

Some of you gentlemen do not know what the St. Lawrence Canal Treaty carries with it. Let me read to you part of section 3 of the St. Lawrence Canal Treaty.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER of New York. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman does not intend to give the House the impression that that treaty is before it at the present time?

Mr. PARKER of New York. I do not.

Mr. SNELL. Why not confine yourself to the matter before the House.

Mr. PARKER of New York. Will the gentleman give me time to lead up to my argument?

Mr. SNELL. That is not an answer to the question.

Mr. PARKER of New York. Of course, it is not directly, but it is decidedly so indirectly. The Federal Government is to pay for all the improvements, for every dollar of improvement in the Canadian rapids. The Canadian Government, of course, is to build its own power houses, but the Federal Government is to pay absolutely all the expenses, and when you get over the Canadian line the treaty provides:

That insofar as is possible in respect to the works to be constructed by the Commission the party thereof within Canadian territory or an equivalent proportion of the total of the works, shall be executed by the Canadian engineers and by Canadian labor.

And paid for by American money! In answer to the gentleman from New York as to why I say that, let me say that the treaty between Canada and the United States has not as yet been ratified.

It is before the Senate, and if you will take the trouble to read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD you will find that the Democratic Party in the Senate has been polled as to their attitude on the ratification of the treaty. That was brought out the other day in debate by Senator LONG.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER] has expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York 2 additional minutes.

Mr. PARKER of New York. In the debate, in which Senator LONG said the Democratic Members of the Senate were being polled on this proposition, exception was taken by the Senator from Illinois, but the chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee got up and acknowledged they were being polled, and said that the Senator from Illinois was incorrect.

Now, the reason this resolution is before us, advantageous as it may be to New York, is solely and simply for the effect it will have on the other body in the ratification of the treaty that is before the other body. Why? Because New York State agrees to appropriate $89,000,000 toward the completion of the canal, which brings the Federal appropriation down to $186,000,000 instead of $257,000,000. It is very much easier to ratify a treaty in the Senate carrying an appropriation of $168,000,000 than a treaty carrying an appropriation of $257,000,000.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RAMSAY].

Mr. RAMSAY. Mr. Speaker, I do not know much about treaties with New York. I am not interested in that; but, coming from a State where we have potentialities in water power, having in two of our rivers very nearly a million horsepower, we are interested in the great principle that underlies this bill—that is, that the water power of the Union and of every State shall remain the property of the people. That is the great principle in this bill that tends to carry out the last platform of the Democratic Party and the Republican Party that water power should be conserved in the interest of and for the people. As I say, we have nearly a million horsepower in two of our rivers in West Virginia. We have practically all the water power in the Appalachians. Today our legislature is considering the passage of a law modeled after the famous law of New York that will forever place all water power in the interest of the people of West Virginia.

We have had quite an experience in West Virginia on water power. A few years ago our legislature passed a water-power bill, and after the bill was passed somebody wrote into the bill a provision that took all the rights away from the people and placed them in some water-power interest of West Virginia. If it had not been for the Supreme Court of West Virginia which took that provision out, we would not today be much interested in the welfare of this project.

Mr. EDMONDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSAY. I yield.

Mr. EDMONDS. The gentleman's State is a coal State, is it not?

Mr. RAMSAY. Yes; and we have water power, too.

Mr. EDMONDS. Of course the gentleman realizes that every horsepower displaces from 3 to 5 tons of coal annually?

Mr. RAMSAY. I know that one of the great water powers in my State is a few miles back of Morgantown on the Cheat River, on what is known as Cheat Lake, and that the mountainside there is teeming with coal all around it. They develop their power with water power because they can do it vastly cheaper than they can by the consumption of coal.

Mr. EDMONDS. The gentleman will then agree that he is willing to give up coal mining to get water power?

Mr. RAMSAY. I am not willing to give up our coal interests, no; but I want to preserve the water-power interests in favor of my people in my State. I do not want the people of my State to pay three times as much for electricity as they ought to pay, and as they are doing now. In Canada you can buy electricity for one third what we are paying in West Virginia, where the gentleman claims we have coal in every hill and water power in every rill.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSAY. I yield.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. In other words, Canada has some advantage on us in the matter of selling this water power, and we are not giving them labor advantages in this very treaty? In other words, every bit of this canal that is to be built on Canadian waters is to be built by Canadian labor, but when it comes to the American territory, there is equal division of labor. Is the gentleman in favor of that?

Mr. RAMSAY. Canada has the advantage of us because the Government of Canada has developed the water powers, while in America we have been willing to turn them over to private interests.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSAY. I yield.

Mr. CULKIN. Replying to the inference left by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WEIDEMAN], it is a fact that the last President of the United States and the present President, Mr. Roosevelt, who is intimately familiar with this problem, were and are definitely in favor of this treaty.

Mr. RAMSAY. I understand that. I do not know much about that, but I do know that both the Democratic Party and the Republican Party in their last conventions were pledged to the conservation of these rights in the interest of the people for all time.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSAY. I yield.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. The bill we are considering today has nothing at all to do with the treaty?

Mr. RAMSAY. I am not discussing the treaty.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. But the gentleman from New York spoke about the treaty, and this bill has nothing to do with the treaty whatsoever.

Mr. RAMSAY. Of course, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER] is correct. Congress has nothing whatever in the world to do with the treaty that is now being sought to be made between Canada and the United States as to the extension of the improvements in the St. Lawrence waterway. That question is one for the President, with the consent of the United States Senate, to settle, and I believe we in the House have confidence that the President and the United States Senate will not permit the interests of the United States and the State of New York to suffer in the settlement of this treaty. The treaty question in this issue is injected as a mere blind and as an excuse to oppose the extension of this great waterway, which will mean so much to the people of the United States. Not only is it carrying out the well-known campaign issue of the President of the United States, but it is carrying out the great principle that the water powers of the United States shall be conserved for and in the interests of the people.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS] has said that the development of every horsepower of electricity will displace from 3 to 5 tons of coal annually. Even if this be true, the water powers of the various States are sure to be developed and are sought to be developed. The great hydroelectric power interests are straining every nerve and doing everything within their power to secure control of the great undeveloped water powers in my State.

I can see little difference in the production of coal whether this electricity be developed by special interest or by the State itself. In either way it will have the same effect upon the mining of coal, but it will have a vastly different effect upon the interests of the people.

The electrical rates in West Virginia today are probably the highest that are charged in America, yet we have untold power going to waste that could develop sufficient electricity to supply every legitimate interest in the State, and that would develop the State and cause cities to spring up in the valleys that are now used for waste lands or for farms. It would and could develop such power at an extremely low cost.

Last year while I was in Ontario, Canada, I met a gentleman who claimed to be a cousin of the president of the greatest steel industry in my district, Mr. Follansbee. He claimed that while he was still an American he lived in Ontario because he could buy his electricity and everything else much more cheaply than he could in the United States, and claimed that he was buying electricity for domestic use at 2 cents per kilowatt-hour. In my own State I believe the average cost for domestic consumption is around 7 cents per kilowatt-hour.

I have spoken of the water power that can be developed in the Cheat River and along the New River, yet these are not all the water powers located within the State. The Black Falls, of Tucker County, is one of the finest sites for the development of water power in America, which is located in nearly the exact center of the State. The Potomac and Southern Branch of the Potomac also have potentialities. In fact, West Virginia is blessed with more water power than all of the other States in the Appalachian chain of mountains put together. Therefore I am interested in this great principle of the development of water power in the interest for and on behalf of the people, knowing full well that the adoption of this measure and the measure that we adopted yesterday for the development of Muscle Shoals will awaken my people in West Virginia to the urgent need and necessity of requiring their legislature to take some action that will preserve and develop these great natural resources for and on their behalf.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RAMSAY] has expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL].

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, we in Michigan are very much interested in the development of the St. Lawrence deep waterway. I want to say at this time that the average person resident in the United States, particularly in the eastern seaboard, is not familiar with the amount of benefit that will accrue to the people of the Central West and the agricultural interests of the Northwest, and I may include St. Louis in the area that will benefit. St. Louis need not worry over possible detrimental effect. We can also assure my colleague from Missouri that Great Lakes shipping will not ask for any subsidy, as was necessary to maintain the Mississippi-Warrior Barge Line. Michigan's prosperity will radiate to the Middle West and will engulf St. Louis. I predict—and I base my prediction upon figures secured from reliable sources—that within a few years after the development of the St. Lawrence deep waterway this river will become the greatest artery of commerce in the world.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I yield.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. What single thing has the city of Detroit to export through a seaway at this time?

Mr. DINGELL. The gentleman had better post himself on facts. Detroit is still one of America's great ports of outlet, for the city of Detroit has automobiles, stoves, pharmaceutical products, adding machines, paints, malleable iron, machinery, and scores of other products to export. The State of Michigan has copper, iron ore, and steel that await cheap water transportation.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Does not the gentleman know that Mr. Ford has built an automobile plant in England; and does he not know General Motors has a plant in England and a plant in Germany? Mr. Ford makes his tractors so cheap in Ireland that he ships them back to this country and sells them cheaper than we can manufacture them here. [Applause.] Does not the gentleman know we have not one single thing in the city of Detroit or the State of Michigan to export?

Mr. DINGELL. Is the gentleman arguing with me, making a speech on my time allotment, or playing politics?

Mr. WEIDEMAN. I am interrogating the gentleman.

Mr. DINGELL. I realize your questions are made because they are going into the Record, and I want to call your attention to what the waterway will mean to Detroit. I am sorry because I have allotted to me the brief span of 3 minutes, and it would require an hour of recitation to enumerate the many products Detroit and Michigan have for export.

Before going further into this subject let me correct my colleague as regards Ford and his tractors. Their manufacture has long ago been discontinued in Ireland. So that question affords no basis for debate. However, the gentleman will recall my prophecy after the St. Lawrence is deepened.

Within the next 20 years Detroit will be the third largest city in the United States and one of the world's foremost ports. It is for that reason that the eastern seaboard and the southern portion of the United States have heretofore opposed this plan. They fear the effect upon their own ports. As a matter of fact the chief opposition will come from a certain city which fears that the rail center will be shifted to Detroit in the event the Tidewater Congress plan of deepening the St. Lawrence is completed.

The farmers, the iron mines, the copper mines, the automobile industry of Michigan will benefit. The automobile industry of Michigan will ship more cheaply our automobiles into France, England, and other nations where trade barriers at present keep them out.

I say frankly we need not fear what result this may have on Detroit. If we are well informed on the subject, we know it means a great deal toward reviving the greatest manufacturing center in the world to its former greatness, and no Detroiters should get up here and attack this bill. This is the biggest single thing that can happen to benefit Detroit real estate, Detroit taxpayers, and the people of Michigan.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. Not to let the gentleman play politics and ask irrelevant questions. I am dealing with matters of economics and of statesmanship which affect our constituencies. The city of Detroit will become the greatest port outside of possibly New York in less than 5 years following the completion of this international highway.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Does the gentleman realize he is covering a lot of territory?

Mr. DINGELL. Yes, I do; but here my colleague does not. I am voting for the St. Lawrence waterway.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. O'MALLEY].

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I object particularly to bringing this resolution in at this time, because it seeks to determine the rights of the State of New York in the benefits of the St. Lawrence waterway in advance of the ratification of the treaty.

If we adopt the rule, we are prevented from amending this resolution to determine and protect the rights of other States affected by the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway. [Applause.]

My particular State is just as much interested in the St. Lawrence waterway as the State of New York, and it has just as much justification to have its rights determined in advance of the ratification of the treaty as the State of New York has.

This is no time for the consideration of this resolution.

If the House passes it, notice is served on the Senate that the House is in favor of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Waterway Treaty. If we defeat it, the action likewise serves notice on the other body that we do not particularly favor the St. Lawrence Waterway Treaty and the ratification of that treaty.

I believe this rule should be defeated, because this resolution has no place at this time in this legislative body.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. O'MALLEY. I yield.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. This rule could be brought up for consideration just as well after the ratification of the treaty as now.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Absolutely.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Did the gentleman ever hear of a law being passed to determine the rights of people before the law which gives them the rights is even passed?

Mr. O'MALLEY. Never before.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. All time has expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, before I move the previous question I should like to announce that there will be a meeting of the Rules Committee immediately.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the rule.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DOUGLASS) there were—ayes 53, noes 22.

So the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. DE PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his point of no quorum for a moment?

Mr. DE PRIEST. I will reserve the point for a moment.

Mr. RAYBURN. If the point of no quorum is insisted upon I shall feel obliged, in order to keep faith with many Members who were assured the joint resolution would not be voted on today, to move that the House adjourn. This might inconvenience a great many of the Members who are here and might inconvenience the leadership in its program. However, if the point of no quorum is insisted upon, I shall move that the House adjourn, in order that we may keep faith with the Members who went away.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, there was an understanding with the leadership on both sides of the House that no vote would be had on the joint resolution today; that the vote would go over until tomorrow.

Mr. DE PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, in view of the agreement that the joint resolution would not be voted upon today, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The resolution was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution providing for the use of the water of the St. Lawrence River for the generation of power by the State of New York under and in accordance with the provisions of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Deep Waterway Treaty between the United States and Canada

Whereas the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Deep Waterway Treaty between the United States and Canada, signed at Washington, July 18, 1932, has been favorably reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations and is now before the Senate of the United States for ratification; and

Whereas the treaty provides for the improvement of navigation from the interior of the Continent of North America through the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence River to the sea, with the development of the waterpower incidental thereto; and

Whereas it is desirable that, prior to the ratification of said treaty, there should be a definite allocation of the power to be developed on the United States side of the International Rapids section of the St. Lawrence River and a determination of the division of the cost of the works in that section for navigation and power; and

Whereas the State of New York, recognizing the superior rights and authority of the Federal Government with respect to navigation, has presented substantial claims to the power to be developed by the flow of the water of the St. Lawrence River within its boundaries and, by act of its legislature, has created the Power Authority of the State of New York as a corporate municipal instrumentality charged with the development and control of the power for the benefit of domestic and rural consumers through distribution at the lowest possible rates; and

Whereas the Committee on Foreign Relations, in reporting the treaty to the Senate, has recommended that the State of New York should be accorded the power upon the payment of so much of the total cost of the improvement therein as is justly allocatable to power development; and

Whereas the United States engineers and the Power Authority of the State of New York have, as a result of a series of conferences, entered into a joint recommendation with respect to the allocation of cost of the works in the international rapids section of the St. Lawrence River for power and navigation, which is embodied in a memorandum dated February 7, 1933: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the prior use of all the waters of the St. Lawrence River within the boundaries of the United States is necessary for the proper regulation of commerce and the improvement of navigation; and be it further

Resolved, That in the event of the ratification of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Deep Waterway Treaty and the construction of the works provided therein, the Power Authority of the State of New York, as the accredited agency of the State and in accordance with the policy set forth in the act creating said Power Authority, shall be entitled to use for the generation of hydroelectric power all of the United States' share of the flow of the water in the international rapids section of the St. Lawrence River, subject to the prior use of such water under the treaty for the purposes of navigation and the operation of reservoirs, canals, and locks, and shall have title to the power houses and works appurtenant thereto upon the United States side, together with the lands upon which they are situated, in consideration of the payment of its share of the cost as determined in the joint memorandum above referred to: Provided, That no part of the United States' share of the water in the international rapids section of the St. Lawrence River shall be diverted for the benefit of any person or private corporation, nor shall the use of any part of said water or the rights pertaining to said water be sold, leased, or otherwise alienated to any person or private corporation for the generation of hydroelectric power.

Mr. PARKER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes to complete my argument.

To tie up this resolution we are discussing with the treaty, I want to repeat that the State of New York is to furnish $89,000,000 of the money, which will expedite the ratification of the treaty on the other side of the Capitol, as you all know, and this is the sole purpose of bringing up the resolution at this time, because there is no New Yorker who is foolish enough to oppose the resolution on the face of the resolution itself.

New York is getting a good proposition out of this; but if the House of Representatives goes on record as favoring any part of the St. Lawrence waterway, as you all know, it will certainly have a bearing and an effect on the gentlemen at the other side of the Capitol.

Now, let us come to the commercial part of this for a moment. Every single dollar's worth of freight that goes over the St. Lawrence Canal more than is now exported from the port of Montreal comes from where? It comes from every single port from Portland, Maine, to Galveston, Tex. It comes out of the American public and comes out of the American ports, and, besides all this, it restricts very materially the water that you gentlemen want down in the Mississippi River, in the so-called "Chicago Drainage Canal", to complete your improvement there, and makes that absolutely impossible.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER of New York. I have not time to yield now and must decline.

The gentleman from New York spoke of Montreal. The treaty specifically provides that there shall be two levels of water, one above Montreal and one at Montreal, so as not to interfere in the slightest with the commerce of Montreal. In other words, if there ever was a one-sided bargain made, we have made it in this treaty, I believe, because there is not a port, as I have said, from Portland, Maine, to Galveston, Tex., on the Atlantic coast that is not going to be seriously affected if the St. Lawrence waterway goes through and is a practical success. I have very grave doubts that it will ever be a success.

Mr. DOUGLASS. Will the gentleman yield for a question there?

Mr. PARKER of New York. Yes.

Mr. DOUGLASS. Is the gentleman willing that all ports on the Atlantic coast should be destroyed for the benefit of the St. Lawrence Canal?

Mr. PARKER of New York. My remarks were just the opposite.

Mr. DOUGLASS. The gentleman said they would be seriously affected. They would be seriously affected by the loss of business, would they not?

Mr. PARKER of New York. Yes.

Mr. DOUGLASS. And does the gentleman approve of that?

Mr. PARKER of New York. That is what I meant to imply and what I protested against. I am against this resolution.

Mr. DOUGLASS. I am glad of that.

Mr. PARKER of New York. I am very sorry that I have not made myself plain. There is not a port on the Atlantic seaboard or in the Mississippi Valley that will not be very seriously hurt by the adoption of the treaty, and this is the first step toward adopting the treaty.

Mr. DOUGLASS. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. PARKER of New York. We might just as well get down to cases and understand what we are doing. There is a reason for bringing this resolution in here now.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PARKER of New York. I yield myself 2 more minutes.

The reason for bringing this resolution in here at this time and passing it through the House, as I understand you will undoubtedly do, because with your overwhelming majority you can force it through, is to have an effect on the other body and bring about a ratification of the St. Lawrence Treaty.

Mr. HOLMES. The gentleman has called attention to the fact that the State of New York is going to contribute $89,000,000 to this project.

Mr. PARKER of New York. Yes.

Mr. HOLMES. What is the share of the Federal Government toward the cost of completing this entire work—about $168,000,000?

Mr. PARKER of New York. If we should pay 50-50, our national expense would be $256,000,000, and with the contribution of $89,000,000, or practically $90,000,000 from New York State, the Federal appropriation is $168,000,000, and that is why I say this is put through to affect the attitude of gentlemen on the other side of the Capitol.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman now do me the courtesy to yield?

Mr. PARKER of New York. Yes.

Mr. CULKIN. Is it not a fact that there would be a further reduction on construction costs of 25 percent? Does the gentleman know that that is the fact?

Mr. PARKER of New York. You mean under the estimates?

Mr. CULKIN. Yes; under the estimates.

Mr. PARKER of New York. No; I do not.

Mr. CULKIN. Well, that is the fact.

Mr. PARKER of New York. I do not think so.

Mr. CULKIN. This type of construction at the present time is being built at 50 percent of the estimates, so that 25 percent is a conservative figure and will save something like $40,000,000 additional.

Mr. PARKER of New York. Suppose it does; the proportion of contribution between the Federal Government and the State remains the same.

Mr. GOSS. May I ask the gentleman if he does not think it is a significant fact that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McREYNOLDS], chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House, introduced this bill? I mean significant as far as its effect with respect to the treaty on the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate is concerned.

Mr. PARKER of New York. No one could have been more emphatic than myself in saying that I believe the sole purpose of this resolution is to effect a ratification of the treaty.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute. It was thought by the people who were responsible for this resolution that it should go to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, but that committee did not have jurisdiction. That is the only reason that I can give. Now, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, the effect of the passage of this resolution will be to give effect to a joint recommendation or agreement between the United States Engineers and the Power Authority of the State of New York, dated February 7, 1933, allocating the cost of the construction of the Great Lakes deep waterway over the so-called "international section" of the St. Lawrence River between the United States and the State of New York.

It should be kept in mind that this resolution has no effect at all unless the treaty between Canada and the United States for the improvement of this waterway is subsequently ratified by the Senate. It is only effective in case the treaty is ratified.

The recommendation of the engineers of the Federal Government and the Power Authority of the State of New York has two features in it. It fixes the amount the State of New York shall pay toward the expense of the waterway for the water-power rights on the American side of the river and it settles for all time the right of the State of New York, through the power authority, to control the water-power development on the American side of the river. In other words, it provides very definitely that private water-power interests cannot acquire or develop any of the hydro-electric power on the American side of the river after the improvement or construction of this waterway.

Mr. PARKER of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I yield.

Mr. PARKER of New York. Does the gentleman mean to say that the Federal Government and the State of New York cannot change the treaty any time they wish?

Mr. MAPES. The United States and Canada could change the treaty if they saw fit to do so, and it would take the affirmative action of the Congress and the Legislature of the State of New York to change this agreement after it has been adopted or entered into by both parties.

Mr. PARKER of New York. That is what I mean.

Mr. MAPES. They could change it if they saw fit, but it would take a definite statutory enactment by the Federal Government and the State of New York to do so.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I am sorry, I have not the time. The direct money benefit to the United States by the adoption of this resolution will be $89,000,000, plus. In other words, the State of New York agrees to contribute that amount to the cost of the waterway if we adopt this resolution.

My colleague from New York [Mr. PARKER] argues that the adoption of this resolution will assist the ratification of the treaty in the Senate. That may be. I do not know; but if it does, it seems to me a wise thing to do. It certainly can do no harm. It binds the State of New York to contribute $89,000,000 toward the expense of the improvement of this waterway. Why should not the Federal Government take advantage of it.

Mr. DOUGLASS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I cannot yield, for I have only a short time. I am for this resolution. I voted to report it in the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. But I want to call attention to one feature of the agreement which it proposes to put into effect.

The resolution was introduced and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and some of us did not have a chance to study it carefully before hearings were had upon it. I have been looking over the hearings before the Senate committee since the hearings were held before the House committee, and I want to call attention to one feature of the agreement between the Federal Government and the State of New York which I think ought to be corrected before the resolution becomes effective.

Paragraph 5 of that agreement says:

In the event that the State of New York elects, the United States assumes responsibility for the construction of the works in their entirety at a cost to New York representing the sum of the costs above set forth, or a total of $89,726,000, provided that if the actual cost be less than this amount, New York will receive the benefit of the said savings.

The estimates were based on 1926 prices, and upon cross-examination General Pillsbury, the Assistant Chief of Engineers, said that he thought there was no question but that the actual cost of the improvement would be less than the $89,000,000. In that event the State of New York would get some reduction. But there is no provision in the recommendation of the engineers—and this is the point I wish to call attention to—for a situation which would arise if the cost of the New York share should prove to be more than $89,000,000. The agreement does not require the State of New York to stand its proportionate share of the increased cost in that event, as it ought to do. In the hearings before the Senate committee the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] asked General Pillsbury this question:

Senator VANDENBERG. Then we guarantee the upset price of even the power works which are to be executed within the control of the State of New York.

General PILLSBURY. We can safely do that on the basis of present currency values.

Senator GLENN. But you do not know what will happen to present currency values before this is completed.

On page 1017 of the Senate hearings General Pillsbury reiterated:

The estimates in this report are really very conservative indeed. I see no reason why there should be an excess, unless there is a depreciation of the currency.

Inflation of the currency becomes more and more threatening, and it may be that $89,000,000 will not represent New York's proportionate cost of the improvement when the work is done. I think before this agreement is finally ratified in the Senate there ought to be some provision taking care of that situation.

Some reference has been made here this afternoon to the Aluminum Co. of America and its rights to the water power along the St. Lawrence River. I read from the statement of Delos M. Cosgrove, vice chairman of the Power Authority of the Port of New York, in his testimony before the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce on Thursday of last week, April 20, 1933:

During the past 20 years many important American industries have been induced to locate plants in Canada because of the almost unlimited supply of cheap hydroelectric power available there.

Foremost among these is the Aluminum Co. of America, which built a huge plant and power development in the Province of Quebec.

This migration of American industries has caused great loss to the United States. It has involved the transfer of millions of dollars of American capital to Canada, loss of employment to thousands of American workmen, and shrinkage of the American market for food and other products.

The opposition of the Province of Quebec to the development of the water power of the St. Lawrence River within the State of New York is frankly based upon a desire that this movement of American industry to Canada shall continue.

The witness then went on to quote from a statement of Premier Taschereau, of the Quebec Legislature, which the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] quoted here this afternoon, to establish the fact that that is the attitude of the Province of Quebec toward this improvement. Premier Taschereau said:

The pressing need of the United States is for power. Do you think we are ever going to get industrial development in the Province of Quebec by permitting the United States what she needs now for the development of her own industries? I have seen many captains of industry, so called, and they all tell me the same thing: "Keep your hydro power at home and you will have American capital going into your Province for the development of industries, and your Province will profit and progress."

This is not a sectional matter. As stated in the report of the Senate committee, "The enterprise is in the very strictest sense national in its scope."

It comes with poor grace for those interested in Atlantic and other ports to oppose the passage of this resolution on the ground that it will injure their ports, in view of the assistance they have received from the Federal Government.

Quoting again from the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate:

Philadelphia is 80 nautical miles from the open sea and has $52,000,000 of Government money spent toward the improvement of that stretch of water leading up to its docks. Organizations in the city of Baltimore sent briefs in opposition to the treaty. It has had $13,500,000 from the Federal Treasury to enable it to secure the preeminence it has attained as an ocean port. $58,393,978 of the national revenues to which the States tributary to the Great Lakes have contributed have gone into the improvement of New York Harbor. Albany and Buffalo have had, respectively, $18,000,000 and $8,600,000.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ADAIR). The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN].

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, considerable curiosity has been evidenced here today as to the reason why this resolution has been brought forward at this time. The distinguished Chairman of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee gave answer to that when he stated that it was being brought forward by reason of the fact that the President of the United States had sent a letter to him as chairman and asked him to progress this matter. That should count largely in this situation, especially by reason of the fact that the New York Power Authority is the child of the President of the United States.

EFFECT OF RESOLUTION

The pending resolution, H.J.Res. 157, simply protects and safeguards the rights of the people of the State of New York if the St. Lawrence Treaty is ratified by the Senate. Congress by the adoption of this resolution admits the title of New York State to this power. Nor is this admission obtained without consideration. By virtue of negotiations between the New York Power Authority and the Federal Government the sum of $89,726,000 has been allocated as New York State's share of the construction cost. This amount has been approved by the United States engineers and accepted by the New York Power Authority as its proper and just share of the expense of the construction of the St. Lawrence Seaway. The total cost to both countries for this seaway is $543,429,000. The total American cost of this construction is $272,453,000. From this should be deducted New York State's contribution to construction, to wit, $89,726,000. Therefore, the total cost to the United States for this seaway is $182,727,000. It should be stated in that connection that the actual cost of this construction, under existing prices will, in the opinion of the engineers, probably be 25 percent less than the estimated figure. Deducting 25 percent from $182,727,000 leaves $137,045,223 as the probable total cost to the United States. The wild talk of America's share of this enterprise running into $1,000,000,000 is absurd and unjustified.

It is necessary and advisable that the House pass this resolution so that when the Senate comes to consider the treaty it will know approximately what the American disbursement will be.

WHAT THIS SEAWAY IS

The construction of this seaway contemplates the improvement of the St. Lawrence River and the connecting waters between the Great Lakes so as to permit ocean-going ships to pass without breaking cargo from the sea to the remotest Lake ports. It will extend the ocean 1,000 miles westward into the very heart of the continent.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. I do not have much time, but I will be glad to yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I want to clear up a matter in my own mind. Is the gentleman referring to the cost of that stretch of the stream which is the international boundary?

Mr. CULKIN. I refer to the entire cost of the seaway. I would say I do not refer to the present construction between Tibbetts Point and Ogdensburg, but I refer to the entire future cost of the seaway.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Those figures are very much under the figures that were submitted to our committee, which ran between $750,000,000 and $1,000,000,000.

Mr. CULKIN. To be frank, I have taken those figures not from the hearings but from a pamphlet which was published by the Great Lakes & St. Lawrence Waterway Association, and I assume they are authentic.

INTERIOR MAROONED

Senate Document No. 183, Sixty-ninth Congress, second session, summarizes the necessity for this seaway. It relates that the construction of a shipway of sufficient depth to admit ocean vessels from the Atlantic to the Great Lakes will lessen the economic handicaps of adverse transportation costs to the vast area in the interior of the American Continent. This area embraces more than 22 States. Within this area there are more than 40,000,000 people, who gain their livelihood through agricultural production and manufacturing. The people of these inland sections have had their progress retarded both from a manufacturing and agricultural standpoint by handicaps in transportation.

The building of the Panama Canal left them marooned in the interior of the continent. It placed on them unfair handicaps in matters of transportation. There can be no disagreement that the people in these inland areas are entitled to relief.

NEW ENGLAND'S ATTITUDE

I call the attention of the House to the Report of the Joint New England-St. Lawrence Waterway Committee, composed of political leaders, leading engineers, and publicists from seven New England States. This group found that the opening of such a waterway would be beneficial rather than detrimental, because it opens to New England industries a new and cheap transportation artery; because it results in the saving of cuts in food supplies; because it has no possible adverse effect on the railroads. This committee finally placed itself definitely on record for the consummation of a treaty with Canada and urged upon all New England local and national representatives the desirability of their full cooperation in every reasonable manner to bring this about.

SMALL EFFECT ON NEW YORK

The claim is made in some circles that it will affect the commercial destinies of New York State. Of course, this is true to a small degree, but the fact is that New York State, through the acquisition of the water power, will be fully reimbursed through that medium.

SENATOR WALSH STATED THE CASE

In a speech delivered before the Boston (Mass.) Chamber of Commerce on April 12, 1928, by the late Senator Walsh, of Montana, he stated:

With the marvelous development of the West, a development that has no parallel in history, the desire to see opened to general navigation the route by which the waters draining into the Great Lakes find their way into the ocean has become insistent. It is not alone the States whose territory lies in part within the basin of the St. Lawrence but as well all those beyond as far as the Rocky Mountains, whose products find an outlet through the Lake ports, that have a direct concern in this great enterprise.

RAILROAD RATES PROHIBITIVE

It is undeniable that railroad rates for bulk commodities have become prohibitive. The only hope for the agricultural group in Midwestern America is through water-borne transportation, where the cost of carrying the products of the farm is thoroughly minimized. This affects not only the farmer of the West but the manufacturer of the East. The construction of this seaway will solve one of the major problems that now vex the western farmer. This low-cost transportation will be reflected in savings to the farmer and will result in increased comforts and an opportunity for him and his family.

Now is the time to build the St. Lawrence Seaway. Canada is ready and construction costs are extremely low. It will offer labor for the unemployed. Most of all, it will aid in removing the economic inequality from which the Western States now suffer. It will do this without appreciable injury to any locality. The passage of this pending resolution will help this great cause on its way. I very much trust this House will act favorably on this resolution. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN] has expired.

Mr. PARKER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTENGILL].

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, if the Senate of the United States had already ratified the St. Lawrence Waterway Treaty I would vote freely and readily for this resolution, and I take it if that were already an accomplished fact there would not be 10 votes in this House against the resolution under those circumstances. We would all be glad in that case to have New York get the power in the St. Lawrence River, and in that case we would all be glad to have the United States Government receive the $90,000,000 from the State of New York. There is therefore no necessity for passing this resolution at this time. If the St. Lawrence Waterway Treaty is ratified, this resolution will be readily agreed upon by the House; and it therefore is offered at this time only for the purpose of bringing pressure to bear on the United States Senate in the exercise of its constitutional functions.

Recently the Wagner bill came to the House, and objection was made that that was a revenue bill and did not properly arise in the Senate. In the same way I think this resolution does not properly arise in this House at this time. It can have no other effect except to be used as an argument by the proponents of the St. Lawrence waterway when the discussion comes up in the Senate that they should ratify the waterway treaty.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETTENGILL. I yield.

Mr. CULKIN. The gentleman differs with his leader, the President of the United States, on that proposition?

Mr. PETTENGILL. I do not know what reason the President of the United States has in asking for this resolution at this time, if it is true that he in fact does ask for it.

Mr. CULKIN. In any event, the gentleman differs with him.

Mr. PETTENGILL. The President of the United States has not a more loyal supporter in this House than I, but in this particular instance I think the Senate of the United States should take action on the treaty before we are called upon to pass upon the matter.

Mr. FISH. Is it not true that the President of the United States is a human being, and he cannot give his entire time to these matters?

Mr. PETTENGILL. I agree to that.

Now, who gets the benefit of the reduced freight rates to Europe as the result of the building of this waterway? Does the American producer get the benefit or does the European consumer get the benefit of the reduced freight rates? That is a question that cannot be answered definitely. It all depends upon the question whether in the terminal market it is a buyer's market at the time the freight arrives or whether it is a seller's market at that time.

In 1929 the American railroads reduced the cost of transporting wheat to the Atlantic seaboard for foreign export, in order to help the wheat situation, and immediately in the Liverpool market, Argentine and Australian wheat was reduced in the same amount that the freight rates were reduced in the United States, so that the benefit of the freight reduction and the loss of railroad revenues went to the European consumer and not to the American wheat grower. That could readily apply and would no doubt generally apply with reference to reduced water freight rates on wheat originating in Duluth or automobiles originating in Detroit, South Bend, Cleveland, or Buffalo.

I want to ask another question, If after we have built this seaway through Canadian territory, in large part with our money, what is then to prevent Great Britain from putting a tariff on American wheat and excluding it from the Liverpool market and letting Canadian wheat go over this seaway, built with our money, free of charge? What is to prevent her doing that? If she does do it, we become the international boobs of the world. What is to prevent her putting a tariff upon automobiles made in Detroit, after we have built the seaway, and allow Canadian-made automobiles to go freely to the English market over a seaway built with our money, contributed in part by the American automobile manufacturers?

Mr. EDMONDS. That is exactly what Great Britain has done by the Ottawa compact. She has put a duty on American wheat and allows Canadian wheat, if shipped through Montreal, to go in without duty; but if that same Canadian wheat is brought down to New York or Philadelphia and shipped, then she puts a duty on it.

Mr. PETTENGILL. I am very much afraid that this seaway will be another illustration of that old adage that we never lost a war or won a conference. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTENGILL] has expired.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McREYNOLDS].

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, judging from the remarks made a few moments ago as to what might occur, anything might occur; some things will not occur, and within the realm of ordinary experience certain things may reasonably be expected to occur. It is just a case of setting up straw men only to knock them down.

It seems to me the Members of the House should be big enough to try to develop the United States as a whole instead of looking at their own special interests. There is plenty here for everybody, from the East coast to the West coast, and from the North to the South.

During the administration of President Roosevelt as Governor of the State of New York in 1931, a bill was passed and became a law providing for the Power Commission of New York, so they could protect for the people of that State practically the only great natural resource left in that section. It was specifically for the purpose of looking after the great power interests along the St. Lawrence River.

The opening of the St. Lawrence River is bound to benefit all those Western States which face on the Great Lakes. It means a 27-foot waterway from the Lakes to the ocean, which will benefit the States of Indiana, Ohio, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, and Minnesota, and give them a straight waterway to the ocean. Yet some Members in this House are willing to oppose this bill because they feel it might affect Massachusetts or somebody down on the eastern coast.

The rapids where these dams are to be built is the place where the power will be developed; and the Federal Government entered into an agreement, by consent of Congress giving them the power to ratify, with the Power Commission of New York, so that they might stand their portion of this expense and that the great State of New York might have this power at its command, that it might not fall into the hands of private interests.

When Franklin Roosevelt was Governor of the State of New York he was interested in this matter. He is interested in it today as the President of the United States.

The treaty between this country and Canada was signed last July. One week prior to that time Canada entered into an agreement with the Province of Ontario by which that Province was allowed the power rights on the Canadian side of the river. The resolution we are now considering is merely for the purpose of allowing the Federal Government to trade with the State of New York, giving that State the rights she is entitled to, at a cost of $89,700,000 in round figures. It cuts this amount from the expense to the Federal Government, it keeps the power rights in the hands of the people of New York, and settles the question as to whether or not the Federal Government or the State of New York shall be entitled to the power rights along the St. Lawrence River which, you know, is an unsettled question.

Personally, I feel, from a reading of the record and the hearings before the Senate, that this resolution ought to pass. While it is not a part of the treaty, yet it is an auxiliary to the treaty enabling this Government, or the commissioners who represent this Government, to know what expense this Government will be put to if the treaty is signed. This resolution is an administration measure, otherwise it would not be considered at this time. [Applause.]

Mr. PARKER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEITER].

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, before proceeding with a narrative of my own thoughts on this subject let me quote a portion of an editorial of the Buffalo Courier Express of March 27, 1933:

The St. Lawrence seaway, if built, will tremendously affect the entire American continent for generations to come. Unless it means the radical realignment of the Nation's industries, the opening of new transportation channels, and the closing of old ones, then surely there is no justification in building it at all.

It would, of course, do just that. It would mean killing certain industries and revivifying others. Whole communities that draw their economic sustenance from the present distribution of economic forces would wither, others that could profit by a new alignment would blossom.

This newspaper has opposed the St. Lawrence waterway. It has believed, and it still believes, that it represents bad economics. For all of our admiration for Mr. Roosevelt, we cannot change that opinion.

We think the cost would not be a "few hundred millions", as its proponents have contended, but more than a billion dollars; and that opinion is based upon the most careful calculations of competent engineers. Other millions would have to be spent by Great Lakes cities to dredge harbors to the depth required for ocean-going vessels.

Perhaps everyone here knows more about the St. Lawrence waterway than I do, a subject which has been so extensively discussed during the seventy-second session of Congress and so ably explained to you by the Foreign Relations Committee.

The Government has a rather limited number of ways for disbursing funds to create employment. It would build a dam to irrigate unneeded fields, to compete with and close down a nearby power plant or to improve the navigation of a stream to put a locomotive engineer out of a job. It may build a highway or a waterway to weaken a railroad in its ability to meet its tax assessments. And on top of all, in many of these activities, it lowers the taxing ability of many hard-pressed States, cities, and towns through the removal of power-plant earnings or the placing of real estate outside of a taxable classification.

As taxpayers and loyal American citizens we should protest emphatically the construction of the St. Lawrence waterway on the ground that at this time, when our Nation should practice strictest economy in balancing the National Budget, it would represent the absolutely unwarranted expenditure of a billion dollars without any known good to the citizens of this country.

A large operator, operating a fleet of 18 large vessels in the upper Lakes trade and 25 "canalers" in the St. Lawrence trade, paints a picture of the marvelous efficiency of the Great Lakes fleet, and with this as a background, concludes:

* * * a very small percentage of the great commerce of the Lakes will utilize the St. Lawrence River, if completed * * * the savings, if any, would be out of proportion to the stupendous cost that is estimated and reported in the public press.

The Lake Carriers' Association expressed its disapproval of the development when, on November 10, the executive committee passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the vessel interests represented by the Lake Carriers' Association are opposed to the proposed improvement of the St. Lawrence waterway for reasons which will be compiled and submitted to our general counsel for his further consideration and preparations for presentation in Government hearings at Washington.

In compliance with this resolution, representatives of the association appeared on November 16, 1932, before the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations in opposition to the project.

The St. Lawrence Waterway Treaty will presumably lead to the construction of a shipway from the head of the Lakes to the port of Montreal, to which port sea-going vessels may now enter. This proposed construction of a shipway involves a 27-foot channel for sea-going ships. There is to be a collateral development of power. Expenses of construction and maintenance and the collateral power developed are to be shared by the Dominion of Canada and the United States.

Those millions, plus additional millions for upkeep and maintenance, would have to come out of the pockets of American and Canadian taxpayers. They would represent a direct subsidy to shipping—not to all shipping but to certain favored classes of shipping.

Operations thereon will be in competition with, and will divert traffic from, rail carriers during 6½ or 7 months of the year when operating costs are lowest, but will require the railroads to provide maximum facilities during the winter months, when operating costs are at a maximum. Notwithstanding this diversion, the obligation to handle the traffic during a part of the year will necessitate the keeping of the railroad plant at a maximum efficiency during the entire year.

The Joint Board of Engineers estimates that the entire cost of the proposed 27-foot channel, including the proposed power development, will be $543,429,000 and that the share to be borne by the United States will be $272,453,000.

It is estimated that of this total amount the expenditures for power development in the international section of the St. Lawrence River will represent something over $100,000,000, one half of which is to be paid by the United States.

The project is estimated to require from 7 to 10 years for construction; an 8-year period is the general official estimate. For this period no allowance is made for interest on the money required for construction. Assuming that the entire amount will be invested only half of the period, or 4 years, and that the interest charge would be at the rate of 4 percent per annum, there would be an additional interest charge on the $543,429,000 amounting to $86,948,640, or an additional charge to the United States of $43,592,480.

There are seven important harbors on the Great Lakes within the United States, namely, Duluth-Superior, Chicago-Milwaukee, Detroit, Toledo, Cleveland, and Buffalo. It has been estimated that there must be expended at least $25,000,000 each on these seven harbors, making an aggregate of $175,000,000 to be expended by the United States.

These estimates of costs do not include annual charges after completion nor do they include the necessity of the construction of docks.

The joint board of engineers report outlines a complete development of the power resources of the river by the construction of additional power works with an inflated capacity of approximately 5,000,000 horsepower, at a total cost of from $620,000,000 to $650,000,000.

The existing water-power and steam plants in the section of the United States which could be economically reached from the St. Lawrence territory by the transmission lines are quite adequate to meet the industrial development for many years to come.

The power production contemplated cannot be counted upon to liquidate the canal outlay. The value of hydroelectric power has in the last 10 years heavily depreciated, owing to the remarkable developments in efficiency of steam-power electric plants. So there is not likely to be a market for power in the large cities which have steam plants located at tidewater. In substance, the Government would be engaging in a most hazardous power speculation when the taxpayers of the Nation are already overburdened as a result of the enormous increase in recent years of Government services and public improvements, Federal, State, and local. As a temporary work-relief measure the St. Lawrence appears in no better light. Nobody knows definitely how much labor would be employed. But it is definitely known that Canadian labor would profit more than American labor.

Only 115 miles of the route, from Prescott to Cornwall, is in international territory. The rest of the route is entirely within the Dominion. Obviously, Canadian labor only would be used for work within the Dominion. American labor, presumably, would have to share opportunities for employment in the international section.

We should oppose the expenditures of public funds for the St. Lawrence project. It is not economically sound. [Applause.]

Mr. PARKER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD].

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD].

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, the statement has been made on the floor that this measure is being rushed through in order to secure support for the treaty in the Senate. Whether or not that statement is correct, it seems to have considerable merit in it.

We ought to keep this treaty issue free from complications. We ought to allow the Senate to act upon the treaty independently. We should not pass this legislation and distort the issue. [Applause.] We should keep the House free to act at a later date when the Senate has reached its determination.

The debate naturally precipitates a discussion of this international question, and we ought to refrain from any such discussion until we know what is really in the treaty. If the treaty is ratified—and I for one do not believe it will be—then the House can intelligently take up this question and dispose of it properly.

I want to appeal to the Members of the House to vote down this legislation until it comes to us in its logical order. Leave the Senate free to act upon the treaty without either suggestion or interference from us. We ought to consider, first of all, the injury which will result from the ratification of a treaty such as the Senate is now considering. We may present our views to the Senate committee and then wait until the treaty is disposed of before passing this resolution. It has been explained that this seaway will injure every seaport on the Atlantic coast from Portland, Maine, to Norfolk, Va. Have we estimated the loss to our railroads, many of which are now on the verge of bankruptcy? Why do we loan the roads large sums of money on the one hand and destroy them with such competition on the other?

Do you realize that the best merchant marine under our flag on the Great Lakes and along the Atlantic coast will be forced to compete with foreign ships to the injury of our vessels, our commerce, and our seamen? Do these injuries outweigh the benefits? We should not consider this bill until an unbiased economic survey of the entire matter is completed and in our possession. This power question will be given consideration at the proper time. The State of New York will also be given proper consideration. We need not fear that either our national administration or the State administration will turn over to the private power interests the great power resources of the St. Lawrence. This question will be taken care of and the power will be given to the Power Authority of the State of New York for the benefit of all the people.

Let me remind you, Mr. Speaker, that Canada placed a preferential tariff of 6 cents a bushel on Canadian wheat going through the Lakes for English markets. This was not only an embargo; it was a boycott against the United States. When we, with our people's money, construct this seaway we aid this boycott. I do not think we should be a party to any effort of this kind, because it is detrimental to our general welfare. Before we spend our taxpayers' money in Canada we ought to see to it that the rivers, harbors, and the lakes of our own land are properly developed and improved. [Applause.]

Before we pass any legislation bearing on the general subject of the St. Lawrence seaway, or before the Senate itself acts upon the treaty, we should have an official unbiased economic survey made of this entire project. This survey should take into consideration the cost of the enterprise, the electrical energy which can be developed, the effect this project will have upon our ships and shipping on the Great Lakes, the losses which may result to our railroads and to our North Atlantic seaports, and such other questions as will necessarily be affected as a result of the ratification of this treaty. Not only is it necessary for the Congress to have the estimated benefits which will result from the opening of this seaway, but we must also be in possession of such injuries as will result in a necessary readjustment of present-day transportation facilities. It must be remembered in any consideration given to this subject that the question is a two-sided one, and unless the benefits outweigh the evils the United States should never be a party to this contract.

I would further suggest that the proposed economic survey consider the following objections advanced in opposition to the ratification of the proposed treaty: First, the St. Lawrence River is 90 percent a Canadian river; second, only 10 percent of the grain that may be exported through this seaway would be American grain; third, less than 5 percent of the ocean-going ships engaged in the transportation of grain would be American owned; fourth, less than 20 percent of the water power capable of development would be on American soil; fifth, two thirds of the new money invested in this enterprise would be American money; sixth, due to weather conditions this seaway is closed as much as 6 months a year; seventh, experts in this type of construction have estimated the cost of the project to be approximately $1,000,000,000; eighth, the treaty internationalizes Lake Michigan, which is an American lake wholly within the United States; ninth, the treaty does not provide sufficient diversion for the Mississippi River channel or the Chicago drainage canal.

How can a saving of from 8 to 10 cents a bushel on grain transported be made when the present rate is less than 5 cents from Duluth to Montreal? What will be the effect resulting from the opening of this seaway to our American seaman? Why was Canada credited with the $128,000,000 spent in constructing the Welland Canal over 15 years ago? What will the total estimated damages to our railroads, our seaports, our canals, and our mills, elevators, terminals, be as a result of the necessary readjustment which will take place if the St. Lawrence canal is opened?

Mr. PARKER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I am an unrepentant, unreconstructed, and unashamed Republican, and I am not given to throwing bouquets at my Democratic colleagues, but I would advise them to follow the intelligent advice of my good friend from New York [Mr. MEAD], who has just spoken and with whom I served in the State legislature some 20 years ago, as well as for many years in this House, and not listen to a lot of people who do not know anything about New York State, who come here and tell you what is for the benefit of the 11,000,000 people of our State.

I also want to congratulate the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTENGILL], who made a highly intelligent speech on this subject. The gentleman is quite correct. If this resolution should come before us after the St. Lawrence Waterway Treaty had been ratified, there would not be a vote or a voice against it, but as it is today it is merely an attempt to coerce the Senate into ratifying the St. Lawrence waterway project.

I may say as a preface to the remarks I am about to make that I believe that every individual Member has a right to his own opinion and his own views, and I question the sincerity of none, but as far as I am concerned I am opposed to the entire St. Lawrence waterway project. I believe it is a political myth, a political football, and a political fraud from beginning to end, and that it will never help any farmer in any State of the Union, that there has never been since I have been in Congress any proposal that has come before the Congress that had so much propaganda back of it, so much subsidy, and so much false information.

Why, I am informed there are some 20 States of the middle West that have been so propagandized that even their State legislatures appropriate or have appropriated money to send lobbyists down here to Washington to tell us that the salvation of the western farmers and the wheatgrowers is the construction of the St. Lawrence canal, yet I am sure that if you study this problem you will find it will not help a single farmer to sell a single bushel of wheat to any foreign country in the world.

What does it do? It diverts the trade from Boston, from Providence, from New York, from Philadelphia, from Baltimore, from Norfolk, and from all the southern ports and sends it to Montreal and out through foreign bottoms to European nations. This is why we in New York, who built the Erie Canal at the expense of our own taxpayers, are naturally opposed to diverting trade from the greatest American port to a foreign port through use of Federal appropriations and the money of American taxpayers.

I am not discussing this bill, I am discussing the ultimate question of whether we will build the St. Lawrence ship canal or not. It is preposterous to call upon the taxpayers of the State of New York, who put up 30 percent of all the taxes for everything that is done by the Federal Government in this country, to now put up 30 percent of the money to build the St. Lawrence ship canal to divert trade from Buffalo, Rochester, Syracuse, Albany, and the city of New York. This is why we who are from New York think this proposition ought to be faced with the facts, that it is against the interest of 30,000,000 consumers in the East and ruinous to American export and import trade.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I cannot yield in 5 minutes.

I hold in my hand a statement issued by a Toronto newspaper, in which it is stated that Canadian labor and Canadian materials will be used, and in which it is also stated that Chicago will be checked and Lake Michigan internationalized, all for the advantage of whom? For the American farmer? No. This is entirely for the benefit of Canada and the Canadians, and I think I know as much about this subject as anyone, because I spend a month or two every year on the St. Lawrence River at Murray Bay. I know it is not feasible or practicable to ship American wheat through Canada in competition with the preferential rates and the preferential treatment agreed upon at the Ottawa Conference.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PARKER of New York. I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I cannot yield in 1 minute.

I know this canal is not feasible. I know that during the summer the river is fog-bound twice a week and I know that during the winter it is ice-bound. I know if it were feasible, and so do you, the shipping interests out of the city of New York would have moved up to Montreal long ago.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I cannot yield, but I will say this. The State represented by the gentleman from Minnesota and his associates has used the St. Lawrence waterway as a political issue for years and years. They have been elected on the proposition that the St. Lawrence ocean-ship canal is the way to save the western farmers. They have gone through political campaign after political campaign, making glowing promises of immediate prosperity and untold wealth. The farmers have been deceived and I say now that if this canal goes through it will not benefit a single American farmer but it will help to destroy the eastern ports of the United States of America and further reduce traffic on American railroads and American ships. How can it benefit the wheat or grain farmers, who originally were propagandized into honestly believing that the St. Lawrence waterway would provide substantially cheaper freight rates to Europe, but whose eyes have been opened in recent years to the fact that it was nothing but a political myth? Its chief advocate, Herbert Hoover, did not carry a single one of these Middle Western States. Why, it is stated that the western farmer will save 10 cents a bushel in freight rates to Europe, when the actual total cost of ocean transportation is 10 cents a bushel. If the Congress favors an ocean-ship canal to the Great Lakes it should be an American canal, built by American money and American labor via the Hudson River to Oswego, on Lake Ontario.

Such a canal would be advantageous to both the western producer of grain and raw material and to the eastern manufacturer and consumer. Ninety percent of the market for western farm products is in the eastern seaboard States, and anything that detracts from their prosperity will lessen their buying power of foodstuffs from the Western States.

Mr. PARKER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DOUGLASS].

Mr. DOUGLASS. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I have no apology to make to the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee for the defense of the interests of the State I have the honor to represent in this House. I should be remiss in my duty if I did not defend the interests of the port of Boston, which I have the honor to represent.

There is no doubt—and the debate here shows it—that the real purpose of this resolution is to make a psychological development in favor of the ratification of the St. Lawrence Waterway Treaty in the Senate.

One of my brother Members accuses me of a selfish, sectional interest. He comes from a western State. I come from an eastern State. But in my opposition to the building of the St. Lawrence canal I believe I am serving the interests of both East and West. When this St. Lawrence waterway question was debated in the last session of Congress the whole argument in its favor was that it would obtain cheaper freight rates across the sea for the products of the farms in the West.

By the ratification of the treaty you will practically destroy the commerce of the whole Atlantic coast. After the United States has spent a half a billion dollars for this new construction, which ought to be done mostly by Canada, remember the St. Lawrence River will still be controlled by Great Britain and not in the interest of the American merchant marine.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGLASS. No; I cannot yield; I have not the time. There is no question but what the port of Boston in recent years has lost much commerce to other ports in America. With that I find no fault, because the business is going to Americans, but when we find that the business of our port is going to go in foreign bottoms, then we earnestly protest.

The State of Massachusetts, in part represented by me in this debate, is fighting and will continue to fight for the best interests of Western States. Gentlemen, you cannot destroy the commerce of the Atlantic coast and have prosperity in the West. We in Massachusetts and New England have been helping enact your farm bill. Now, if we are generous with you in respect to raising the prices of your commodities through inflation, then you ought not to destroy our commerce along the Atlantic coast. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PARKER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAMNECK].

Mr. LAMNECK. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, I come from Columbus, Ohio, an inland city, and I cannot for the life of me see how the St. Lawrence waterway is going to help the Buckeye State.

The reason I am against the bill and against this resolution is because it is mixing up the St. Lawrence deep-waterway issue with another matter in the hope that it will influence the Senate to ratify the treaty with Canada. I am opposed, too, because 90 percent of the improvement is in Canadian territory. I am opposed to it because 90 percent of the grain that will go through the canal will be Canadian grain. As far as I am concerned, I do not want to make any contract with foreign countries which I do not have to.

The cost will be at least $1,000,000,000. The interest on this debt will be a sufficient amount to pay all freight charges on all wheat and cotton shipped to foreign countries in any one year for a generation.

The farmer of the great West has been led to believe that his chances of selling his products in foreign countries will be greatly enhanced by the building of the St. Lawrence waterway. Nothing is further from the truth. The improvement, if made, will create a competition which will make it more difficult to sell.

I have not heard any discussion here of the effect that this legislation is going to have on the railroads. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], chairman of the committee, knows there is a bill before this Congress to cancel a charge against the railroads amounting to about $360,000,000, which was accumulated under the Interstate Commerce Act. Why are we going to do that? To help the railroads. I understand the administration has a bill that is supposed to help the railroads. A dictator is going to be appointed, who will have the power to eliminate all competing lines, who will fire men, reduce salaries, deflate capital in the railroads, and here we are going to the St. Lawrence waterway to spend a billion dollars to build up a competitor. The waterway can only operate 7 months of the year. I suppose the railroads will then be called on to function when business is poor, but in good weather the foreign ships will take the business.

If we are going to help the railroads, do not build up a competitor at the expense of the taxpayers in order to do it. What about the effect on the manufacturers located in the interior? We are going to put foreign commerce right at their door on foreign boats at the expense of the taxpayers of America. You are going to move the main port of America to Montreal. That is what you will do, just as sure as you pass this bill, and those cities located on the Great Lakes that think they are going to be benefited a great deal by this legislation are going to be mistaken. Take, for instance, Lake Michigan. We have to go into an agreement that Lake Michigan from now on is supposed to be an international lake, not an American lake. What effect is it going to have on Chicago, Detroit, Milwaukee, and some other cities? [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, this bill has taken a most peculiar and apparently unselfish turn in some ways. Here are my friends from New York, who have always tried to bring about legislation that would benefit New York, probably to the injury of Boston and Philadelphia and the other Atlantic ports, now vitally interested in protecting the port of Boston, the port of Philadelphia, the port of Baltimore, and all of the others up and down the Atlantic coast. I live 400 miles from navigable water. If I had been voting a selfish vote all the years that I have been in Congress, I would not have voted under the argument made here today to take money away from my people to develop a river and harbor in some other section of the country or even in my own State. I think this about this question, and I try to think it about all others. I have supported every river and harbor measure that has been presented in the 20 years that I have been a Member of Congress, not because the money was going to be spent, any part of it, in the district that I represent, or any of it within 400 miles of where I live. I have supported these river and harbor improvements because I have thought that they would help the whole country at large, and in doing that I would be doing a great thing for the people of the country. If it is a good thing for the country to develop the harbor of Galveston or Houston or Mobile or Philadelphia or Boston, then it should be a good thing for the country to develop this waterway on the St. Lawrence, and some of our friends here who have talked about selfishness say, Why should we do this thing, which has been propagandized by 20 States? Why should not Minnesota, why should not Wisconsin, why should not Illinois and Indiana and Ohio and those States be brought closer to water than they are?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. The gentleman has been very generous in casting his vote for river and harbor improvements and the development of our commerce, and what I want the gentleman to talk about this afternoon is as to why this resolution should be presented to this House before the ratification of the treaty by the Senate of the United States.

Mr. RAYBURN. I stated that awhile ago. I stated that in the report that was made; that this is an agreement which has been brought about, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] says, after 20 years of negotiation, and I think we ought to nail it down now. I think that the rights of the State of New York and the rights of the Government of the United States in this matter should be determined before the treaty is ratified, and not before.

Mr. PARKER of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. PARKER of New York. Simply to remind the gentleman that he is making exactly the argument that I did; that the resolution in question is not under discussion here, but it is the matter of the development of the St. Lawrence waterway.

Mr. RAYBURN. The resolution is the only thing under discussion.

Mr. PARKER of New York. But the gentleman is discussing the waterway.

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes; because I had to say something in reply to these gentlemen who do not talk about the resolution.

Mr. DE PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. DE PRIEST. What effect will this so-called "treaty" have upon the Chicago drainage system and the Mississippi River improvements?

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not know. I am not passing on the terms of the treaty.

Mr. DE PRIEST. Does not the treaty provide that the commission appointed by the United States and Canada shall control the supply of water of Lake Michigan and make it an international lake instead of a private lake? Lake Michigan does not touch one inch of Canadian land.

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not know about that. I do not know anything about the treaty. I have never read the treaty.

Mr. DE PRIEST. It will be detrimental to the Mississippi waterway proposition.

Mr. RAYBURN. I am not arguing the treaty at all. I am arguing this matter, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] says, and nailing down this agreement while we have an opportunity to do it.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield.

Mr. CULKIN. May I say in regard to the query of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DE PRIEST] that this treaty provides that the diversion at Chicago shall be as fixed by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. DE PRIEST. Until when? Nineteen hundred and thirty-eight, is it not?

Mr. CULKIN. Forever; unless the treaty is modified.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] has expired. All time has expired.

CLAIMS OF PAN AMERICAN PETROLEUM CO. AND RICHFIELD OIL CO. OF CALIFORNIA

Mr. O'CONNOR, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged report from that committee (H.Res. 119, Rept. No. 53) on Senate Joint Resolution 13:

House Resolution 119

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution, it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S.J.Res. 13, a resolution "Authorizing the Attorney General, with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Navy, to release claims of the United States upon certain assets of the Pan American Petroleum Co. and the Richfield Oil Co. of California and others in connection with collections upon a certain judgment in favor of the United States against the Pan American Petroleum Co. heretofore duly entered."

After general debate, which shall be confined to the resolution and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Public Lands, the resolution shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the resolution for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the resolution to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the resolution and the amendments thereto to final passage, without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Public Lands may have until midnight to file a report on the resolution, S.J.Res. 13.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS]?

There was no objection.

THE PARCEL POST

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a speech by Hon. HARRY L. HAINES, of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, delivered in Washington a few days ago.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following radio address of Hon. HARRY L. HAINES, of Pennsylvania, member of the House Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, delivered during the National Broadcasting Co. farm-and-home hour, April 13, 1933:

Ladies and gentlemen of the radio audience, permit me to express my appreciation for the courtesy extended to me upon this occasion and the hope that what I may have to say will be helpful to my fellow Americans.

I want to speak to you about the greatest business organization in the Government—an organization that can serve all our people more efficiently if all of us are willing to cooperate. I refer to your great post-office system, the greatest in the entire world. I want to address myself particularly to the service of Parcel Post and what it means to you of the farm-and-home hour.

Organized in 1913 and handling more than 600,000,000 parcels the first year, and which has grown to the enormous amount of more than a billion parcels being handled each year, and its ability to handle another billion without much additional cost to the service; in fact, its growth will mean a reduced cost to the patrons if they will avail themselves of the opportunities that are presented to our people. Parcel post comprises mail exceeding 8 ounces in weight and includes merchandise, farm and factory products, seeds, plants, books, circulars, and printed matter not embraced in other classes of mail. We now have more than 43,000 rural routes through which parcels are delivered, and than the personnel of which there is no finer body of men in our Nation, rendering that service with a smile, penetrating every part of this country, making it possible for our people in the most remote places to deal with their fellow citizens everywhere. I want to pay my tribute to that fine group of postal employees who have so unselfishly made it possible for all our people to enjoy every convenience of this modern day. This same servant who delivers your mail to you will deliver for you, so that this offers opportunities for every citizen to build a business for himself and having a transportation service unequaled in the conduct of your business.

I know there are many of our people who believe that Parcel Post gives a monopoly to our large mail-order houses only, but permit me to say that the same service that is rendered for the large corporation can be rendered for you, no matter how small and insignificant you might consider your business.

There is a thrill in the mailman's whistle, for millions of men and women watch and wait for him every day with hope and longing in their hearts. As a boy I recall the thrill that came to me when the little package was delivered by the postmaster in my home town, even before the days of Parcel Post, and that same thrill is in the heart of the boy of today who may have made his first adventure in the field of commerce.

What does Parcel Post have to offer to those of us who live in rural United States? It gives us an opportunity to reach the markets of the country; in our large cities, in our smaller towns, and even to those of our fellow citizens who live in the smaller communities. The possibilities offered by the Parcel Post System was quickly realized by our merchants and business men in the cities, but we of the rural sections have not been awake to the many advantages and opportunities it offered to us. The farmer who is alive to the present-day situation can build for himself a market even under the present economic depression. There are millions of our people anxious to trade with you, wanting to buy the product of your efforts, willing to pay you that middleman's profit that is now denied to you, happy to have the fresh vegetables and the farm products that are not always to be had in our larger centers of population.

Parcel Post offers an equal advantage to the small-town merchant that is offered to the mail-order house. Thousands of small-town merchants have built up a fine business for themselves by taking advantage of this system of transportation, but business men must be alive today and realize that the business practices and policies of the last decade will not fit into the present scheme of trade. To do a successful parcel-post business the merchant must be prepared to box up the merchandise in a neat package, addressed with a sticker or shipping tag that can also carry his advertisement, and by keeping his name before the public becomes well known. Your customers want to deal with you if you deliver promptly, parcel carefully wrapped up and addressed, all of which means so much in the conduct of any business. If you are careless in addressing your packages and send out an unsightly parcel, you cannot expect to make a favorable impression with your trade. Let me ask you, have you anything to sell? If you have, there is a buyer for your goods somewhere, and the best and cheapest salesman in all the world is the postman. He is trustworthy, he delivers your package on time, in good condition, even collects your money for you in advance of the delivery of the package, for which a small additional charge is made. Mr. Farmer, have you ever given any thought to selling your products direct to the consumer?

You say that you cannot do it—have you tried? You may live near a town of some considerable size. It is not difficult to procure the names of prominent people in any community. Your telephone directory gives you the names of many fine citizens. Have you ever thought of addressing a post card or a letter to a list of prospective customers, listing therein or thereon what you have to offer? It is so simple that it requires no abundance of education to do this. Many of our great merchant princes were men of limited education, but they had an idea—they developed that idea—they had faith in themselves—they were honest in the representation of their merchandise or product—they built a reputation because of the service and quality of their product. You can do this.

You can go to your local printer and he will help you write up your letter or card, and a few dollars invested in the United States mails may mean the beginning of a profitable business; and what might be an unprofitable farm can be developed into a going business.

The next step is to buy attractive containers, so that your parcel will have a nice, clean appearance when it is delivered to your customer. You can send 70 pounds in one parcel. Do you know that there are many homes in our cities that would like to buy their vegetables by parcel post? Some ladies have built a business by the product of their own kitchens. Parcel Post offers unlimited opportunities to develop such a business, for in our larger centers of population people are anxious to buy the farmer's cakes and pies. One man in a large city had a losing delicatessen business. He conceived the idea of wrapping his meats in cellophane and displaying this new idea in his windows. Now he has a business, built in a short period of time, employing four meat cutters, where he formerly had no one but himself cutting meat. The meat was the same, but the manner of presenting it to the trade made it inviting to all who looked into his window. Today he uses parcel post and mails his meat to people who have a delicatessen store right in their own neighborhood. Parcel post has enabled him to build a fine clientele, and what one man can do is possible for the other. I know a cigar dealer in a nearby city that mails cigars from coast to coast—people buying standard brands and having them mailed by parcel post from a distant city when the same cigars could have been purchased just around the corner. Parcel Post has meant much to this merchant, and it can mean as much to any merchant by the practice of honest methods and the solicitation on the part of the man who has something to sell. I have heard it said that the building of so many good roads takes business away from the small merchant because of the automobile and good roads leading into the towns. These roads run in both directions, and the opportunity that is given to the city merchant is also given to the small-town merchant, but he must be awake and do business in the modern way.

Parcel Post offers every advantage to the small merchant, for it enables him to buy goods more frequently; he can buy in smaller quantities and is assured wonderful delivery because of this great system. The Post Office Department is not in competition with any other business in offering this service to our taxpayers, but, on the contrary, is making a great contribution to business in what it has to offer. Without this service our great host of fine people living in the rural sections would not have the privileges they now have, and I want to appeal to our people throughout the Nation to patronize this service, and in recommending the service I feel that I am not injuring any other business, for there is no competition in the parcel-post business. There are thousands of inland communities which cannot be reached by our railroads or other transportation facilities. The Parcel Post Service is daily—every day; it is dependable and it is indispensable in our modern method of trading. It is the creator of markets. It makes a market for every product—for every man, woman, or business enterprise that wants to develop. Without a doubt the system has helped our great mail-order houses, but that is no reason for you to feel that it cannot help you, for if it made potential business for these larger concerns, it can help you in an humble way to start and build for yourself. I have one ambition in this talk to you, my unseen audience, and that is to inspire my farmer friends to give much thought to the great service Parcel Post can be to them. I know our farmers are greatly disturbed these days because of the economic ills that now so completely beset them on every side, and yet I know farmers who are making money, are happy, know nothing about the ills that others say they are experiencing. An investigation will reveal the cause, and that is these men have applied themselves to the modern method of business. They are not living as they did 50 years ago, neither are they attempting to do business as they did 50 years ago. These are days when the very souls of men are being tried, and yet these are days when these very souls can emerge triumphant by the application of modern methods of marketing their products.

Talk this matter over with your nearest postmaster. He can give you full information and will be glad to help you. If you want additional information, write to the Post Office Department, Director of Parcel Post, Washington, D.C.

The next time you receive that package delivered to you by the mailman, please consider how easy it would be for you to sell your product the same way. If millions of pairs of stockings are mailed in parcel post, millions of fresh eggs from the farm to the consumer in the metropolis can likewise be mailed.

The modern way practiced by the farmer will result in emancipating him from dependency to the thrill that comes in the accomplishment of that which was not thought possible.

It has been a pleasure for me to give you this message, and I trust that you will remember that parcel post is your own business, for you are a part of this great Government, so that any success in this service is a benefit to all our people.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GOSS. Under the agreement on the bill with reference to the St. Lawrence Treaty reached this afternoon, would it be in order for any Member so desiring to make a motion to recommit tomorrow morning before a vote is taken?

The SPEAKER. A motion to recommit will be in order after a third reading of the bill. If it reaches that stage today, it will be in order at that time.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee, for 4 days, on account of important business.

To Mr. KLEBERG, for 1 day, on account of important business.

To Mr. Sisson, for today, on account of official business.

To Mr. BROOKS, for 3 days, on account of illness.

To Mr. WILLFORD, for 3 days, on account of important business.

To Mr. FIESINGER, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. RUDD, for the remainder of the week, on account of death in family.

GREAT LAKES-ST. LAWRENCE DEEP WATERWAY TREATY

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the resolution.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. PARKER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I have a motion to recommit the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the resolution?

Mr. PARKER of New York. I am, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER].

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. PARKER of New York moves to recommit the resolution to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce with instructions to that committee to report the same back to the House forthwith with the following amendment:

"At the end of the resolution insert 'Provided, That the passage of this resolution shall be in no way construed as an expression of the attitude of the House as to the merits of the proposed treaty between the United States and Canada.'"

Mr. SNELL. I understand that is just offered for the information of the House and it will go over until tomorrow.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly the House (at 4 o'clock and 12 minutes p.m.) adjourned until tomorrow, April 26, 1933, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

703. By Mr. BEITER: Petition of Erie County Committee, American Legion Auxiliary, at Buffalo, N.Y., protesting movement to further limit national defense on the ground of economy, and urging that the appropriation for attendance of the National Guard in summer and armory drills be retained; to the Committee on Appropriations.

704. By Mr. CULLEN: Petition of Forest City Branch, No. 40, National Association of Letter Carriers, Cleveland, Ohio, protesting against ruling of W. E. Buffington, Comptroller, which they assert is a discrimination created through the application of the furlough plan during the present fiscal year and particularly injurious to the letter carriers; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

705. By Mr. HOWARD: Resolution adopted by the Nebraska State Legislature, petitioning the Congress of the United States to promote, initiate, and support any legislation for the purpose of requiring all motor-vehicle fuels to contain ethyl alcohol in a volume of not less than 10 percent of the mixture; to the Committee on Agriculture.

706. Also, resolution submitted by the House of Representatives of the Nebraska State Legislature, petitioning and memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact uniform Federal corporation laws; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

707. By Mr. JOHNSON of Texas: Petition of A. J. Patton, of Corsicana, Tex., opposing House bill 3769; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

708. By Mr. HOWARD: Resolution adopted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Nebraska State Legislature, memorializing the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States to take steps to reduce rates and fees charged for services rendered shippers and patrons of the Union Stock Yards Co., Omaha, Nebr.; to the Committee on Agriculture.

709. By Mr. LINDSAY: Petition of Actors Equity Association, New York City, urging support of House Resolution 95; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

710. Also, petition of National Cooperative Council, Washington, D.C., favoring rise in commodity prices by means of change in the monetary system; to the Committee on Agriculture.

711. Also, petition of Brooklyn Eastern District Terminal, New York, urging defeat of the Crosser bill, H.R. 4876; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

712. Also, petition of Greater New York Savings Bank, William Obermeyer, president, Brooklyn, N.Y., opposing publicity of loans made by Reconstruction Finance Corporation; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

713. By Mr. LUNDEEN: Petition of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, resolving that the rates of interest as provided for in the bill, H.R. 4795, are too high to be of sufficient value to the farmers of Minnesota at this time, and urging the Congress of the United States to lower the interest rate provided for in this bill to 3 percent per annum; to the Committee on Agriculture.

714. Also, petition of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, requesting that the United States Department of Agriculture cause a reduction in the yardage fees and feed charges of at least 30 percent of the present prices, and that the commission fees of commission firms operating in the terminal markets of the State of Minnesota be likewise reduced at least 15 percent of the present charges; to the Committee on Agriculture.

715. By Mr. MEAD: Petition of Niagara County (N.Y.) American Legion, opposing Soviet recognition by the United States, Army cuts, and proposed discontinuance of the Veterans' Administrative office at Buffalo, N.Y.; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

716. By Mr. RUDD: Petition of Actors Equity Association, New York City, favoring the passage of the Sirovich House Resolution 95, to create a committee to investigate motion-picture industry; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

717. Also, petition of William Obermeyer, president Greater New York Savings Bank, favoring legislation to eliminate publicity of loans made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

718. Also, petition of Custom House Employees' Association, opposing the compulsory retirement; to the Committee on Appropriations.

719. Also, petition of Brooklyn Eastern District Terminal, Brooklyn, N.Y., opposing the passage of the Crosser bill, H.R. 4876; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

720. By Mr. SWICK: Petition of National Tube Co., of Ellwood City, Lawrence County, Pa., and 12 employees thereof, including George W. Wilson, secretary of the Foreman's Club, urging defeat or liberal modification of the Black 30-hour bill; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

721. Also, petition of L. D. Reilly, J. D. Walker, P. G. Carr, and Alex W. Johns, all of Ambridge, Beaver County, Pa., urging the defeat of the Black 30-hour bill; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

722. Also, petition of D. S. Pyle, manager; H. R. Grovenster, master mechanic; Charles Watkins, roller; and Ralph Donaldson, of the Shenango Works, American Sheet & Tin Plate Co., New Castle, Pa., urging the defeat of the Black 30-hour bill; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

723. Also, petition of Beaver Falls Chamber of Commerce, Beaver Falls, Beaver County, Pa., urging the defeat of the Black 30-hour bill; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

724. By Mr. TRAEGER: Petition of the Council of the City of San Jose, Calif., dated April 10, 1933, requesting that the U.S. frigate Constitution remain at the port of San Francisco for a period of not less than 1 year; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

725. By Mr. WEIDEMAN: Memorial of State of Michigan, Fifty-seventh Legislature, regular session of 1933, urging the United States Congress to reflate the dollar, and that the Congress of the United States reclaim its function under the Constitution, namely, to coin money and regulate the value thereof; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

726. By Mr. WHITE: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Idaho, memorializing Congress to enact into law Senate bill 1043, to confer upon the States of Montana, Wyoming, and Idaho the right to tax, for State and county purposes, persons, copartnerships, and corporations and their property within that portion of the Yellowstone National Park which lies within the boundary lines of said States; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

727. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the city of El Segundo, Calif., relative to the recognition of municipal bonds of such standard to be eligible to permit the Government to issue currency on the same; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

728. Also, petition of Quincy, Mass., endorsing April 30, 1933, as President's Day; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 26, 1933

(Legislative day of Monday, Apr. 17, 1933)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a.m., on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Copeland	Kean	Reed
Ashurst	Costigan	Kendrick	Reynolds
Austin	Couzens	Keyes	Robinson, Ark.
Bachman	Cutting	King	Robinson, Ind.
Bailey	Dickinson	La Follette	Russell
Bankhead	Dieterich	Lewis	Sheppard
Barbour	Dill	Logan	Shipstead
Barkley	Duffy	Loneragan	Smith
Black	Erickson	Long	Stelwer
Bone	Fess	McAdoo	Stephens
Borah	Fletcher	McCarran	Thomas, Okla.
Bratton	Frazier	McGill	Thomas, Utah
Brown	George	McNary	Townsend
Bulkley	Glass	Metcalf	Trammell
Bulow	Goldsborough	Murphy	Tydings
Byrd	Gore	Neely	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Hale	Norbeck	Van Nuys
Capper	Harrison	Norris	Wagner
Caraway	Hastings	Nye	Walcott
Carey	Hatfield	Overton	Walsh
Clark	Hayden	Patterson	Wheeler
Connally	Hebert	Pittman	White
Coolidge	Johnson	Pope

Mr. BACHMAN. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. McKellar] by reason of the death of his brother, Mr. R. L. McKellar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

FUNCTIONS OF THE WAR DEPARTMENT (S.DOC. NO. 44)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, submitting, pursuant to Senate Resolution 351, Seventy-second Congress, a report showing the functions and activities conducted under the jurisdiction of the War Department, the statutory authority therefor, and the total expenditures thereon, and also a list of employees receiving compensation of $5,000 or more per annum (omitting military personnel), which, with the accompanying statements, was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

FUNCTIONS OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION (S.DOC. NO. 45)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, submitting, pursuant to Senate Resolution 351, Seventy-second Congress, a report showing the functions and activities conducted under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the statutory authority therefor, and the total annual expenditures of the Commission for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1932, and also a list of employees receiving compensation at the rate of $5,000 or more per annum, which, with the accompanying statements, was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

STATE OF WISCONSIN.

Joint resolution relating to a reduction in the expenditures for prohibition enforcement

Whereas the people of the United States in the last general election registered their dissatisfaction with the policy of prohibition in a most emphatic manner and left no doubt of their wish for the repeal of prohibition; and

Whereas there is every reason to believe that the Seventy-third Congress will submit to the several States an amendment to the Constitution of the United States which will repeal the eighteenth amendment; and

Whereas $8,000,000 per year are now expended on the enforcement of prohibition, which represents a waste of public funds, particularly in view of the fact that the policy of prohibition will, in all probability, be completely abandoned in the near future: Therefore be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Legislature of Wisconsin hereby respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to reduce immediately the appropriations for the enforcement of the prohibition law by at least one half and to similarly reduce the number of prohibition agents and other Federal employees engaged in the futile attempt to enforce the prohibition law; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be transmitted to both Houses of the Congress of the United States and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

THOMAS J. O'MALLEY,
President of the Senate.
R. A. COBBAN,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.
C. T. YOUNG,
Speaker of the Assembly.
JOHN J. SLOCUM,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was ordered to lie on the table:

STATE OF WISCONSIN.

Joint resolution relating to the ratification of the treaty between the United States and Canada for the construction of the St. Lawrence waterway and appropriation of money by Congress for the completion of said project

Whereas President Roosevelt has outlined and recommended to Congress a comprehensive plan for national legislation to provide a work program of construction projects of large proportions for the employment of labor and consumption of materials and thus substantially assist in the recovery from the existing economic conditions; and

Whereas there exists an executed treaty between the United States and Canada, subject to the ratification by the United States Senate, for the construction of locks and the deepening and improvement of the St. Lawrence River to provide deep-water navigation between the Great Lakes and the Atlantic Ocean, which project during construction will employ a vast amount of labor and materials; and

Whereas the opening of the St. Lawrence River to deep-water navigation and world trade will in a large measure restore and maintain the prosperity and growth of many States of the Union which were placed at a trade, transportation, and economic disadvantage by the opening of the Panama Canal, and will affect to their advancement and rehabilitation more than 40,000,000 of people of this Republic; and

Whereas such an emergency and economic crisis exists that immediate ratification of said treaty should be brought about and work upon said project be commenced:

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States, be, and he is hereby, respectfully requested to immediately urge upon the United States Senate the early ratification of the treaty between the United States and Canada for the construction of the St. Lawrence waterway, and that the President present to Congress his recommendation for an immediate appropriation of money sufficient to complete said project; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this joint resolution be forwarded to Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States, Hon. KEY PITTMAN, Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate, and to the United States Senators and Representatives of this State.

THOMAS J. O'MALLEY,
President of the Senate.
R. A. COBBAN,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.
C. T. YOUNG,
Speaker of the Assembly.
JOHN J. SLOCUM,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate five petitions and a letter in the nature of a petition from sundry citizens in the State of Louisiana, also a letter in the nature of a petition from a citizen of the State of Texas, praying for a senatorial investigation of alleged acts and conduct of Hon. HUEY P. LONG, a Senator from the State of Louisiana, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a memorial numerously signed, and four letters in the nature of memorials from sundry citizens, all in the State of Louisiana, endorsing Hon. HUEY P. LONG, a Senator from the State of Louisiana, condemning attacks made upon him, and remonstrating against a senatorial investigation of his alleged acts and conduct, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. TYDINGS presented a resolution adopted by Dorchester Post, No. 91, the American Legion, Dorchester County, Md., favoring the construction of a sea-level canal to connect the Great Choptank River and Little Choptank River at or near Lloyds, in the Neck District of Dorchester County, Md., which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Western Maryland National Farm Loan Association, Rockville, Md., favoring reduction in interest rates on farm mortgages, and also tax reduction, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted at a meeting held under the auspices of the Pampanga Civic Union, San Fernando, Pampanga, P.I., favoring the granting of immediate independence to the Philippine Islands, which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORT OF THE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE

Mr. LONG, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 687) providing for the establishment of a term of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of Florida at Orlando, Fla., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 45) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 1536) giving credit for water charges paid on damaged land; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

By Mr. WALCOTT:

A bill (S. 1537) for the relief of the Phoenix State Bank & Trust Co., successors to State Bank & Trust Co., formerly State Bank of Hartford, Conn.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HEBERT:

A bill (S. 1538) authorizing persons, firms, corporations, associations, or societies to file bills of interpleader, or bills in the nature of interpleader; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WAGNER:

A bill (S. 1539) to amend section 13 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, with respect to rediscount powers of Federal Reserve banks; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

SUPERVISION OF FOREIGN SECURITIES—AMENDMENT

Mr. JOHNSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 882) to provide for the more effective supervision of foreign commercial transactions, and for other purposes, and to any other bill providing for the supervision of foreign securities, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

RELIEF OF AGRICULTURE—AMENDMENTS

Mr. NORBECK and Mr. TYDINGS each submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to House bill 3835, the farm relief bill, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

PAYMENT OF WORLD WAR ADJUSTED-COMPENSATION CERTIFICATES

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the so-called "Thomas amendment" to House bill 3835, the agricultural relief bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

LAND-BANK LOANS—STATEMENT BY W. B. DOAK

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a statement by a Virginia farmer, W. B. Doak, of Clifton Station, Va., who is a member of a land-bank loan association, setting forth his ideas on land-bank loans.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LET COOPERATION UNTANGLE OUR "TANGLED WEB OF FARM FINANCE"

Assuming a false premise, we invariably arrive at wrong conclusions. Practically all dissertations on rural credits by business men, bankers, and even some who consider themselves agriculturists set a kodak too close to get the whole picture. One end or side of an animal is distorted or enlarged out of proportion because the photographer failed to get far enough back to gain the proper perspective. In other words, they begin with the state of mind and affairs at the time of the Federal Farm Loan Act (1916) while money lending had been encouraged and enabled by many pieces of State and Federal legislation to impose on farming for a century, and the National Bank Act of 1863 completely disqualified the farmers' best security—land—in obtaining loans. Meanwhile, all the land produced went at world-wide prices while city products were boosted by trusts and protected by tariffs.

The difference between these two ways of establishing values constitutes the wealth that built and fed our cities. Having thrown into these rapidly growing centers the labor of himself, his wife, and children, and the virgin forests and fertility of a continent, the farmer found himself in 1912 paying  $8\frac{1}{2}$  percent on a \$6,000,000,000 mortgage on his land. This makes no allowance either for his or the tenant's loans, credit, or chattel mortgage. (See report from President Taft's Commission. Further and still stronger was the report of President Roosevelt's Country Life Commission.)

Some now say, with the Federal Farm Board and its Cooperative Marketing Act or other measures to help the farmer in mind, that nothing has been or can be done either for or against him. Only natural laws, supply and demand, govern. On the contrary, we find that even in legislation like the Federal Farm Loan Act, nominally for the farmers' welfare, vested and antagonistic interests have not only been introduced but given special privileges—witness the joint-stock land banks.

Let us approach this agrarian crisis and the bicentennial as George Washington would. Our industry, based upon land and its products, gave birth to the Nation, nurtured it in childhood, furnished the bulk of its exports—wheat, meat, cotton, timber, and tobacco—up to the Civil War, and still supplies (in proportion to men employed) more products to turn the balance of trade in our favor than any other. The "Father of his Country" was right when he wrote, "It will not be doubted that with reference either to individual or national welfare, agriculture is of primary importance." Let us beg of you to give serious and sincere consideration to the rest of his wise and patriotic injunction. "As nations increase in population and other circumstances of maturity, this truth becomes more apparent and renders the cultivation of the soil more and more an object of public interest." The trend in all times and peoples has been for cities to belittle, ignore, and override the country. Our Nation, as he foresaw, will prove no exception to the rule. Both sacred and profane history established beyond question the truth in his injunction.

Again he says, "I will spare no reasonable expense that will contribute to the improvement of my farms, for nothing pleases me better."

Lincoln declared, "If there be conflict between agriculture and other interests these other interests must yield because agriculture is of greater importance."

When great cities had come to be, as they thought, in their most independent position and best able to domineer over the land, its inhabitants, and products, such places were right then near their downfall. "When ye are gathered together in your cities, I will send the conqueror, I will send the pestilence, but I will remember the land." (Leviticus, ch. xxvi.) Let all who question this consider Tokio and Yokohama.

I could quote many more eminent philosophers, historians, and political economists, but we rest our case on George Washington, A. Lincoln, Lord Bacon, and Moses.

(Refer to series in Nation's Business, by Editor Thorpe, on "Our Tangled Web of Farm Finance.")

Having taken you back almost to Genesis, we will move our camera up to the point where national banks were created by ipse dixit of the Federal Government, giving private citizens a whole bunch of special privileges. First and worst, it bestowed on them a Government function, that of issuing money. Second, by allowing them to take money on deposit, the Government permitted them to charge borrowers 6 percent for what the bank paid Tom, Dick, and Harry nothing. Kept within bounds, this method of money lending is a measurably safe and very profitable business, but whoever knew Shylocks to keep within bounds? Where, when were lenders ever satisfied?

An English philosopher, Lord Bacon, declared that only "fertile fields, busy workshops, and easy communication" were essential to prosperity in state and nation. Athwart these currents of trade lies a sinister shadow, that of the professional banker manipulating price trends and markets by means of an asset currency, bank credits and exchange. "All that tread the globe are but a handful to the tribes that slumber in its bosom"—who farmed, wrought in metals and textiles—"went down to the sea in ships" to exchange products with other lands centuries before banks were organized or paper money thought of. We could still swap wheat and corn, cattle and hogs, wool and cotton for shirts and shoes, wire and wagons, any goods we need for our comfort or necessity without any circulation medium, be it gold, silver, or paper money. Federal Farm Board does exchange wheat for coffee. Yet we hear the banks have to carry the farmer! Bah! When this diagnosis is correct, we will find it necessary to cut out a cancer. No fair-minded person can follow for 25 years investigations ordered by Congress through both of its Banking and Currency Committees and lectures read them by Comptrollers of the Currency without being driven to the conclusion that professional banking is an outlaw. From the Pujo Commission (when cross-questioning brought an admission from a prominent banker "there is no law we cannot overreach or outwit") down to this winter's overhauling by Senator GLASS' subcommittee, there has been constant and willful violation of laws enacted to protect investors and depositors. Although the Federal Reserve Act specifically forbade such use of reserve money, it developed that one member bank in New York had been allowed to use more Federal Reserve funds for gambling in stocks than all the banks west of the Mississippi River could get for legitimate purposes. The Bank of the United States flaunted in gold letters "Member of the Federal Reserve System" for 2 years after it was known to be both crooked and insolvent. Huge aggregations of the people's money, swelling the coffers of member banks in New York were used to speculate in foreign bonds and junior mortgages on domestic real estate until so inflated these were practically worthless. Then they were unloaded on little-town banks, through affiliates tempted by old 10 percent and inveigled into shady investments by pride and greed for big salaries. Meanwhile a million farms and farmers have been sacrificed on this altar of Mammon. Their little loans called, driving land, livestock and crop values nearly to the vanishing point.

In stating "bonds of Federal land banks and debentures of Federal intermediate credit banks are in good shape. But the obligations of many joint-stock banks are a reproach to the Government under whose iron-clad assurance they were first marketed", you make a fair comparison and pay cooperation and our national farm-loan associations a well-merited tribute. For both the farmer are cooperative while the joints are private, profit-seeking, stock-control banks and have been subject (as I predicted when thrust into our rural credit system they would be) to the customary manipulation and exploitation incident to the inherent temptations and vices with which high finance carries on the stock-control project.

In other respects your correspondent falls far short of painting a complete picture of this land-bank situation. You draw the inference that Government initiative and bureaucratic control are to blame for the joint-stocks having made such a bad record.

The investing public owes cooperation and our national farm loan association a vote of thanks and a square deal for having provided an investment both more stable and more profitable than that of even Government paper. No bondholder has ever had to wait on his Federal interest any longer than necessary to clip the coupon. Congress made each land bank responsible for all losses by the others. We farmers have in this way shouldered a burden equivalent to a Nation-wide guaranty of bank deposits. In other words, before the investor loses anything each farmer-member in the United States loses everything. We do not complain of this because this was in the law. We do object, however, to having losses to pay through our land bank of Baltimore taking in the foreign territory of Puerto Rico later without our knowledge and consent.

We, the National Farm Loan Association members, owners of the whole land-bank system, also insist on a reckoning for several million dollars of our farmers' money—not Government money—spent by men and in cities which never took a single share of stock in them. The Federal Land Bank of New Orleans could not do a thing for its farmers, drowned by the flood, but it misused nearly one half million dollars ($464,000) or more of farmers' money on a building in that city.

We call your attention to the United States Senate bill (S. 5542) introduced by Senator Hollis on May 12, 1914. The caption states that one of its objects is "to provide a method for applying Postal Savings deposits to the public welfare." There is no mention whatever made of joint-stock banks in this bill. By reading it you will be convinced that the joint subcommittee of Congress had reported out favorably a rural credit system entirely and purely cooperative. You are in error in having so influential an organ for publicity as the Nation's Business create an impression that private banking was first proposed by this committee of the Senate and House. There was not a baker's dozen in either House but were convinced by this time of the grave necessity for land-bank legislation. Many also felt the need of a national personal credits act. This bill would have passed that session of the Congress but for the lobbying and bitter opposition from money lenders. If it had got under way before the war, a still brighter chapter would have been written.

On January 5, 1916, Mr. Hollis introduced the bill S. 2986 with amendments. The "Postal Savings clause" had been stricken out and the joint-stock land banks introduced. This bill, as did the one of 1914, S. 5542, almost began with the National Farm Loan Associations. The very same heading was carried all the way through these years of controversy and agitation. Hence the common contention that we, the cooperators or farmers, butted into a previous organization in order to set up our National Federal loan associations and Federal land banks along with theirs is not in keeping with the facts. The advantages and the need of a Nation-wide, long-time, amortized farm-loan plan had been urged upon every known financial institution for at least 15 years. Farmers everywhere were plagued by forfeitures, renewals, exorbitant bonuses and fees, and double taxation with no real chance to pay out as we have under the amortization plan.

It is significant that the joint committee of Congress was unanimous in making its rural credits bill purely cooperative and that it continued to put cooperation first in the face of bitter, able, and determined opposition. Furthermore, this committee provided for a constant and dependable flow of cash into the system from the Nation's long-time investment funds of the people and a share in Postal Savings. Strong and general sentiment developed in favor of going much further; that is, the Federal Government should make 3-percent loans direct to the farmer. With call money now at 2 percent and commodities securing advances at 3 and 4 percent, for farmers to pay 5 and 6 percent on superior collateral is 40 or 50 percent more than capital is worth. To be called on to pay half as much again as anything is worth—particularly where that charge goes on day and night like this interest, for 40 years—exceeds the bounds of reason.

Will two wrongs now make it right? In other words, the joint stocks having come into our midst by the cow-bird detour, does the Nation's Business think they should be granted another batch of special favors? For remember, no trust can prosper without advantages in which the rest do not share. The Federal Farm Loan Act placed no restrictions whatever on the amount, place, or purpose of the loans by joint stocks, whereas very positive limits were placed on national farm-loan associations in all three ways. Purposes "(a), (b), (c), (d), and for no other" were plainly specified, and very properly so, for authorities on this old and generally successful set of banks call such the cornerstones of the structure.

National farm-loan associations tend naturally to segregate and emphasize private property in home development and ownership into family size farms which is typically American, democratic, and helpful. These associations will in my judgment, furthermore, assert themselves in permanent tenure of land and constitute our most efficient weapon against the grave and growing menace of rural tenantry.

The Federal Farm Loan Board, in charging off thousands of farms against National Farm Loan Association funds in the hands of Federal land banks acted much more harshly with us than with the joint stocks. Farmers belonging to the cooperative or Federal land-bank division report rougher treatment than farmers in the joint stock with regard to foreclosure. The reason is that directors in the Federals own no stock and so can lose nothing. On the other hand, directors in the joints stand a good chance to lose some of their own money by forced sales.

But we are loth to admit that the American people do not still believe in fair play. There has been plenty of the opposite "foul play" in land-bank manipulation and management. January 1918 Liberty loans were 97 and going lower; Federal land-bank bonds were 106 and going higher. Secretary of the Treasury ordered our bonds off the market. The Federal Farm Loan Board agreed, provided the Treasury would subscribe $183,000,000—its loan—commitments and amend the law in order to allow them to retain control of the system.

The Federal Farm Loan Board was given temporary control by the Federal Farm Loan Act which required them to call an election when $100,000 of Government money had been retired by subscriptions in stock from national farm-loan associations. Then "six were to be elected by and be representative of national farm-loan associations; the other three to be appointed by Federal Farm Loan Board to represent the public interest." The second section of this "blankety blank" farce (hereinbefore so-called by our friend the Senator from South Dakota) was sent down the line Sunday, March 4, 1923, when title 3 was slipped in and "sneaked through" the United States Senate as an amendment to an amendment of the Federal Farm Loan Act, depriving farmers of their property rights to the Federal land banks under the Constitution. A mugwump make-up was substituted whereunder the Board appoints 3, the associations elect 3, the Board chooses another out of 3 we name. This has resulted the way the Federal Farm Loan Board planned and predicted, or, as you say, "the Federal land banks are run from Washington."

The Federal Farm Loan Board claims credit for the success of the system attributable to its supervision. Why then the failure among joint stocks? They are also blessed by Federal Farm Loan Board supervision. The reasons why our cooperative banks and loan associations have made a so much better record are many and inherent. This superiority the American Rural Credits Committee to Europe in 1913 found universal. The joint subcommittee of the House and Senate, following such information and advice, necessarily reported out a cooperative system. But for the prejudiced, ex parte, and unpatriotic influence of the professional money lender of cooperative land banks in the United States would have got under way long before the war, and a very different and still better chapter would have been written.

Considering that we got off to a slow start, were handicapped by "politics, bureaucracy, and red tape", will you not concede the farmers' cooperative has made a wonderfully successful record? In fact, you do admit our success. Your criticism which hurts us most is that practically all our loans have gone to established farmers. We have been of little help to tenants and young men in acquiring farms and buildings for new homes. This letter will be worth its space if nothing more is accomplished than to liberalize our loan limits. We find no precedent in the rural-credit system in any other country of the world for the Federal Farm Loan Act requirement that no loan shall exceed "20 percent of the permanent insured improvements and 50 percent on the land." Where men have hired out or rented land and saved money to buy a farm, they should be allowed to start with less than 80 percent on the buildings and 50 percent on land.

It is not that farmers are more honest or better workers than bankers. The difference is due to the cooperative system in which it is almost impossible for any stockholder or director to manipulate either stock or bonds to his own profit or advantage. What little stock each farmer owns in his loan association can neither be hypothecated nor transferred. When the Federal Farm Loan

Act is followed, there will be no undivided surplus and profits or other big accumulations of money. Only the legal reserve will be maintained. That spokesman for the Nation's Business calls the manipulation of stocks and bonds in the "joints" a disgrace (even after allowing both for the depression and drought) is evidence of the folly of ever including them in the farm-loan system.

As I predicted promoters of the joint stocks would not be able to resist the temptation to exploit this new banking corporation, congressional inquiry reveals the usual deceit and fraud. Our cooperative permits no stock control; neither can our stock be either hypothecated or transferred. We can gain nothing by its manipulation, so why manipulate? But we have lost much in prestige and actual selling value in our bonds by being thrown with such intimate contact into the same system with these "joints." The public often fails to think and discriminate concerning reports that a land bank that fails to meet payments is thrown into receivership.

It will contribute greatly to our peace of mind, also to national existence and security should the Nation's Business succeed in setting this rightful position of ours forth so clearly that there will be no future doubt or question as to whom these 4,700 national farm loan associations (with their clearing houses, the 12 Federal land banks) belong to; furthermore, that we the farmer shareholding owners propose to run 'em and run 'em right—in that "fear of the Lord which is the beginning of wisdom."

All the power and prestige in our Federal Department of Agriculture could not start a local credit union in Indiana, with the aid of the worst drought and bank collapse in history. Why? One reason at least is that money lenders were making loans at 3½ percent per month—just 42 percent interest a year. A Comptroller of the Currency furnished proof that hundreds of national banks were charging usury. Senators stated during an investigation that banks managed to prevent local business men and farmers from securing capital when rediscounts were low enough to interfere with their notion of money values.

Then farm-loan associations have gone into every county in the United States, bringing relief from impossible burdens in the past and present and hope for the future. They took capital into back country, poor country, dry country, at low and uniform rates of interest. Heretofore money-lending agencies would pick and choose (and joints do yet) for rich soil in the best farming sections—for instance, if lending all beyond the 100th meridian, high and impossible charges were made.

We fought this 16-year struggle for our very existence, under constant attack by forces without and traitors within the system—other banks have profited by the use of $20,000,000,000 of farm-money deposits. Nevertheless these State and National bank failures have reached 30 times the number in proportion and much more in amount than our Federal farm-loan associations have. Furthermore, in our case—from the standpoint of the public—none. Because our Federal land banks advanced the money to cover anticipated defaults. No investors ever waited a day for a single dollar due him. Hence we defy any fair-minded person to investigate our cooperative method for carrying on rural credits with his or her conclusion that it has brought help and courage to farmers everywhere, safety to investors, and credit to the Nation.

Agriculture is entitled to divorce and alimony from banking.

CLIFTON STATION, VA., April 14, 1933.

This is our answer to claim of joint-stock land banks for $100,000,000 direct Federal subsidy. Their contention that the cooperatives, or national farm loan associations, got $125,000,000 from last Congress in like manner is absolutely false. The truth is, while we did get something the amount which can be charged to cooperating farmers from this fund is practically less than one half of $125,000,000, and does not equal our claim for cash advances and damage by illegal uses of our system. By some of which the joint stocks themselves have benefited to the extent of many millions of dollars.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Hattigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed a bill (H.R. 5012) to amend existing law in order to obviate the payment of 1 year's sea pay to surplus graduates of the Naval Academy, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled joint resolution (H.J.Res. 135) to amend section 2 of the act approved February 4, 1933, to provide for loans to farmers for crop production and harvesting during the year 1933, and for other purposes, and it was signed by the Vice President.

RELIEF OF AGRICULTURE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 3835) to relieve the existing national economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the debate on the so-called "Thomas amendment" has progressed to a point where I assume most Senators have already arrived at a conclusion in their own minds as to what their course shall be. I have no disposition to unduly consume the time of the Senate; but, in view of the vigorous assaults made by a number of Senators on the provision of the amendment which permits a reduction in the gold content of the dollar, and for the reason that I have on one or two previous occasions suggested the advisability of reducing the gold content of the dollar, I shall take the liberty this morning to submit some remarks to the Senate on some of the questions involved in the bill.

Mr. President, I do not apprehend from the passage of this measure all the benefits which those who are most vigorous in its support hopefully anticipate; neither do I share the fears of the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] and other Senators who view with alarm and point out with a vivid imagination untold perils which they fancy will be visited upon the country and upon the world by the passage of the proposed legislation.

The Senator from Pennsylvania in predicting the evils and perils that, according to his fears, will flow from this measure and action thereunder, exhibits an imagination as vivid as lightning. Aggressive and adroit in attack as he is resourceful in his imagination, he proceeds to analyze and destroy the imaginary evils and perils, which never in fact existed.

Mr. President, for 3½ years the United States has been in the grip of a panic the like of which has not been known in modern times. I shall not weary the Senate in detailing the conditions that have been forced upon the United States by the processes of economic forces, some of them world-wide, because the debate has already disclosed them. But I desire to suggest to Senators that during the past 3½ years we have tried, under the leadership of the past administration and now under the leadership of the present administration, a number of governmental remedies for the depression and for the panic under which our people are suffering.

First we tried the Farm Board put forward by Mr. Hoover. When I speak of Mr. Hoover I speak without rancor and without bitterness. We tried the Farm Board. What was its purpose? The purpose of the Farm Board was to raise the value of the agricultural dollar, to decrease the dollar of every man who buys agricultural products, to decrease the gold content, if you please, of the dollar of the man who would buy or consume agricultural commodities. That remedy failed.

Then we were told by the last administration, led in large measure by the Senator from Pennsylvania himself, that the remedy for America's depression lay in lifting the tariff barriers a little higher and yet higher; so the Senate and the Congress passed the tariff bill, and after the enactment of that measure we saw the forces of depression and panic climb over the tariff wall. We saw the tide of disaster sweep over the dikes which they said they had erected, and submerge the commerce and business and industry of America and drive them to depths more tragic and more distressing than ever before. We all remember that on the floor of the Senate the then Republican leader, Mr. Watson, former senior Senator from Indiana, predicted that within 30 days after the enactment of the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill prosperity would return, smoke would again issue from the chimneys of factories, and business would revive.

That prophecy, of course, was not only unfulfilled, but the decline continued to still lower levels.

Then we were told as another remedy that the Hoover moratorium on European debts would have a tremendous effect in the revival of business. We tried that, and the forces of depression, the forces of despair, the army of lowered prices went marching on and on and on, and no relief came.

Then we were told, under the leadership again of the Senator from Pennsylvania, that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation would solve the problem. What was its purpose? Its purpose was inflation, inflation of credit, pumping more money into the industries and into the banks and into the business of the United States. We now know what a melancholy plan of relief that has proved to be.

Mr. President, every major remedy offered under the last administration has come to naught. We are now under a new administration. Under the leadership of President Roosevelt we are undertaking to grapple with these economic forces and, so far as the Government is able to do so, to arrest them, to overcome them, and to adjust the financial and economic forces of the Nation.

Mr. President, whatever may be said by those who disagree with President Roosevelt, they must admit that he has courage, that he has decision, that he is undertaking to solve these vexing problems. When Senators express the thought that the bill contains a tremendous grant of power, I do not question their statement. It does contain a tremendous grant of power. But let me say, Mr. President, that the responsibility of the President is great, the task before him is tremendous in the negotiations with foreign powers, and the task being great, being imminent, requiring quick action and quick decision, the grant of power must be commensurate with the task.

We have long since learned that as a nation we cannot live alone. We have long since learned that war debts, foreign trade, money, and currency tie us up with Europe and with the rest of the world. The World Economic Conference is soon to be called. I note in the press this morning that the date has already been fixed for June 12, only a little more than 40 days away. It has been called because statesmen of the world recognize that in this modern world no nation can economically live alone. The President of the United States, when he or his representatives go to that conference, must be armed with large powers and, of course, will carry with those powers a large degree of responsibility. Therefore, Mr. President, I shall support the pending measure.

Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] and others have attacked the measure and have held forth the fear that it provides for a money that is unsound and that in its wake will follow an era of inflation comparable to that which took place during the time of the French Revolution, during the time following the World War in Germany, and in other countries of the world. In section 34 of the Thomas amendment, on page 2, it is provided that "action under this section is necessary in order to regulate and maintain the parity of currency issues of the United States." In other words, one of the purposes of this particular section is to enjoin upon the President and those who administer the act to maintain parity between the various currency issues of the United States. What is that to do? That is to maintain the value of paper and gold and other currencies upon a parity. The powers delegated under the bill are to be so administered as to maintain a sound currency and sound money.

Mr. President, it is said that under subsection (a) of section 34, $3,000,000,000 of inflation would result. Let me invite the attention of the Senate to the facts about subsection (a), relating to open-market operations. The Federal Reserve Board has heretofore, under the last administration, undertaken the same character of operations as are directed in subsection (a). The Federal Reserve Board went into the market for the purchase and sale of Government securities for what purpose? To stabilize, so they thought, prices and currency and to aid the Government in the sale of its bonds and securities.

Let me suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania and others that under the open-market operations, even though the purchase of bonds be made by Federal Reserve notes, those notes still will be covered by a gold reserve, just as is other currency issued by the Federal Reserve banks. They all have gold reserves, and the Federal Reserve banks are not going to deplete those gold reserves. Whatever currency they issue for the purchase of bonds will be protected by the gold reserves under the existing law.

Mr. REED. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. REED. The Thomas amendment contains a provision that takes away all penalty for failure to maintain the gold reserve.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is true; but it does not take away the power of the Federal Reserve Board and it does not take away the power of the 12 governors of the banks. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania entertain any fear that the 12 governors of the Reserve banks will voluntarily commit suicide of their banks? They will not permit their gold reserves to fall to a dangerous point, and the bill does not give the President the power to force them to do so. The inflation under subsection (a) of section 34 is no inflation at all so long as a proper ratio between the gold reserve and money issued is preserved. Additional currency may be issued by the Federal Reserve banks under existing law.

The Senator from Pennsylvania on yesterday admitted that we have a sufficient gold reserve in the United States today to permit the issuance of $10,000,000,000 of currency. Is not that true?

Mr. REED. Four billions additional, ten billions in all.

Mr. CONNALLY. How much currency and money have we outstanding?

Mr. REED. About four billions and sixty or seventy-odd millions.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is gold. How much currency and money have we outstanding?

Mr. REED. I misspoke myself. Six billions and sixty or seventy odd millions.

Mr. CONNALLY. Exactly. The figures which I last saw were six billions and three hundred millions. So, according to the admission of the Senator from Pennsylvania, we have now a margin of $4,000,000,000 which could be issued by the Federal Reserve banks or by the Treasury and still have a 40 percent gold reserve in the Treasury and in the Federal Reserve banks. Yet with that tremendous margin the Senator from Pennsylvania and other Senators fear to issue any additional reserve notes or United States currency.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CONNALLY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. REED. That being so, and the present law authorizing an additional 4 billions of sound currency, why pass this provision and why suspend the reserve requirements, as the Thomas amendment would do?

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Pennsylvania is not accurate when he says it suspends the reserve requirements. It does suspend the tax on the issuance of Federal Reserve notes when the gold reserve falls below 40 percent, but it does not repeal the law which lays the injunction upon the Federal Reserve Board and the Secretary of the Treasury and the President of the United States and everybody else to maintain an adequate and sufficient gold reserve. The Senator admits that we could issue today $4,000,000,000 of good currency which would be sound money, he says, and yet he denounces this particular provision of the bill which provides for that very thing, and provides for the possible issuance of only $3,000,000,000 by the Federal Reserve banks instead of $4,000,000,000.

Mr. REED. Mr. President—

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. REED. Unless I annoy the Senator by interrupting him—

Mr. CONNALLY. Not at all. The Senator does not annoy me, and I am very glad to yield to him.

Mr. REED. I stated, perhaps while the Senator was not in the Chamber, that I regarded this provision about which he is speaking as the least offensive part of the Thomas amendment, and that, standing by itself, I should not oppose it. I addressed my objections entirely to the 50 percent depreciation in the gold content of the dollar, and to the unlimited coinage of silver, and to the greenback section.

Mr. CONNALLY. I so understood the Senator, that this is the least objectionable; but, being the least objectionable, it is still objectionable to the Senator.

Mr. REED. And I hope the Senator from Texas will do better than did the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] yesterday. The Senator from Mississippi said he was going to discuss the bill, but he spent so much time denouncing me personally that he did not have time even to mention the free coinage of silver or the 50 percent reduction in gold content. I hope the Senator from Texas will cover those points.

Mr. CONNALLY. I hope the Senator's suggestion that I discuss the bill has not been aroused by what I have said heretofore.

Mr. REED. Not in the least. The Senator is talking directly to the point. The Senator from Mississippi did not.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator; but the Senator said he hoped I would discuss the bill, and I thought I had been doing so.

Mr. REED. The Senator was discussing the bill. I am hoping he will discuss the greenback feature, the debasing of the gold content—

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall.

Mr. REED. And the free coinage of silver.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator is giving me a larger order than I intended to take, because of the limitations of time; but the Senator is against all of this bill. He says that this particular section is the least objectionable. I want to be fair to the Senator, and I have no disposition to make any personal reference to him; but it is absolutely necessary that I refer to the Senator in the course of this debate, because he is the leader of the forces in opposition to this bill and has made the most extensive arguments against it.

Mr. REED. I must beg the Senator's pardon. I did not mean to imply that I was taking offense at anything that he said. I think the Senator is talking directly to the point, and I am glad he is, because so far nobody has undertaken to defend the three sections of which I speak.

Mr. CONNALLY. Now, let me ask the Senator a question. The Senator, then, really has very little objection to the issuance of $4,000,000,000 of new currency. It is only the method to which he objects?

Mr. REED. I do not like to see the reserve requirement suspended by taking off that tax.

Mr. CONNALLY. But if we could expand the currency to the amount of $4,000,000,000 without impairing the reserve requirements, how are we going to impair them by expanding the currency $3,000,000,000?

Mr. REED. We would not.

Mr. CONNALLY. So section 34 (a) has not the seeds of evil in it that the Senator anticipates?

Mr. REED. The only objection I see to that section is the provision suspending the tax on the deficiency in the reserve.

Mr. CONNALLY. So the Senator, after all, is not as fearful of this section as I thought he was. But, Mr. President, the Senator also observed the other day that he thought the embargo on shipments of gold was a wise measure. He agrees to that; and yet when the Government did that, with the Senator's approval, we reduced the gold dollar 8 cents in every market in Europe. The Senator's soul is outraged by anybody's suggesting that we lower the value of the dollar here; but we did lower the value of the dollar in every foreign capital on earth, and we lowered the value of the obligation of every creditor on earth who held a United States obligation, whether of a citizen or of the Government.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator permit one more interruption?

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. REED. I do not want by my silence to seem to agree with that statement. I do not think the gold embargo would have affected exchange more than very slightly. The gold embargo put on on April 4 had no appreciable effect on exchange. What drove down the dollar in foreign exchange was the threat of inflation. It was generally understood through the world that this latest gold embargo was the first step in an inflation of the American currency. That is what affected the exchanges.

Mr. CONNALLY. But all settlements abroad are made in gold, are they not?

Mr. REED. Not now, since the embargo.

Mr. CONNALLY. No; but normally they are made in gold, of course.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I thank the Senator from Texas. I should like to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania a question.

Assuming that a great commercial nation—for instance, Great Britain—should seek to stabilize her pound sterling at $3.50 or $3.75, what would be the course, in the opinion of the Senator from Pennsylvania, necessary to be taken by the United States in order to avoid and avert those disadvantages which are assumed generally to arise when currencies are depreciated?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the injury that we have suffered from the action of British exchange has lain chiefly in the uncertainty in its fluctuations. If British exchange were stabilized at $3.50 to the pound—

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Or $3.75.

Mr. REED. Or $3.75 or $3 or $2.50; if it were stabilized there and fixed at that point, with gold value at that point, things would soon adjust themselves. The abnormality of the present situation is that the pound is unstable, and that the British have followed the policy of selling the pound and buying the dollar and keeping an artificial relationship.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas permit one more question?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What would be the effect on the foreign commerce and the domestic commerce of the United States if Great Britain stabilized her pound sterling at $3.50, and the United States were on the present gold basis? What would be the effect on the foreign and the domestic commerce of the United States?

Mr. REED. It would be very advantageous to have the British pound stabilized on a gold basis at any level—$3.50 or any other.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. At 3 cents, for instance?

Mr. REED. Any price.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator, then, feels that stabilization, rather than the point of stabilization, is the essential thing?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. And that it does not matter to the United States at what point Great Britain, for illustration, stabilizes her currency, so that she accomplishes that end. The United States would still maintain its currency and compete with Great Britain in international trade on the present basis of our currency, without regard to whatever depreciation Great Britain might take in her currency, so long as she stabilized it at some point?

Mr. REED. Yes, Mr. President. The transition is painful; the period of adjustment is painful; but once she stabilizes, the result is just the same as it was when France stabilized.

While the franc was dodging around, going down to discount as far as 90 percent, France had a great advantage over us in all of those elements of commerce in which we were competing; but the moment she stabilized the franc at an 80 percent discount—at 3.91—then just so soon she began to lose the advantage that she had enjoyed. The important thing is the stabilization on the gold basis. What hurts us now is the fact that the pound fluctuates and is being artificially depressed by the action of the exchange stabilization fund in Great Britain.

This morning's newspapers carry the announcement that that fund is to be increased to £500,000,000, which is evidently an effort on the part of Great Britain to arm herself against any similar exchange stabilization operation from this side. What is threatened at the moment is a duel between the British Exchequer and American Treasury, each trying to depreciate the value of its own money in foreign exchange.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Will the Senator yield at that point? I think the Senator's last statement is true.

Mr. REED. And that is where President Roosevelt is doing such excellent work for the United States, in getting in touch with the representatives of the British Government and trying to come to a sane and fair agreement to avoid that kind of a duel.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Is there any way in which a race for depreciation of currencies may be avoided except by international arrangement or agreement?

Mr. REED. I think not; and I approve very cordially what the President is doing to prevent it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well. Then if the British pound sterling should be stabilized at $3.50, the Senator thinks it would not make any difference to American trade; that we should go on without any change in our standard dollar, and that we would be able to meet the fair competition of Great Britain on the present basis of our dollar?

Mr. REED. I think so. I should rather see it stabilized at about $4, because the adjustment would not take so long.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes; but we cannot control with certainty the point at which stabilization will take place.

Mr. REED. No; that requires agreement.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. And the admission that there is a point at which we should like to see the pound sterling stabilized is also an admission that it is a matter of concern and interest and effect to us.

Mr. REED. Oh, yes!

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Beyond doubt.

Mr. REED. Because it diminishes the duration of the period of adjustment, the closer we can get the pound up to parity.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. But, more than that, when a country cheapens its money, history shows that the immediate effect is to increase its exports; it sells more; and to decrease its imports; it buys less in foreign markets.

Mr. REED. That is true; but—

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Then, does not the Senator think that in order to effectuate a proper and fair stabilization of both currencies and exchange, an international agreement is essential?

Mr. REED. Oh, yes; I quite agree. Now, let me add one sentence to that.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I thank the Senator from Texas for yielding to me.

Mr. REED. The pound has been selling at about 30 percent discount from its normal value for about a year now.

It is a year and a half since Britain went off the gold standard. She has already begun to lose the trade advantages which she got from her first depreciation of her currency. Today, the advantage that she is getting from the $3.50 pound is very much less than it was a year ago. These things adjust themselves in time, and that is why I say that the vital thing for us is to have the pound stabilized on a gold basis. It is of only secondary importance at what point between $3.50 and $4 it is stabilized.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes; but it is of importance.

Mr. REED. Oh, certainly; because the adjustment is easier. The higher the stabilization point, the simpler is the adjustment, the shorter the period of adjustment, but that is of very secondary importance compared with getting a stabilization.

I ought to apologize to the Senator from Texas. I have talked too long.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator has admitted a strong argument in favor of the gold-content clause of this amendment. The Senator admits that the only way in which the currencies of Europe can be stabilized is through an international agreement in the economic conference or in some other conference. If that be desirable for the United States, if that be desirable for Europe, and the only method by which it can be reached is through an international agreement, why not arm the President of the United States, when he enters the economic conference, with the power to make that sort of an agreement, and make it not only with reference to a fixed ratio of gold in European countries but in the gold dollar of the United States? Does the Senator apprehend that Europe is going to give us relief from our own conditions? If the American people secure relief in this world condition, it must be through the American people and the American Government.

Oh, but the Senator from Pennsylvania says that the matter will work itself out, no matter at what figure the stabilization of the British pound or the French franc or the standard money unit of any other foreign country is fixed. The condition here in the United States will work out some day or other if we let it alone, but the result will be that during the process of working out it will deflate values of the people of the United States, and when deflation is complete a new set of owners will own the property of the United States.

What is the matter with values? The dollar measured in the wholesale index price of commodities in February of this year was $1.67. In other words, the gold dollar was worth $1.67, measured in all industrial commodities in the United States. The dollar measured in farm products was worth $2.40 last February. What is the reason for that condition? We have just as much wealth as we ever had; our farms are just as fertile, our agriculturists are just as industrious, our industrial concerns have the same plants now they had in 1929; bonds and stocks and securities are backed by the same mortgages by which they were backed in 1929. Yet their value has been deflated. Why? Not because they are any less productive but because, measured in terms of the gold dollar, when converted into money they have not the same value they had before. The gold content of the dollar is the only commodity on earth that I know anything about that is fixed absolutely by law. Twenty-three grains of gold are worth a dollar at the mint. Regardless of whether the supply of gold in the world goes up or whether the supply of gold in the world goes down, the 23 grains are still worth a dollar.

I am wondering why it would be desirable to revalue the British pound at $4 and not to revalue the gold dollar at all. If we are going to put things back on the gold standard, why not put the pound back at $4.86? The Senator says it does not make any difference where we place it, so why disturb the old ratio? Put it back at $4.86. Yet he admits that it should be revalued, and should be revalued at $4, instead of $4.86. Why is that a good argument for England and not a good argument for the United States?

Mr. President, liquidation will finally result in the United States. This condition will work itself out here, just as the Senator from Pennsylvania says it will work itself out in Europe, but he admits that the process of readjustment, the process of liquidation, will be painful. Of course it will be painful. It will be painful to the people who are being liquidated, whose values are destroyed, whose farms are lost, the value of whose industrial stocks is destroyed, and that is what we are trying to prevent, in a way, through the measure now pending before the Senate.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator, but I should not want to disturb Senators who are not interested.

Mr. President, I was discussing a moment ago section 34 (a). The Senator from Pennsylvania admits that, after all, section 34 (a) is not so bad, that it only provides for an inflation of $3,000,000,000, when, as a matter of fact, we can safely inflate four billion and preserve a 40 percent gold reserve. The Senator from Pennsylvania suggested that I discuss subdivision (b), with reference to the issuance of United States Treasury notes.

Mr. President, I make no pretensions of being a financial expert or knowing anything about banking, but I want to observe that I understand that inflation can be brought about in a number of ways. It may be brought about by the issuance of more currency. It may be brought about by increasing bank credits. It may be brought about by the issuance of Government bonds, thereby inflating credit throughout the whole country.

It is proposed here, as to greenbacks, that if the other plan is not successful the President may authorize the issuance of $3,000,000,000 in Treasury notes, not more than 3 billion. It directs him in no degree. He may cause to be issued not exceeding $3,000,000,000. For what reason? That $3,000,000,000 can be employed only for the purchase of outstanding bonds, for no other purpose whatever, under this measure. If by the issuance of $3,000,000,000 of Treasury notes, non-interest-bearing, the Government can retire $3,000,000,000 of interest-bearing bonds, there will, in effect, be no increase in inflation.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. Did I understand the Senator to say that if these Treasury notes should be issued, they could be issued for no other purpose except to retire outstanding bonds? I was under the impression, without looking again at the measure, that the Government could use them to pay current expenses, governmental obligations, as well as to purchase bonds.

Mr. CONNALLY. For no other purpose.

Mr. LOGAN. To purchase bonds, and for no other purpose?

Mr. CONNALLY. That is the way I recollect it. I shall read it to the Senator. It is found on page 3, section 1:

(1) To direct the Secretary of the Treasury to cause to be issued, in such amount or amounts as he may from time to time order, United States notes, as provided in the act entitled "An act to authorize the issue of United States notes and for the redemption or funding thereof and for funding the floating debt of the United States", approved February 25, 1862.

That is the Greenback Act, to which the Senator from Pennsylvania referred.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. The statement of the Senator from Texas is correct. I think the confusion in the mind of the Senator from Kentucky is caused by the fact that the original Thomas amendment did provide that the notes might be used for the payment of current obligations, but the amendment as it is now drawn provides as the Senator from Texas has stated.

Mr. LOGAN. Perhaps I was confused by the original amendment, which I read. As I understand the Senator now, these Treasury notes could be used for no purpose except for the purchase of outstanding Government bonds.

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall read the provision to the Senator. I have located the language. I quote the language of the amendment:

But notes issued under this subsection shall be issued only for the purpose of meeting maturing Federal obligations to repay sums borrowed by the United States and for purchasing United States bonds and other interest-bearing obligations of the United States.

Mr. LOGAN. Would not maturing obligations take care of current expenses?

Mr. CONNALLY. How is that?

Mr. LOGAN. Maturing obligations would cover current expenses.

Mr. CONNALLY. I assumed it meant bonds or certificates of indebtedness, which would be the same thing as a bond.

Mr. LOGAN. If there were a contract for the erection of a building in the sum of $100,000, or some other sum, as the payments became due they would be maturing obligations, it seems to me.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator might be technically right, but I think the whole context of the amendment shows that the purpose is to issue this additional currency for the purpose of affecting the bond market and taking care of outstanding obligations in the form of bonds, and to hold up the price of bonds by buying them in the open market.

Mr. LOGAN. Pensions, for instance, due each month would be maturing obligations.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me read this again.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, if the Senator will read the proviso, I think he will find that it will throw light on the matter.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me read it:

Provided, That when any such notes are used for such purpose the bond or other obligation so acquired or taken up shall be retired and canceled.

That would indicate that the purpose was to be limited to the payment of maturing obligations in the form of bonds or certificates of indebtedness. But let me suggest to the Senator that that is really a distinction without a difference, for the reason that the Government already has authority, under the general law, to issue bonds or certificates of indebtedness, and secure money with which to meet its current obligations.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, what I am interested in, if the Senator will bear with me, is this: Why should the Government issue bonds to obtain money to pay current obligations, and then issue these 90-day Treasury notes to take up the same bonds which had been issued? I do not see why in the first place they cannot use these Treasury notes to retire obligations without issuing bonds and then buying back the bonds.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator may be correct about that. The point of my argument is not so much about the actual operations, but it is to show that there would not be any increase, or any appreciable increase, by the process of inflation.

Mr. LOGAN. That is very true.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is what I am trying to point out, in order to meet the argument of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. LOGAN. Every time a Treasury note is issued, it will cancel an outstanding obligation of the United States, regardless of what the nature of that obligation may be.

Mr. CONNALLY. Exactly.

Mr. LOGAN. And so the outstanding indebtedness will not be increased except by the Treasury notes themselves.

Mr. CONNALLY. Exactly.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. An outstanding bond is drawing interest which the taxpayers are paying. If these Treasury notes, as indicated by the Senator from Kentucky, are issued in lieu of interest-bearing bonds, the Treasury notes being non-interest-bearing, the party who held the bonds and who received the Treasury notes would get no interest. The taxpayers save the interest. The individual who held the bonds and now has the Treasury notes must find an investment, and in finding that investment he very likely will put his money into a tax-paying investment and inflate the currency to that amount, because the bonds are not in the form of distributable currency but the Treasury notes are. We would stop the payment of interest on the bonds, we would get taxes on the investment made, and to that degree it would inflate the currency if not increase the number of dollars.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, of course the Senator from South Carolina and the Senator from Kentucky are both right in their assumptions. Whenever the $3,000,000,000 of Treasury notes are issued, they can only be employed in the payment of outstanding obligations, so the point which I was undertaking to suggest was that it is not a scheme of wild inflation, because the Government will not owe any more when the process is completed than it owes at the beginning. If the bondholder forfeits his bond and accepts in payment these Treasury notes, of course the bond will be canceled, and the payment of interest will be discontinued.

It may be suggested that the bondholder will not surrender his gold bond and accept a Treasury note in payment. Of course he has the privilege of declining until gold is tendered, but under the provisions of this measure and under the tariff act of 1900, the Secretary of the Treasury is required to maintain the parity of all money issued by the United States, and the chances are that the bondholders will surrender their bonds and will accept the new Treasury issues, on the theory that they would be equal in current value to gold; and thereby the interest on outstanding obligations will be decreased.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Before the Senator leaves the point he was discussing, about the solvency of the Treasury in connection with the note issues as compared with bonds, I want to make this further observation: The Senator is correct in what he has said, and for the further reason that today, when we pay 4 percent on the bonds, the principal remains, the Treasury owes just as much money, but when we pay 4 percent on the notes, we are retiring the obligations of the Treasury that much.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator of course is correct in the view that if the bond is surrendered and canceled, the payment of interest is discontinued, and that charge on the Treasury is relieved. I understand how an unlimited issue of Treasury notes would go to protest, if there were not a sufficient gold reserve to maintain them; but under this provision the Federal Treasury and the President will be governed by conditions which will not warrant the issue of these Treasury notes in case the reserve becomes depleted.

Now, Mr. President, I want to discuss the other question which was raised by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield before he leaves the question he has been discussing?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. FESS. The Senator from Texas was discussing the proviso on page 4, and he made the suggestion that there would not be an unlimited issuance of Treasury notes. I note that there is a limit of $3,000,000,000.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Ohio evidently misunderstood the Senator from Texas. I said that I could understand how the issuance of an unlimited amount of Treasury notes would force them to decline in value if the gold reserve were depleted, but I also said that the President, in the issuance of such notes, of course, would be controlled by the consideration of always maintaining a sufficient gold reserve to protect the outstanding notes.

Mr. FESS. But the difficulty is that these notes are to be issued under the act of 1862, which provided for no gold reserve.

Mr. CONNALLY. But we have a gold reserve, let me say to the Senator, in the Treasury now against the greenbacks which are still outstanding under the act of 1862.

Mr. FESS. But these Treasury notes are to be issued under the act of 1862 and the greenbacks were provided for in the Resumption Act of 1879. What I do not understand is why the holder of a bond who is offered the amount of his bond in the form of these Treasury notes should give up a bond that is redeemable in gold on its face and take a Government promise without any redemption element in it.

Mr. CONNALLY. If the Senator from Ohio had listened to the Senator from Texas a moment ago, he would have heard that Senator say that he could understand how the bondholder might decline to surrender his bond unless he were paid in gold. If he should decline, why, of course, that would be his affair and he could wait until such other time as the Government made other arrangements; but under the Parity Act of 1900, which requires the Secretary of the Treasury to maintain the parity of currency with gold, and under the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to maintain a sufficient gold reserve in the Treasury to do that, I said that the bondholder would probably take the currency notes on the theory that he would get a dollar's worth of money for his bond.

Mr. FESS. Let me see whether or not I understand the Senator from Texas. When the bond is redeemed by this new issue the bond is canceled?

Mr. CONNALLY. That is correct.

Mr. FESS. The bond is not paid out of taxes, but it is paid out of a new Government issue. The Government issue does not represent any wealth; it merely represents the promise of the Government. The Senator from Texas is probably a bondholder, and there are thousands of others who bought bonds under the direction of the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], who now sits in the Chamber and who was then the Secretary of the Treasury, in the course of a great campaign for the sale of bonds; thousands upon thousands of people who are not usually bondholders purchased bonds, and many of them still have them. So it is not a matter that simply affects the usual bondholder, but it affects the great multitude of citizens who in the war days bought those bonds. The thing that disturbs me is the requirement of the release of a bond that is on its face redeemable in gold for a new issue, for a Government credit, which has no redemption feature in it at all, under a measure which is even broader than the act of 1862. In other words, if the Senator will read the last four lines of the amendment on page 4, he will find that:

Such notes and all other coins and currencies heretofore or hereafter coined or issued by or under the authority of the United States shall be legal tender for all debts, public and private.

The Greenback Act never went so far as that. The greenback was made a legal tender for all debts except interest on the public debt and customs duties, as the Senator from Texas knows, but here it is proposed to make these Treasury notes equivalent to money with nothing back of them except the credit of the Government.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me say to the Senator from Ohio that I am trying now to show that the issuance of the $3,000,000,000 would not be undue inflation, and I shall discuss the legal-tender features a little later, if the Senator will pardon me; but so far as this particular section is concerned, there is no requirement that a man must take this new money in payment of his bond. It is provided that these notes shall be used in the purchase of maturing obligations. The holder is not required to sell unless he so desires. If a holder of the bonds does not want to take the new notes, he has his recourse; he does not need to do it; he may go into the courts and have that question determined.

Nobody knows what the Supreme Court will decide upon the legal-tender question so far as gold is concerned. It has decided, as the Senator well knows, in the Legal Tender cases that the Congress has the power or did have the power—and I suppose it still has it—under the act of February 25, 1862, to issue greenbacks and to make them tenderable in payment of all prior debts as well as all future debts where the contract simply called for the payment of money without stipulating a particular character of money. I expect to discuss that question just a little later, if the Senator from Ohio will pardon me.

Mr. President, it was suggested a little while ago that it would be desirable for European countries to go back on the gold standard and fix some definite ratio as to their currency, and as to their gold standard; and it was also suggested that the United States in entering that conference, in behalf of our own interest and in behalf of world trade, would find it desirable and wise to revalue our own dollar and fix a different ratio for its gold content.

Mr. President, Great Britain has already, by going off the gold standard, reduced the value of the British pound measured in gold. It is still a pound in Great Britain, but when it goes out into the world it is a pound of about 70 cents on the dollar. England took that action voluntarily. She established an exchange-equalization fund of $750,000,000 for the purpose of stabilizing or "pegging" the pound at a particular figure. How did she employ that fund?

When the dollar seemed to decline Great Britain bought dollars on the international exchange and forced the dollar up and thereby forced the pound down. And our own Government under the last administration and under the last Secretary of the Treasury, unwittingly, perhaps—I do not charge otherwise—aided that very process. They wanted to keep the dollar high in foreign exchanges, and by keeping the dollar high they were driving down the prices of commodities in the United States and were aiding foreign countries which were on a depreciated-currency basis to whip the United States in every avenue of world trade.

Senators are outraged by the idea of decreasing the gold content of the gold dollar. They will not do directly what they are willing to do indirectly. Every process of inflation, whether by the increased use of silver or by the issuance of paper money, has for its purpose the cheapening of the dollar. Why is it desirable to inflate? It is because we want to bring the value of the dollar down. Senators who will willingly do that thing indirectly will not agree to do it directly by reducing the quantity of gold in the dollar. Which is the most direct, the most speedy method? Whatever is done with relation to international exchange and money, if it is to be done at all, should be done quickly, and it ought to be done decisively.

Any method of inflation, whether by the issuance of paper or the issuance of silver, will be a long process because it will be indirect; but when the gold content of the dollar is lowered there is done immediately what Senators profess they want to do indirectly at some future date. And the international economic conference, if it restabilizes foreign currencies and American money at any particular ratio, ought to do it instantaneously, so as to start again the revival of prices, the revival of business, and put the world back again on the highroad to success and prosperity.

Mr. President, when paper money is issued and made redeemable in gold, the value of that paper dollar is tied to the 23 grains of gold in the gold dollar. We may by the issuance of a great amount of paper money for the time being reduce its value; it may decline, as the Senator from Ohio has suggested, as did the greenbacks in 1862, and when that dollar is spent only 50 cents may be obtained for it unless it is supported by a gold reserve; but when the Treasury is called upon to redeem that dollar, it is necessary to redeem it in 23 grains of gold—dear money, hard money, money of a higher value, and that money comes out of the Treasury of the United States.

The Senator from Oklahoma on Monday, I believe it was, pointed out that in interest and in redemption the Government had lost $800,000,000 in the process of issuing greenbacks under the act of 1862, but by reducing the gold content of the dollar we would make every dollar just as sound as every other dollar, and we would only take something out of the inflated, out of the bloated, out of the unsound and unhealthy dollar with which we are trading today.

Mr. President, Senators say that it is unwise to reduce the gold content of the dollar because they assert that we cannot make by law a legal tender of the proposed new dollar for the payment of preexisting debts. That is the question raised by the Senator from Ohio. I quite frankly admit that there is a grave constitutional question involved as to whether the Supreme Court would uphold an act of Congress making the depreciated gold dollar legal tender in payment of obligations theretofore made which stipulated for the payment of dollars in gold of the then present weight and fineness; I am not prepared to say what the Supreme Court would determine with reference to that question; but, Mr. President, I am prepared to say that the issuance of money is a function of government. No individual has the power to determine what money is; no corporation, under the Constitution, is granted the authority or power to say what shall be money. The power to determine what is money is a governmental function alone, and under our Constitution it has been clearly given to the Federal Government in that particular clause which says—

Congress shall have power to coin money and regulate the value thereof—

Not, Mr. President, to fix the value, but to "regulate the value", and by "regulate" is meant the power to change the value as measured in other commodities, as measured in other forms of property, because money has no relation except in comparison with other commodities.

Mr. President, I make the further contention that since the Government alone can determine what is money and since the Government alone can regulate its value, unless the Government has the power to say that that particular kind of money which it ordains is tenderable in the payment of debts, then the power of the Government to say what is money falls and is of no weight whatever.

What is money? Money is a measure of exchange value. If private individuals can, by contract, fix the measure of money, determine the character of money which shall be paid on their contracts, then the power of the Government to say what shall be money falls to the ground. We have legal tender acts in this country. They are incorporated in this particular measure, making certain kinds of money legal tender. All of them fall to the ground if private individuals can by contract say what shall be a legal tender or what shall not be a legal tender.

Mr. President, in 1862, as pointed out by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Fess], an act was passed providing for the issuance of greenbacks. Under that act greenbacks at one time fell to as low as 35 cents on the dollar because they had no gold reserve back of them, because it was not known whether they would ever be redeemed, and the act providing for their redemption was not passed until 1878. Of course, they fell below gold. But that act provided that those paper dollars should be legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private, except interest on the public debt and receipts at the custom houses. A long line of decisions of the Supreme Court followed with reference to whether or not those issues of notes were tenderable in the case of preexisting debts.

I want to be fair with the Senate with relation to the question of the power of Congress over the gold dollar, and for that reason I want to make reference to the case of Bronson v. Rodes, in Seventh Wallace. That was a case construing the Greenback Act. In that case a contract made before the passage of the act stipulated that payment should be made in gold and silver coin. The contract itself called for payment in gold and silver coin. The court held that the contract could not be discharged by the tender of greenbacks issued under the act of 1862.

Again, in the case of Butler v. Horwitz (7 Wall.) it was similarly held that a rent contract could not be discharged by the payment of currency when that contract called for payment in coin. Another case to the same effect was Dewing v. Spears (11 Wall.).

But in a later case, Hepburn against Griswold, in an opinion by Chief Justice Chase, it was held that the Greenback Act of 1862 was invalid insofar as it provided for the discharge of prior existing debts by the tender of greenbacks. It was predicated upon the theory that before the passage of that act the only kinds of money in existence were gold and silver coins. Chief Justice Chase held that coin was expressed in the contract just as though it had been written there because the parties contemplated the payment in coin, although there was no express provision to that effect in the contract.

But, Mr. President, the case of Hepburn against Griswold was later overruled, and it was held in the Legal Tender cases, in Twelfth Wallace, that under the simple power to borrow money the United States Government had the implied power to print greenbacks and to make them legal tender for the payment of all debts, both those contracted before the passage of that act and those contracted after the passage of the act. The opinion did not discuss the question of whether an issue of greenbacks could be tendered in payment of contracts calling for coin. That question was not raised. But the argument in that case is just as applicable to the case of a contract payable in coin as to one payable in lawful money.

Let me quote very briefly to the Senate from the Legal Tender cases—Knox v. Lee and Parker v. Davis (12 Wall. 457):

It is true that under the acts a debtor, who became such before they were passed, may discharge his debt with the notes authorized by them, and the creditor is compellable to receive such notes in discharge of his claim. But whether the obligation of contract is thereby weakened can be determined only after considering what was the contract obligation. It was not a duty to pay gold or silver, or the kind of money recognized by law at the time when the contract was made, nor was it a duty to pay money of equal intrinsic value in the market. * * * There is a well-recognized distinction between the expectation of the parties to a contract and the duty imposed by it. * * * But the obligation of a contract to pay money is to pay that which the law shall recognize as money when the payment is to be made. * * *

No one ever doubted that a debt of $1,000—

I want Senators to bear this in mind. This is a comment of the Supreme Court on the act of 1834, which did reduce the gold content of the dollar. By act of Congress 6 cents were taken from the gold dollar by the act of 1834, and the Supreme Court in the Legal Tender cases commented on that fact as follows:

No one ever doubted that a debt of $1,000, contracted before 1834, could be paid by 100 eagles coined after that year, though they contained no more gold than 94 eagles such as were coined when the contract was made; and this, not because of the intrinsic value of the coin, but because of its legal value. * * * Every contract for the payment of money, simply, is necessarily subject to constitutional power of the Government over the currency, whatever that power may be, and the obligation of the parties is, therefore, assumed with reference to that power.

In other words, Mr. President, when the Constitution gives the Congress the power to coin money and regulate the value thereof, every man dealing with his fellow man or with the Government does so with knowledge of the sovereign power of the Congress to change the value of the dollar whenever the Congress may see fit to do so. Does he not deal in subordination to that sovereign power of the Government which is to regulate and thereby change the value of the dollar?

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. HEBERT. I was interested in the observation which the Senator just made about fixing the value of the dollar by act of Congress. I wonder if the Senator has given any thought to what would happen in the case of those obligations of prior issue containing a provision that they are payable in gold of the present standard of weight and fineness?

Mr. CONNALLY. I am going to come to that in a moment.

Mr. HEBERT. I hope the Senator will do so.

Mr. CONNALLY. I stated a moment ago quite frankly that I am not prepared to contend that there is not a very serious constitutional question involved. I, of course, do not know what the Supreme Court would decide about that, but the only way for the Supreme Court to get a chance to decide is for the Congress to exercise its power and then let the court determine the matter. There is no question that Congress has the power to decrease the gold content of the dollar. It then becomes a question for each citizen to determine as between himself and some other citizen their contractual rights in view of that new statute. We cannot litigate every contract here in the Senate. All the Senate can do is to perform its duty as it sees it, either by reduction of the gold content of the dollar as it sees fit or by increase of the gold content of the dollar, and then each citizen is relegated to the courts to find where that places him with respect to some particular contract.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield further to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. CONNALLY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. HEBERT. It impresses me that in such cases the contractual relations between the parties would be controlling. In other words, if the holder of one of those obligations refuses to accept the new gold dollar he would be wholly within his rights, and if called upon to pay in accordance with the bond, then the debtor would have to find two of the new dollars to take the place of the one which the creditor loaned to the man who borrowed it.

Mr. CONNALLY. I understand the point quite clearly. Does the Senator acknowledge that the Government has the power to enact a law fixing the legal tender in the payment of debts?

Mr. HEBERT. I think that is contained in the Constitution.

Mr. CONNALLY. If that be true, if Congress has the power to fix the legal tender for the payment of debts, how can private individuals annul that power of the Congress by fixing their own contract which prohibits the legal tender in the payment of debts?

Mr. HEBERT. I think the Senator begs the question. He has in mind, I assume, contracts to be made in the future. I had in mind contracts made in the past, where the values have been fixed between the parties. Surely the Congress would not abrogate the obligation of contracts. It has not done so in the past.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am coming to that in a moment, and I am going to show that Congress has abrogated contracts and does abrogate contracts every year that it passes a bill.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CONNALLY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. ADAMS. May I ask the Senator a question to straighten out the matter in my own mind a little? I gather that the Senator was considering in part the doubtful question of the right of Congress to force a creditor to accept a different medium of payment than the obligation calls for. My inquiry is this: Assume that Congress has the power—that the United States under the inflation provision would have the power to take a $20 gold piece and divide in two equal parts and make each of those parts a $20 gold piece. The Government has issued its bond calling for the payment of a thousand dollars of gold. Is it a moral thing for the Federal Government, conceding its authority, to say "While I took from you who purchased the bond a thousand dollars in gold, I will pay you back only $500 in gold by weight?" I am disturbed about the morals of it.

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall say to the Senator that in a speech I made here in January I discussed that particular matter. I said there and then that in the case of Government obligations I was not prepared to say that I would favor the Government's forcing creditors to accept the new dollar, for this reason:

Of course, the assumption of the Senator that the Government got gold from the person who bought its bonds is an assumption without any basis in fact, except, perhaps, in a few instances. We do not deal in gold. We deal in the current money of the country, which under the Parity Act is supposed to be kept to the level of gold. But there is this consideration that distinguishes Government obligations from private obligations:

When the Government issues a bond payable in gold of the present standard of weight and fineness, the Government enters into a contract with its citizens. The Government, being sovereign, perhaps could violate that contract; but the Government is itself a party to the contract, and therefore I am not prepared to urge that it ought to violate its own contract by the exercise of its sovereign power. So far as I am concerned, I am prepared to take the position that I am willing in the case of Government issues already made, payable in gold of the present standard of weight and fineness, that the Government should pay its bondholders every ounce of gold that those contracts call for; but I do not admit that there would be any great immorality in a different course, because the dollar which the Government obtained from the bondholder, when it got it, measured in other commodities—measured in real estate, in commodities, in produce of the farms, in human labor, and all other elements—probably was not worth more than 60 cents of the present dollar.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, may I interrupt again?

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall be very glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. ADAMS. The Government has compelled all citizens to bring their gold to the Government. That is, there is no outstanding gold lawfully held. Now the Government, by this proposal, doubles the purchasing power of its own gold which it has gathered in from the citizen.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is true.

Mr. ADAMS. If I have a $20 bill, the Government has a $20 gold piece standing today on a parity. When we have passed this part of the bill, the Government's $20 gold piece then will buy twice what my $20 bill will buy.

Mr. CONNALLY. Nominally; yes.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President—

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me ask the Senator from Colorado a question. Is the Senator from Colorado in favor of the free coinage of silver?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes, sir; I am.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator is willing, then, by law to double the value of silver over night, and give every man who has a dollar's worth of silver $2, and make the rest of us pay for it; but he is not willing to let the Government pay its obligations in a dollar measured in the same standard of other values that that dollar was measured in when we got it.

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the Senator from Texas that I am not willing to have my Government do what I think is the dishonest thing of increasing the value of its money and decreasing the value of your money.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me ask the Senator another question. Why is he in favor of the free coinage of silver?

Mr. ADAMS. I will tell the Senator why.

Mr. CONNALLY. To cheapen the dollar.

Mr. ADAMS. Not at all.

Mr. CONNALLY. It is to cheapen the dollar, is it not? He wants to cheapen the present value of the dollar.

Mr. ADAMS. I want to increase the purchasing power of the world. I want to increase the exports of America. I want to make usable the silver of the Orient and the silver of South America so that they may buy our manufactured goods. We have been battling over this situation for one reason. Why? We have said that gold has appreciated, have we not?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes.

Mr. ADAMS. Our complaint is that gold has appreciated. This portion of the bill does not depreciate gold. It leaves gold just where it is now.

Mr. CONNALLY. Oh, no! It really raises the price of gold so far as gold itself is concerned, but it depreciates the gold dollar by taking some of the gold out of it.

Mr. ADAMS. That is it exactly. It depreciates the gold dollar but leaves gold itself standing at the same high pinnacle that has caused us our trouble.

Mr. CONNALLY. No; everything is measured in the dollar here. All our debts are measured in dollars. What good is the gold itself, except as a standard of measurement? Whenever we cut part of the gold out of a dollar, we, of course, theoretically increase the price of gold, because gold will buy more dollars than it will now; but the intrinsic value of a grain of gold remains the same. There is just the same amount of gold in the world now as there was yesterday, and there will be just the same amount of gold after this bill is passed as there is today. It does not change the value of gold in the markets of the world one iota. It simply changes the standard by cutting down the number of grains of gold in a dollar. It thereby cheapens the gold dollar but makes gold worth more at the mint, because, instead of taking 23 grains to the mint and getting a dollar, you probably will be able to take 17 or 18 grains to the mint and get a dollar.

Does that answer the Senator?

Mr. ADAMS. Except this: I think the Senator is absolutely correct in saying that the gold grain stands as it did, but the gold dollar is depreciated. Along with the depreciation of the gold dollar and the maintenance of the commodity value of gold goes a depreciation of every credit obligation in America.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is true.

Mr. ADAMS. Every savings-bank deposit, every insurance policy, everything is depreciated. Assuming that the Government exercises its authority to reduce the gold content of the dollar 50 percent, it reduces by 50 percent the value of every obligation that every creditor holds in this land.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator is correct if he is going to accept a measure based purely on gold, but if values ought to bear some fair relationship to each other, if my property ought to be measured in somewhat the same ratio that the Senator's property is, then he is wrong.

The Senator admitted a moment ago that the dollar had increased in value. He said the dollar was too high, that it had appreciated; and yet he is insisting upon keeping all contracts based on a dollar which he says is too high and unfair in its enhancement. He proposes to rectify it by issuing more silver money. When we issue more silver money, we theoretically pull down the value of gold, and we raise up appreciably the value of silver. The depreciation of the gold in a dollar will lift the price of silver to the very same inverse extent as the gold in the dollar is depreciated, because silver as a commodity will rise in the markets of the world to the same extent that we reduce the gold in the dollar.

I am trying to help the Senator from Colorado. We shall make more progress toward lifting the price of silver by decreasing the gold in a dollar than we shall by incorporating 16-to-1 provisions in this bill.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator has stated that gold is not paid to the Government of the United States in exchange for its bonds.

Mr. CONNALLY. I said not in large measure.

Mr. GLASS. And that is quite true. Ordinarily we do not transact business with gold but on gold.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is correct.

Mr. GLASS. Therefore, I submit to the Senator, that when a citizen buys a bond of the United States the primary basis of the transaction is the good faith of the Nation, which he respects. Does the Senator think that citizen could any longer entertain any good faith in his Nation if it should repudiate one half of its textual obligation? And does the Senator think it is a moral transaction?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator evidently was not here when I had the colloquy with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS].

Mr. GLASS. Yes, I was; and I was utterly amazed and distressed to hear the Senator say that he was somewhat doubtful on that point.

Mr. CONNALLY. Oh, no! The Senator, if he heard me accurately, heard me say that I was not prepared to say that the Government ought to force its creditors, its bondholders, to take the depreciated gold dollar.

Mr. GLASS. Why is the Senator not prepared to say that?

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall explain to the Senator if he will give me a moment. I shall show him why.

The Government, when it issues a bond to one of its citizens, is a party to the contract; and if it provides in that bond that the citizen shall receive so many grains of gold, or so many dollars of the present standard of weight and fineness, I am willing that the Government should redeem that promise.

Let me say further to the Senator that the reason why I say that I doubt the authority of the Government to do anything else is this:

The courts have held that when one Congress passes an act, and under that act the Government makes a contract with a citizen, a future Congress cannot disturb that contract. The Senator is familiar with that.

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. That being true, and the outstanding gold bonds having been issued under former acts of Congress, I am not prepared to say that this Congress could, if it wanted to, make those contracts payable in a different standard of gold dollars.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. It seems to me, if the Senator will allow me a suggestion, that whenever a bond is issued by the Government and is purchased by one of its citizens, the transaction is based upon the good faith of the Government in carrying out its promises.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is right.

Mr. LOGAN. I know of nothing that would prevent the Congress of the United States from saying that it will not pay any of those bonds, because no citizen could bring a suit against the Government of the United States without the consent of the Congress.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is true.

Mr. LOGAN. I suggest to the Senator, however, that if the Government issues a bond for $1,000, payable in gold, under the decision in the Legal Tender cases, it appears that the Congress, in view of the constitutional provision, would have the right to change the value of the dollar—that is, to change the gold content—and the bondholder would have to accept it.

When the contract goes further, however, and provides not only that he shall be paid so many dollars in gold but that it shall be gold of a certain weight and fineness, then it seems to me that the Congress could not escape, through the means of any law that might be enacted, the payment of the exact weight in gold called for. The holder of the bond would have an election, as it were, as to whether he would accept gold at a legal value as money, or whether he would accept it at a certain weight as a commodity.

Therefore, if the Senator will allow me to make the suggestion, I agree with him that it is very doubtful whether it would be possible for Congress to allow the Government to escape legally from a contract where it had promised to pay gold dollars of 25.8 grains, 0.900 fine, by paying in any other commodity or any less weight of gold, although if it simply provided that it should pay in gold dollars I think the Senator is exactly correct, reasoning from the opinion of the Supreme Court in the Legal Tender cases, which I did not think were sound at the time. I have always thought it was unsound.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CONNALLY. Just let me reply to the Senator from Kentucky first.

Allow me to say to the Senator that he and I are in complete agreement as to the statements he makes with respect to the bond and its provisions. If the bond simply provided for payment in gold and stopped there, then, under the Constitution, if the Government should so decide—and I am not prepared to say that it should so decide—it would have the legal power to make the new dollars, of less gold content, legal tender in payment of those obligations.

But where the Government is itself a party to the contract, and stipulates in the bond that it will repay the obligation in dollars of the present standard of weight and fineness, I quite agree that the Government might be charged with a breach of faith if it should exercise its sovereign power in deciding its own case and require the citizen to accept a lower gold content.

Suppose we do, however, pay the Government bonds, every dollar and every grain stipulated; we are no worse off than we are now. We have to pay them under existing law. How will it harm our situation if we go ahead and redeem every gold bond the Government has outstanding in gold of the present standard of weight and fineness? We have to do it anyway. But there is quite a different question involved when two citizens are concerned. There is quite a different question involved when two corporations are concerned, one owing, the other holding the gold bonds. They are not sovereigns; they are not the Government undertaking to deal with its own citizens.

When they make a contract stipulating that the bond must be discharged in dollars of a stipulated standard of weight and fineness, they make that contract with their eyes wide open, knowing that the Congress of the United States has—not alone today, but has had from the beginning—the power to regulate the value of that money and change it whenever conditions warrant it.

Are there no moralities with respect to values except as to the value of gold? Is there no morality involved in the question of a government which permits its citizens to have their values destroyed? When we come to gold, gold alone is God; gold alone is the idol before which these gentlemen worship.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. REED. Do I correctly understand the Senator, then, as saying that it is his opinion that Congress has power to impair an existing contract to pay in gold of the present standard of weight and fineness?

Mr. CONNALLY. If the Senator had honored me with his presence a little while ago, I would not have to repeat what I have already said.

Mr. REED. I am sorry. I was called from the floor.

Mr. CONNALLY. Senators who have heard my statement will not desire that I repeat what I have already suggested.

Mr. REED. I will not ask the Senator to repeat it.

Mr. CONNALLY. I stated to the Senate in the opening of my remarks that there was a very grave constitutional question involved, but I was undertaking by analogy and by analysis of the Legal Tender cases to point out what I thought were the considerations which might operate on the court in holding that Congress, under its sovereign power to regulate the value of money, might provide that a dollar of a lower gold content might be a legal tender as a contract stipulating for payment in dollars of the present standard of weight and fineness.

Let me say to the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania that an English court within the last 2 months has decided that very question, and has held that contracts made for payment in British pounds of a certain standard of weight and fineness could be discharged by payment in British paper pounds, since England went off the gold standard.

Mr. REED. Of course, the difference is obvious, in that they have no constitutional limitation.

Mr. CONNALLY. They have an unwritten constitution, which probably is more inflexible, in some ways, than our own. The Senator does not mean to contend that Congress cannot abrogate contracts, does he?

Mr. REED. Congress can abrogate contracts, but it cannot violate the due process of law provision. Regardless of the legal discussion, I gather that the Senator feels that it is at least a matter of some doubt?

Mr. CONNALLY. I do. If the Senator has read the Legal Tender cases, he knows that there is some doubt, because it was decided in the Legal Tender cases that a contract made when there was no other money in existence except gold and silver coin, calling for the payment of dollars, could thereafter be discharged and liquidated by the tender of greenbacks, with no gold backing, merely a paper promise to pay, when those dollars were worth, measured in gold, only 35 cents.

Mr. REED. I am familiar with the arguments on both sides.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the Senator regard that as an open question?

Mr. REED. I think the chances are that we lack the power, but I concede, and agree with the Senator, that there is some doubt about it.

Does the Senator know that the very pendency of this amendment has destroyed the market for municipal bonds? Nassau County, N.Y., the county just outside of Brooklyn, tried yesterday to sell an issue of municipal bonds, and did not get a single bid for them, all because of the doubt about what Congress is going to do to these existing gold contracts.

Mr. CONNALLY. May I suggest to the Senator that it probably was not so much the pendency of the amendment which had that effect as it was the speech of the Senator from Pennsylvania, occupying the responsible and eminent place which he does occupy, in predicting to the country and to the world that we were going to be plunged into the same kind of inflation which engulfed Germany, the same kind which was practiced in France during the Revolution, and the same kind, probably, practiced in Russia when rubles were worthless.

The Senator is not a man who favors wild agitators; he does not believe in communism, he does not believe in "reds." Nobody pays any attention to the communists and the reds when they speak from the soap boxes, but let me say to the Senator that when one who is as eminent as he, who has the attention of the United States to the extent that he has it, stands upon the floor of the United States Senate, with the occupants of the press gallery taking down his language, with the press of the country open to his utterances, and makes predictions of that kind, of course there is going to be a reaction, and I am sure that his prediction had more to do with the decline of municipal bonds than the mere pendency of this amendment.

Mr. President, municipal bonds have not been flourishing so far as I know since 1929. Why do we have the Reconstruction Finance Corporation? The cities and counties in every State of this Union are on their knees before the Reconstruction Finance Corporation begging them to finance their sewerage projects, and all other kinds of projects, because they cannot sell their bonds. That condition existed long before this amendment was offered in the Senate.

Mr. President, there has been a poor market for any kind of securities. The Federal Treasury has been the only bank that has been able to hand out coin, and that has not worked. That was one of the Senator's remedies for the present condition, but it has not worked, and it has not solved the problem. We are now undertaking measures to approach a solution of the problem, and the Senator from Pennsylvania is the chief objector. He stands in the highway with his sword drawn, and he says, "You shall not pass. We must go on along the road of liquidation. Let things alone. Let them foreclose their mortgages. Let municipal bonds go on down and down and down. Let values be destroyed. Stand still. Do nothing." That is the doctrine of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. WALCOTT. Does the Senator understand the language of this amendment to permit the President to make more than one change in the gold content of the dollar?

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not. If I read it correctly, it is contemplated that he could make one change.

Mr. WALCOTT. I see nothing in the language of the amendment—and that is a very important point, it seems to me—which would indicate that he would be estopped from making more than one change.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not agree with the Senator.

Mr. WALCOTT. It seems to me that he could make any number of changes, so long as they did not exceed 50 percent in the reduction of the content. If that is true, how is the Senator proposing to have the various bonds differentiated? Let us say that there is a period in the monetary history of the country of 6 months, or a year, or 2 years, with a 20-percent reduction in the value of the gold dollar, and Government bonds have to be issued on that basis, and other contracts, industrial contracts, have to be issued on that basis. Then, in another 6 months, or a year, another change is made, putting back 10 percent, or taking out 24 percent. How does the Senator propose to differentiate, even in the case of Federal bonds, unless they are serial bonds?

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not agree that the amendment contemplates that the President should change the gold content more than once. If the Senator wants me frankly to tell him what my view about it is, my view was incorporated in a bill which I introduced sometime ago, that once the content is changed, thereafter gold should be treated as a commodity and should not be coined, but should be kept in the Treasury, and the number of grains which would be paid in the redemption of a dollar would vary according to the commodity index of a thousand basic commodities of the United States. Gold will then seek its level as a commodity. It would be worth just what it is worth, and it would not, as it is today, be arbitrarily measured by a statute which provides that 23 grains of gold shall be worth a dollar, whether it is worth a dollar or not. Does that answer the Senator?

Mr. WALCOTT. Yes; but it raises another question. It is very important, it seems to me, to have a basis. I should like to go on with this for a moment.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me say to the Senator that the question he is raising is that we could very easily stipulate the number of grains in the dollar.

Mr. WALCOTT. On the face of the bond.

Mr. CONNALLY. On the face of the bond, if he wanted to do it. Make it a part of the contract.

Mr. WALCOTT. That is the Irving Fisher plan, very largely.

Mr. CONNALLY. I mean, it could be stated in the contract, so many grains of gold, stated in the bond, if that is desired.

Mr. WALCOTT. Does not the Senator think that would lead to endless confusion as to dollars and as to the existence of industrial contracts during those intervals? How could there be any certainty in an industrial contract?

Mr. CONNALLY. I was distinguishing between Government contracts and private contracts. I do not believe that private individuals have any right to undertake to fix a standard of money by contract, and were I to have my way, I should enact a law providing that hereafter private individuals should not make contracts except in the standard, lawful money of the United States. That is what I would do. Then all contracts would be based, not upon gold or silver or paper, but would be based upon whatever the Government said was lawful money at the time the contract was to be discharged.

That is what was in the minds of the makers of the Constitution. The makers of the Constitution did not say that Congress shall have the power to regulate only one kind of money and fix its value. It provides that Congress has the power to coin money and regulate its value, and to determine what is money. No one else except the Government has the function of saying what is money, and if private individuals can go out and contract that there must be so many grains of gold or so many grains of silver in a dollar, then they, and not the Government of the United States, are fixing the standard of value. They are ordaining their own particular kind of money, and they are nullifying the constitutional provision, which says that Congress, and Congress alone, shall determine the standard of money.

What is money? Money is that which the Government ordains as the medium of exchange. I cannot say what money is, the Senator from Connecticut has no right to say what money is, and yet, when we get together and contract for payment in a certain kind of money and so many grains of gold, we are determining what is money. The British case, to which I referred awhile ago, laid down the doctrine that a British contract payable in pounds of a certain standard of weight and fineness could be discharged by the payment of paper pounds, because under the British law that was money at the time the contract was discharged.

Mr. FLETCHER. Lawful money, sound money.

Mr. CONNALLY. Lawful money and sound money.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The British Government has established what is called a stabilization board, and given them £150,000,000 with which to operate on foreign exchange, and so manage their currency. What is that if it is not regulating the value of its currency, determining the value of its currency?

Mr. CONNALLY. I may say to the Senator that I discussed that a little while ago.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The Senator has said a great deal about the sanctity of contract today, and that has gone through this debate since the amendment was brought up, and possibly something may be said about it again.

The Senator is aware of the fact that gold certificates call for payment in gold. In the paper last night I noticed that an order had been issued to the effect that those who have gold certificates shall bring them to the Treasury, or to some bank, or be subject to a penalty of imprisonment or a fine of $10,000. In view of that fact, does not the Senator think we are wasting time when we talk about the sanctity of contract here?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that Senators who voted for the emergency banking bill, which contained a provision making it a penal offense for any citizen having a gold certificate or gold money not to surrender it to the Treasury, are now among those who are holding up their hands in horror and saying that we must not revalue the gold dollar, because that would violate contracts. I shall not express my own opinion as to the legality, under the Constitution, of that act, which requires the citizen to surrender his gold coin under penalty of going to the penitentiary. I do not care to discuss that.

The reason I suggested a little while ago to the Senator from Virginia that I was prepared in the case of Government bonds to agree to the payment of every ounce of gold that the Government contracted to pay was that I wanted to draw a distinction between that kind of contracts and that kind of bonds and other bonds out among the people. But, Mr. President, regardless of whether we do that or we do not, we shall not be in any worse position if we do that than the one we now occupy. Those are matters that Congress can take care of after the revaluation of the dollar shall have been made; but it seems to me absolutely essential for the success of the economic conference that the President shall have the power to revalue the gold dollar by decreasing its value if the conference is to be of any effect.

I was quoting the Legal Tender cases when interrupted. Listen to this quotation from the decision in the Legal Tender cases, which partly answers the Senator from Pennsylvania—

Every contract for the payment of money, simply, is necessarily subject to the constitutional power of the Government over the currency, whatever that power may be, and the obligation of the parties is, therefore, assumed with reference to that power.

In other words, the Supreme Court of the United States holds that when one citizen contracts with another, he contracts with knowledge of the power of Congress to regulate the value of money, and he assumes his contractual obligation in conformity with the suspended power of the Congress to cut down the value of the medium of exchange whenever it may see fit to do so.

Again quoting from the Supreme Court:

By the act of June 28, 1834, a new regulation of the weight and value of gold coin was adopted, and about 6 percent was taken from the weight of each dollar. The effect of this—

I want Senators who are so outraged at the suggestion to bear witness—

The effect of this was that all creditors were subjected to a corresponding loss. The debts then due became solvable with 6 percent less gold than was required to pay them before.

I will say to the Senator from Colorado that the court admits that this was a hardship, but the court said:

It is not every hardship that is unjust, much less that is unconstitutional; and certainly it would be an anomaly for us to hold an act of Congress invalid merely because we might think its provisions harsh and unjust.

The court held constitutional in that case the Legal Tender Act of 1862, and held that paper dollars worth 35 cents could be tendered in payment of contracts made before the act was passed which contemplated the payment of gold and silver coin, though there was no stipulation to that effect.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. Would it interrupt the Senator to ask him a question which, perhaps, has already been propounded?

Mr. CONNALLY. It will not interrupt me at all. I am glad to hear the Senator.

Mr. WAGNER. Is it the Senator's view that if the power were given to the President to reduce the gold content of the dollar, and should he exercise that power, that it would affect existing contracts?

Mr. CONNALLY. That is the question we have been discussing.

Mr. WAGNER. Either it does or it does not. I am not so much concerned with the constitutional question, because my view, from a reading of the Legal Tender cases, is that it is pretty definite that Congress has the power to reduce the gold content of the dollar—

Mr. CONNALLY. That is true.

Mr. WAGNER. As to whether we ought to do it or not is another question.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is another question.

Mr. WAGNER. But the thing I am concerned with, from a reading of the amendment, is whether, if the President shall exercise the power which we propose to confer upon him, it will affect outstanding contracts and outstanding obligations.

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall say to the Senator that the amendment does not, in terms, as I now recall it, make the new gold dollar a legal tender in the payment of debts. It provides that it shall be the standard unit of value. I shall read the provision.

The President may fix the weight of the gold dollar in accordance with the ratio so agreed upon, and such gold dollar, the weight of which is so fixed, shall be the standard unit of value, and all forms of money issued or coined by the United States shall be maintained at a parity with this standard and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to maintain such parity, but in no event shall the weight of the gold dollar be fixed so as to reduce its present weight by more than 50 percent.

While that fixes a new standard of value so far as the future is concerned, there is no specific provision in the amendment that makes the new dollar as such legal tender in the payment of all existing and preexisting debts.

Mr. WAGNER. Does not the Senator believe, in the interest of certainty, that it ought to be clearly set out in the proposed statute whether or not it will affect existing contracts?—because I think that is one of the vital things in this whole proposal.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the Senator that I am discussing the amendment as it is; I was not undertaking to improve it or amend it. I shall ask the Senator from New York, who is a great lawyer—

Mr. WAGNER. I deny the soft impeachment.

Mr. CONNALLY. According to the Senator's view of the Constitution as construed in the Legal Tender cases, has he any doubt that Congress has the right to change the gold content of the dollar and make the new gold dollar legal tender?

Mr. WAGNER. I have not; nor have I any doubt that Congress can enact laws which will impair to that extent existing contracts.

Mr. CONNALLY. Exactly.

Mr. WAGNER. We do it in other cases; we provide for it in bankruptcy legislation.

Mr. CONNALLY. To be sure.

Mr. WAGNER. But that is not the question. The question is whether we ought to do it or not. I am not now referring to that question.

Mr. CONNALLY. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. WAGNER. But, in any event, the proposed law ought to be very clear, because it is an uncertainty which may raise havoc as to whether or not, if the President shall exercise the power conferred, his action can affect existing contracts, because, unless that power is specifically conferred by Congress, it will not affect existing contracts.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is right.

Mr. WAGNER. That was what the Bronson case decided.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator is correct about that.

Now let me call the Senator's attention to the fact—

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes; I shall yield in just a moment. Let me first answer the question of the Senator from New York. It may be significant, I do not know, that another section of this bill which has to do with the issuance of greenbacks provides that they shall be legal tender for all debts, public and private. I do not know why there was no provision made as to the new dollars of the revaluated type being tenderable in payment of past-due contracts.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President—

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield first to the Senator from Minnesota, who has been on his feet for some time.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, in the case of a contract, even though entered into by the Government itself, even though it be a Government contract, if it should be shown that under certain circumstances its character might have the effect of threatening the public safety, does not the Senator think the Government would be justified in abrogating such a contract?

Mr. CONNALLY. Of course. The Government is sovereign, and it is vested with those powers which it is assumed it will exercise in self-preservation and in the preservation and safety of its people. Of course, being sovereign, the Government, if it wills, can do a great many things which probably we would not approve of, but it could do them if it so desired.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President—

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, may I intrude just one suggestion: It seems to me that there is possibly a confusion as to the contracts, between the Senator from New York and myself. It seems to me that there is no question at all as to the legal-tender quality of the gold coinage for all the purposes. That is established by statute, and, beyond question, I think the language even of this amendment is sufficient; but there are two classes of contracts, one which specifies the medium of payment and says it shall be gold coin of the prescribed standard of weight and fineness. The question is whether or not such contracts can be affected. The ordinary contracts which do not define the medium of payment, such as insurance policies, such as promissory notes, and such as deposits in the banks, would obviously be affected by this provision.

Mr. WAGNER. I only had in mind—and I thought we all understood the question sufficiently so that I did not have to reiterate it—the type of contract which provides for the payment of a certain amount in gold coin of a certain weight and fineness. Those contracts will be enforced unless we by law provide that, even in the case of those contracts, the other type of money is on a parity and must be accepted in place of the gold prescribed. That is what I had in mind, and that is all that was involved in the Bronson case.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator from New York is correct. The Constitution gives Congress the power to regulate the value of money, and, unless it affirmatively takes action to do that thing, of course, those contracts would not be affected which call for payment in gold of the present standard of weight and fineness; but if Congress does regulate the value of money and fixes a new standard of money and then affirmatively says that that particular kind of money shall be tenderable on preexisting contracts calling for payment in gold of a certain standard of weight and fineness to the contrary notwithstanding, then the question will be clearly presented; but the Congress has got to act affirmatively to bring that about, and the bill does not seem to contain such an affirmative statement.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President—

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BULKLEY. I was just going to ask the Senator if it is not clear that the language of the amendment now before us does not apply to contracts providing for payment in gold of a specific weight and fineness?

Mr. CONNALLY. I suggested to the Senator from New York a little while ago that it did not seem to the Senator from Texas that the language of the bill provided that the new dollars shall be legal tender in payment of preexisting debts calling for payment in gold of the present standard of weight and fineness.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield once more, and I will promise not to interrupt him again?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. If that is so, and it does not affect existing contracts, can the Senator imagine what will happen to the municipalities of the country when they are called upon to meet their obligations? There will not be one of them that will be able to avoid bankruptcy.

Mr. CONNALLY. Of course, I shall say to the Senator that there will still be the same number of gold grains, there will still be the same amount of gold in the world as now, and those gold grains as such will have the same value after the passage of this measure as they had before.

Mr. WAGNER. That is true; but the taxes which they collect will be legal-tender money; and if we reduce the gold content of the dollar, more dollars will be required to pay the obligations of the municipalities.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is true.

Mr. WAGNER. And, in my opinion, there is not one of them that could stand that strain.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, may I suggest that in the earlier Legal Tender case, the case of Lane County against Oregon, it was held that an act similar to this did not apply to the States.

Mr. CONNALLY. It was held in the Lane County case that where a State provided by statute that its taxes should be collected in coin that the Paper Legal Tender Act did not apply; but that is not the same question that is involved here, because that was a coin contract.

Mr. President, I ask the pardon of the Senate for consuming so much time, but I want to quote right on this point a little further from one of the other Legal Tender cases. In the case of Juilliard v. Greenman (110 U.S.) the Court held—this is in point:

If, upon a just and fair interpretation of the whole Constitution, a particular power or authority appears to be vested in Congress—

And the power to regulate money is such a power—

it is no constitutional objection to its existence or to its exercise that the property or the contracts of individuals may be incidentally affected.

In other words, if Congress possesses the power to do a thing, it is no constitutional objection that its acts affect the contracts or property of private individuals.

So here, with Congress having the power to regulate the value of money, it cannot be complained that it violates the right of contract.

The power to make the notes of the Government a legal tender in payment of private debts being one of the powers belonging to sovereignty in other civilized nations, and not expressly withheld from the Congress by the Constitution, we are irresistibly impelled to the conclusion that the impressing upon the Treasury notes of the United States of the quality of being a legal tender in payment of private debts is an appropriate means, conducive and plainly adapted to the execution of the undoubted powers of Congress, consistent with the letter and spirit of the Constitution, and therefore, within the meaning of that instrument, necessary and proper for carrying into execution the powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States.

Mr. President, so far as private contracts of individuals with each other, providing for the present standard of weight and fineness, according to my view, though it is not a closed question because the court may decide otherwise, Congress has the power to determine that the dollar shall be devaluated and that the new gold dollar shall be legal tender in the discharge of debts between individuals, regardless of the contractual clauses as to the present standard of weight and fineness.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, when the Senator speaks of the individual would he include States and counties and municipalities?

Mr. CONNALLY. I would unless their laws provided to the contrary, because the Federal Government was given by the States the power and right under the Constitution to fix and regulate the value of money, and the States were expressly prohibited by the Constitution from coining money or emitting bills of credit.

Mr. REED. Then if that is so, the gold-standard clause, which all those bonds contain, is quite meaningless. The effect of it is a promise to pay in dollars which the Congress may regulate from time to time. It means just the same whether we say we will pay a thousand dollars on a fixed date or whether we say we will pay a thousand dollars in gold of the present standard of weight and fineness. The meaning becomes the same.

Mr. CONNALLY. The meaning would be "lawful money." Whatever is the lawful money of the United States, that would be the money that would discharge that debt.

Mr. REED. What becomes of the credit of the States and the counties and cities while this power remains unexercised in the hands of the President? Would the Senator consider the lending of money to his own State of Texas and paying in good gold money for a State bond if the President of the United States had the power to pay him back in 50-cent dollars?

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me say to the Senator that nobody has any gold money now. They will not admit it if they have. Gold money is in the Treasury and in the Federal Reserve banks. The Senator voted for the bank bill which requires the citizen to turn his gold money over to the Government, did he not?

Mr. REED. The bill did not require it. It was the Executive order which would require it. Every outstanding Federal Reserve note is by its terms payable in gold. It is a governmental promise which for the time being we have suspended. We have not repudiated it. We have merely suspended it. It is to be assumed that the citizen considers that promise valid and his Federal Reserve note as sound money. He would hesitate a long time to lend those notes to the State of Texas or the State of Pennsylvania if the Congress and the President by future action had the power to pay him back in 50-cent dollars.

Mr. CONNALLY. The men who own those bonds of the States and counties now will never get the bonds repaid on the present basis of the valuation of commodities.

Mr. REED. Those who have Pennsylvania bonds will.

Mr. CONNALLY. I hope that is true. I hope they will all be repaid. I said on the present basis of the value of the commodities and on the present basis of the value of property. Many of them are in default now. They cannot pay the interest on many of them. How does the Senator contemplate the possibility of their discharging the bonds in full unless commodity prices and the prices of property enhance and increase?

Mr. President, I do not want Senators to draw the conclusion, as some of them no doubt do, that I favor the repudiation of the obligations of the Government. I have expressly stated here that I do not. I am perfectly willing the Government shall pay every bondholder every grain of gold stipulated in the contract. But I do hold to the theory that the Congress has the power to determine the standard of money and to regulate its value. I believe when the value of the gold dollar goes so high that it is unconscionable, compared with other commodities, the Government ought to exercise its power.

There is only $5,000,000,000 of gold in the United States. Senators speak about five billions of gold as if every man who loaned any money had gold. Why, Mr. President, suppose we decrease the value of the gold dollar 50 percent and appropriate $5,000,000,000 to repay the holders of the gold. We could well afford to do so, but based on that 5 billions of gold are 300 billions of property which is affected and which fluctuates according as gold goes up or down.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. CONNALLY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. BLACK. A few moments ago a statement was made by the Senator from Pennsylvania in connection with the point which the Senator from Texas is presenting that I do not think should remain unchallenged. I want to invite the Senator's attention to it.

The Senator from Texas very properly called attention to the English case and the Senator from Pennsylvania assumed that by reason of the fact that England has no written constitution and we do have a written Constitution, that case would not apply. In order that it may be placed in the Record, let me say that the power the English Parliament has is to regulate the value of the currency. That is the power it exercises. It makes little difference whether it has that power by reason of the absence of a constitution or by reason of the presence of a constitution.

England had the power, without a constitution, to regulate the value of the currency. The courts have held that it properly did so. Congress has the right under the Constitution to regulate the value of the currency. The Senator from Texas, as I understand it, is arguing that the power is just as forceful and effective when given in a constitution as though it were given to the people without a constitution.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if the Senator from Texas will permit me—

Mr. CONNALLY. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. REED. I think the Senator from Texas understood me all right, but I did not make myself clear to the Senator from Alabama. We are all agreed that Congress has the power to regulate the currency and the value of coins. Of course there is no doubt about that. The question is whether that power to regulate includes the power to impair the obligation of existing contracts. That is the only matter in which we have any doubt.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am coming to that. Let me say to the Senator from Pennsylvania and to the Senator from Alabama that the Senator from Alabama is correct in that Great Britain, under her system, has vested sovereign legislative power in the Parliament. The Senator from Pennsylvania is correct in that there is no written constitution which limits the power of Parliament. The Senator from Pennsylvania evidently meant to imply by that interjection that there is something in our written Constitution which limits the power of Congress to regulate money, which does not exist in the British system.

I want to invite the attention of the Senate to the fact that there is nothing in the Constitution of the United States which prohibits Congress from impairing the obligation of a contract. The prohibition in the Constitution is on the States. It provides that no State shall enact a law which impairs the obligation of contracts, but there is no such limitation of power as to the Congress. We have enacted laws from the beginning of our Government which do impair the obligation of contracts. Let me invite attention to an act for which the Senator from Pennsylvania voted during the last session of Congress.

We amended the bankruptcy law so that railroad companies who have maturing bonds, payable in gold of the present standard of weight and fineness, may now seek the protection of the bankruptcy courts and scale down their bonds from the present standard of weight and fineness and force their creditors to accept 50 cents or 25 cents on the dollar or whatever the court may determine the liquidation will finally produce. What does that do to a contract? Does that impair it? It not only impairs the contract between the railroad company and its bondholders but in some cases it wipes out the contract.

Of course, that is under the express grant of power. The Constitution expressly grants to Congress the power to enact bankruptcy laws, but it also expressly grants to Congress the power to regulate the value of money; and whenever the Congress possesses the direct power to do any particular thing the Supreme Court holds that in the exercise of that specific grant all contracts and all things fall before the exercise of that sovereign power. That is what the Supreme Court has held.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRATTON in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. CONNALLY. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. GLASS. When a railroad or an individual either goes into bankruptcy, does not the railroad or the individual have to surrender all of the assets into the hands of a receiver?

Mr. CONNALLY. To be sure.

Mr. GLASS. The proposal involved here does not require the United States Government to surrender anything. It simply enables it to repudiate one half of its debts.

Mr. CONNALLY. I have twice tried to make clear to the Senate that I am not advocating that the Government shall force its creditors to accept the new gold dollars in payment of its bonds.

Mr. GLASS. That I understand.

Mr. CONNALLY. How does the Senator reach the conclusion that I am proposing to force the Government of the United States to do something?

Mr. GLASS. I am not saying that the Senator is undertaking to force the Government to do something. I am saying that the proposal now before us authorizes the Government to do that.

Another question I should like to ask the Senator, if I may. The Senator dwells upon the fact that there is nothing in the Constitution that prohibits the Federal Government from impairing the obligation of a contract, but there is something in the Constitution that prohibits the States from enacting a law that would impair the obligation of a contract. Why does the Senator from Texas imagine that was put in the Constitution, that limitation upon the power of sovereign States? Was it not because the central Government regarded an act of that sort as utterly immoral?

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not know that it was on the grounds of morality.

Mr. GLASS. It was on the ground of common honesty, at any rate.

Mr. CONNALLY. There are many considerations. For instance, the Federal Government might desire to protect the citizens of Virginia against any law of my State which might discriminate as between his citizen and a citizen of my State. There are all sorts of considerations that might have entered into that question. But let me make a suggestion to the Senator from Virginia. He seems to think that because the Constitution prohibits the States from enacting laws which may impair the obligation of contracts, it is thereby implied that the Federal Government cannot do it. The same care, the same wisdom, the same caution that caused the convention to insert that clause in the Constitution as to the States would have prompted them, if they had so desired, to limit similarly the Federal Government; but they did not do it.

Mr. GLASS. I imagine that the implication was so obvious that it was not necessary.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, as a matter of fact I think the record of the convention will show that there was a resolution offered to incorporate in the Constitution a provision that the Federal Government should not enact legislation to impair the obligation of contracts, and it was defeated in the convention.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator from New York.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to suggest that it is provided in the fifth amendment to the Constitution that no person shall be deprived of property without due process of law? I think that an act impairing the obligation of an existing contract would violate that amendment.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, the language in the case of Lee against Knox is quite to the contrary—that it is not a fair assumption to say that under all circumstances Congress has not the right to impair the obligation of an existing contract.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me say to the Senate that this is the test of whether Congress has the right to abrogate a contract or impair one:

The Constitution defines what Congress may do. If it grants to Congress the right to do a certain thing, then Congress may do that thing, and all contracts and other obstructions of private citizens must give way. What is the philosophy of it? The philosophy of it is that the constitutional grant to Congress of power to do a certain thing is a sovereign grant of power, and if private individuals could by contract prevent the execution of that power, there would be no use of Congress having such a power. Every right and contract must give way, provided Congress is exercising a clear grant of power in doing some particular thing, and all incidental things must give way. That is the test.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President—

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. It is not true, though, that the makers of the Constitution assumed and had a right to assume that the Government of the United States will always be a gentleman in dealing with its citizens in relation to any contract that it might make, and for that reason there is no provision in the Constitution which forbids the repudiation of a contract? But does not the Senator think that it was because the repudiation of a contract, or the failure to perform it exactly as made by the Government, was unthinkable?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator is correct in that view, why the fifth amendment? That was put in for the very purpose of preventing the Government from encroaching upon the rights of the citizen.

Mr. LOGAN. Let me say that that was at a later date; and the idea of the Government's being a gentleman did not hold out as long as it should. [Laughter.]

Mr. GORE and Mr. BARKLEY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. CONNALLY. Just a moment. Let me say to the junior Senator from Kentucky that if that doctrine were true—if Congress could not pass any law which, in its incidental effects, impaired a contract—the Federal power would be paralyzed. The power of the Government would be paralyzed.

Take the taxing power. Congress has the power to levy taxation. Chief Justice Marshall held, in the case of McCulloch against Maryland, that when that power was exercised it could be exercised, if need be, to the point of destroying any agency upon which it was levied.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him just on that point? Then I am done.

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to suggest to the Senator that Congress cannot pass a law impairing the obligation of a contract; but Congress has a right to assume that whenever a contract is made, the provision of the Constitution relating thereto becomes a part of the contract, and that it is entered into with the understanding that the contract may be modified by Congress. That is not a repudiation of a contract, if we view it in that light.

Mr. CONNALLY. It is an impairment, though.

Mr. LOGAN. No; it is not an impairment of a contract, because the constitutional provision is a part of the contract, and the contract therefore provides that Congress may change it. Consequently, it is not an impairment of the contract.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President—

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the senior Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. If I understand the force of this provision about the impairment of contracts, it does not attempt to prohibit a State from dealing with its own contracts in such a way as it may see proper; but, aside from that, if the Federal Government is to be literally construed as not having any power to pass a law impairing the obligation of a contract, it would be impossible, and always would have been impossible, for Congress to have passed a general bankruptcy law—

Mr. CONNALLY. To be sure.

Mr. BARKLEY. Which not only impairs but in many cases discharges absolutely without payment the obligation of a contract. So that we cannot place upon the Federal Government the same literal interpretation of the implication resulting from that prohibition against the States that might seem analogous.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Supreme Court has passed on this question. Let me read just a line or two from the Supreme Court.

In the Sinking Fund cases (99 U.S. 700, 718) it was said:

The United States is not included within the constitutional prohibition which prevents States from passing laws impairing the obligation of contracts (but equally with the States they are prohibited from depriving persons or corporations of property without due process of law).

Let me quote the case of Hepburn v. Griswold (8 Wall. 602, 623). This is the Legal Tender case, the one that held the Legal Tender Act unconstitutional. Here is what the Supreme Court under Chief Justice Chase, said:

Congress has express power to enact bankrupt laws, and we do not say that a law made in the execution of any other express power, which, incidentally only, impairs the obligation of a contract, can be held to be unconstitutional for that reason.

In Mitchell v. Clark (110 U.S. 633, 643) it was said:

It is no sound objection to an act of Congress that it interferes with the validity of contracts, for no provision of the Constitution prohibits Congress from doing this, as it does the States; and where the question of the power of Congress arises, as in the Legal Tender cases, and in bankruptcy cases, it does not depend upon the incidental effect of its exercise on contracts, but on the existence of the power itself.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Just a moment.

So, Mr. President, it all goes back to the proposition that if Congress is acting under an express power to do a certain thing, all incidental matters must fall before that power, including contracts between private individuals. So, in this case, when Congress exercises the express grant of power to regulate the value of money, and does regulate the value of money by revaluing the gold dollar, its action cannot be annulled by a man rushing frantically forward and saying, "Wait a minute! Congress has the power to revalue money; Congress has the power to regulate the value of money, but you cannot do that. Bill Jones has a mortgage over here at the bank, on a spotted yearling, for $40; and it is provided that it can be paid only in gold dollars of the present standard of weight and fineness."

Why, Mr. President, it is absurd, it is ridiculous to assume that private individuals, by making a contract, can oust the Federal Government from the exercise of its sovereign powers. The question as to whether Bill Jones will have to pay the $40 in gold money of the old or the new issue is not to be decided here. That is to be decided in the courts after the Congress acts.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield now?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President—

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator's argument is very clear and explicit; and the cases, of course, sustain absolutely the position he has announced. May I call his attention to the fact that those cases and all the others say that the law of the land, whether the Constitution or otherwise, is a part of the contract.

Mr. CONNALLY. To be sure.

Mr. BLACK. And when a contract is made to pay a certain amount of gold money, it is the same as though there were added to the agreement to pay, to the contract itself, this statement:

Provided, however, That this obligation can be discharged by paying the amount of gold fixed by Congress under its constitutional power.

Mr. CONNALLY. At the time of payment.

Mr. BLACK. Certainly.

Mr. CONNALLY. To be sure. The Senator is correct in the statement of that proposition.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield for a question.

Mr. GORE. I was wondering if this might have any bearing on the Senator's reasoning and conclusion:

Under the power to regulate the value of money the Senator insists that Congress can cut down the number of grains in a gold dollar.

Mr. CONNALLY. No; the Senator does not insist on that. The Senator admitted, early in the debate, that it was a serious constitutional question, and it was not a closed one. The Senator is simply pointing out what he thinks is the power of Congress. That is my contention, but I am not taking the position that it is at all a clear question. It is open to question. I do not know what the Supreme Court would decide.

Mr. GORE. The point was, as I understood the Senator—I may have misunderstood him—that Congress could, as an incident to its power to regulate the value of money, reduce the weight of the gold dollar—

Mr. CONNALLY. That is right.

Mr. GORE. So that a given amount of gold would buy twice as much; and he cited the instance of the yearling. I was wondering this: If Congress should destroy one half the yearlings in the United States, the price of the other yearlings would go up. Does the Senator think the Congress could do that by way of regulating the purchasing power of money? It would have the same effect. Would you hold that to be merely incidental to the power to regulate the value of money?

Mr. CONNALLY. No; the Senator from Texas was not discussing yearlings except incidentally. He was merely insisting that, if Congress decided to revalue the gold dollar, a fellow with a yearling contract could not butt the Government out of the way and say, "You cannot change it because I have a mortgage on a yearling, and it is payable in dollars of the present standard of weight and fineness."

Mr. GORE. Undoubtedly Congress, by giving the legal-tender power to gold, can give added value to a diminished number of grains in the dollar.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is true.

Mr. GORE. But it could bring about the same effect, the same reaction on the purchasing power of money, by destroying the property of the country, except by such destruction of property it would decrease rather than increase the purchasing power of gold.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will answer the Senator if he desires me to do so.

The Senator from Texas is not trying to destroy any property. What is property? Property is houses, farms, food, the products of our fields. That is wealth. That is property. Gold is just a commodity, except for the use of gold by the Government as money. Gold has no more value than any other useful article in trade or commerce; but governments, by using gold as money, have created a demand for it which artificially has raised its value beyond what it would have as a commodity.

The trouble with gold today is that by the action of Great Britain in putting India on the gold standard, and other governmental action, gold has gone up to a ratio or to a value higher than is fair and just to other commodities. We have just as much other wealth as before, but when we convert that wealth into money—and that is the only way we can do business—it does not get the value that it formerly did; and therefore, instead of undertaking to regulate all commodities, one at a time, the Senator from Texas is trying to regulate the value of money, and thereby regulate the value of everything that is measured in money.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President—

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, all of this is complicated legally and financially and economically, so that nobody can say that he has mastered it, or that he has the last word on the subject. Just thinking out loud for a moment about it, however, it occurs to me that if it be contended that Congress never can change by regulation, as the expression is used in the Constitution, the weight and fineness and content of a gold dollar because there may be outstanding contracts which might by implication be violated or impaired, then there never could be a time in the history of the Nation when Congress could deal with that subject, because contracts that were entered into immediately after the present standard of weight and fineness was established a hundred years ago, if they still were in existence, or any new contracts made since that time, or that might hereafter be made, that were still unperformed, would operate to prevent Congress from ever exercising the power given it by the Constitution, even in a thousand years.

Mr. CONWAY. The Senator is correct. The Legal Tender cases held that a contract entered into before the law was enacted, for the payment of a dollar, could be discharged by the payment of a paper dollar worth 35 cents. Nobody disputes that that is the decision of the Supreme Court. Yet Senators say that while that could be done, it would be unconstitutional to pay that contract in a 90-cent gold dollar. It is all right and constitutional to clip off 65 cents worth of a dollar with a paper dollar, but if Congress undertook to reduce the gold content by 10 percent, a man who had a contract calling for the full amount could not be paid by giving him 90 percent of its value.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I just want to ask the Senator his opinion on this matter. We have $44,000,000,000 of outstanding Government obligations payable in gold of the present standard of weight and fineness. We have only $4,000,000,000 worth of gold, in round figures, with which to pay them. Could it be said that the $44,000,000,000 worth of bonds being payable in gold, the law would require the absurdity that we had to pay them with $4,000,000,000 of gold?

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator points out, of course, a physical impossibility. If all the holders of bonds payable in gold should demand payment at once, they could not be paid, but experience has taught us that they do not all do that at the same time.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, what is to prevent the Government's buying back the gold in the market from the first comers in order to pay the second comers?

Mr. CONNALLY. We would have to issue some more bonds, of course.

Mr. LONG. Suppose the first comers did not want the bonds?

Mr. CONNALLY. After all, it is not the actual gold, it is the gold as a measure of value, and that is where the power of Congress comes in, in that Congress has the power to determine the measure of value.

Now, Mr. President, I want to conclude.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me a moment?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. I should like to call the attention of the able Senator from Texas to the fact that it was by an act of Parliament, in the time of Sir Robert Peel, who tendered the act which became afterward known and is now recognized as the Peel Act, under which there were prescribed the number of grains of gold that should constitute a pound, and the value of the pound, as such, was then created by act of Parliament.

Thereafter the United States, in prescribing the matter of the gold dollar, merely copied the system prevailing in England, and gave to so much gold, making a dollar, a value by the declaration of the act of Congress. Therefore, if the declaration of an act of Congress could give value to the American gold dollar, as the declaration of the act of Parliament, at the time of Sir Robert Peel, gave the value to the pound, what is the basis for the doctrine that the same authority which by law created value cannot likewise qualify that value by lifting a lesser quantity to the same value?

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator. The Senator has stated the proposition much more clearly than the Senator from Texas possibly could have stated it.

It is a sovereign grant of power to fix the value of the dollar, and therefore regulate it, which means, of course, whenever Congress sees fit to do so, to change the value by reducing the number of grains, or by increasing the number of grains.

Mr. President, just a word to those Senators who insist on the sanctity of a contract, no matter what the object of the contract may be. This is what the Supreme Court said:

Nor can it be truly asserted that Congress may not by its action indirectly impair the obligation of contracts, if by the expression he meant rendering contracts fruitless or partially fruitless. Directly it may, confessedly, by passing a bankrupt act, embracing past as well as future transactions. This is obliterating contracts entirely. So it may relieve parties from their apparent obligations indirectly in a multitude of ways. It may declare war.

O Mr. President, it may declare war, and when it declares war it may draft human lives and may send them out onto the battlefield, because incidental to the power to declare war is the power to make war, and incidental to the power to make war is the power to draft soldiers. But Senators contend that while it may take your body or mine and send it to the battlefield under a direct grant to make war, it cannot cut 5 cents off a gold dollar, because somebody has a contract requiring payment in so many grains. Yet the rule is identically the same.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. In just a moment. In the one case Congress is acting under its direct power to make war, in the other case it is acting under its direct power to coin money and to regulate the value thereof. When it acts in either capacity, all values in the way must give way.

I yield first to the Senator from Nebraska, as he asked me to yield first.

Mr. NORRIS. I was going to ask the Senator, assuming the proposition now to be that, instead of decreasing the amount of gold in the dollar, it was a proposal to increase it. What would these people then claim under their contracts providing for payment in gold of the present standard of weight and fineness?

Mr. CONNALLY. Most of them, when the contracts became due, would demand payment in the lawful money at the time of payment. Of course, the power to make connotes the power to increase as well as to decrease.

Now, just one other statement, and then I will yield to the Senator from Oklahoma. I quote further from the Supreme Court:

It may declare war, or, even in peace, pass nonintercourse acts, or direct an embargo. All such measures may, and must operate seriously upon existing contracts, and may not merely hinder but relieve the parties to such contracts entirely from performance. It is, then, clear that the powers of Congress may be exerted, though the effect of such exertion may be in one case to annul and in other cases to impair the obligation of contracts.

Is there anything clearer in the English language than that statement? Congress, exercising the power which it has a right to exercise, may incidentally annul contracts and impair them. They must give way.

I wonder where the Senator from Pennsylvania has gone?

Mr. REED. I came over here on the Democratic side, in order to be closer to the Senator.

Mr. CONNALLY. I want to quote the Supreme Court further. I saw the words "a new tariff" in the Supreme Court decision, and I wanted to quote that decision. The Supreme Court stated:

A new tariff, an embargo, a draft, or a war may inevitably bring upon individuals great losses; may, indeed, render valuable property almost valueless. They may destroy the worth of contracts. But whoever supposed that, because of this, a tariff could not be changed, or a nonintercourse act, or an embargo be enacted, or a war be declared?

Mr. President, there is the constitutional authority, as clear as the sunlight, that when Congress acts under express power, contracts of individuals must go down before it. The Senator will grant our right to enact a tariff law, because ever since the depreciated currencies of Europe have been in force, the Senator from Pennsylvania has been insisting that we ought to enact another tariff law, to build the tariff up higher and higher and yet higher. He is willing to increase the values of people who manufacture goods in the United States by a tariff law, and make people pay more for them. He is willing to cheapen the dollar in that respect, but he is not willing to cheapen it in a clear exercise of constitutional congressional power.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. REED. The very bill which is the pending business in the Senate provides for a practical doubling of the tariffs on all foodstuffs, yet the Senator from Texas is going to vote for it, and I am going to vote against it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Very well. Does the Senator deny that we have the power to do that?

Mr. REED. Not at all.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator does not deny the power of Congress to increase the tariff. Suppose I have a contract with some man in Europe providing for the delivery of certain goods in the United States at a certain time, and before those goods have been introduced into this country the tariff is raised, and there is nothing in the contract providing for that. What happens? Is not that contract impaired? Is not that contract affected by the action of the Government in passing a tariff law? But would anybody say that on that account the tariff law was unconstitutional? Would anybody say that two individuals, by entering into a contract, could prevent the enactment of a tariff law? Does not every tariff law that is passed affect the contracts of importers and exporters, affect the people here at home who have contracts for the output of their factories, when their costs of production are changed or varied? Does that not incidentally affect all such contracts? But the acts are not thereby declared unconstitutional.

I want to quote now from one other case, the case of Nortz v. Miller (285 Fed.), in which the court said:

"Congress can, and often has, without impinging upon any constitutional guaranty, impaired the obligation of contracts which, when made, were binding upon the parties thereto." The prohibition of laws impairing the obligation of contracts is expressly directed at State action and does not apply to Congress, which may pass laws directly, or indirectly, impairing the obligation of contracts.

Mr. President, at this point I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a copy of the English decision to which I adverted earlier in my remarks, holding that a gold contract providing for payment in gold pounds of a certain weight and fineness may be discharged by the payment of British paper pounds, lawful money at the time of the payment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Law Times (London), vol. 175, no. 4696, Saturday, Apr. 1, 1933, p. 251]

COURT OF APPEAL

RE SOCIETE INTERCOMMUNALE BELGE D'ELECTRICITE

FEIST V. THE COMPANY

(Lord Hanworth, M.R., Lawrence and Romer, L.J.J., Feb. 15, 16, and Mar. 17)

Foreign bond—Construction—Contended that terms of bond were to pay 100 pounds in gold coin or sterling value of gold coin on a particular date—Whether such terms enforceable—Whether promise to pay 100 pounds or some unascertained sum—100 pounds payable in any form which was legal tender

Adjourned summons. The plaintiff, who was the holder of a 5½-percent gold bond for 100 pounds, part of an issue of 500,000 pounds in 100-pound bonds, made by a Belgian company on the 25th of September, 1928, asked for a declaration that on the true construction of the provisions of the bond the principal and interest when due either were repayable in gold coin of the United Kingdom of or equal to the standard of weight and fineness existing on the 1st of September 1928, or in the alternative the defendant company when the principal and interest became repayable were bound to pay in sterling such sum as would be sufficient to buy in the market on the day of payment gold coin of the United Kingdom which would be of the same fineness and weight as would be sufficient to discharge the company's liability if the payment fell due on 1st of September 1928. The provisions of the bond were, inter alia, that the principal and interest when due were repayable in sterling in gold coin of the United Kingdom of or equal to the standard of weight and fineness existing on 1st of September 1928, but it was contended by the defendants that, as 100 pounds with interest was repayable, the obligation was satisfied by the tender of the 100 pounds and interest in whatever happened to be the form of legal tender when such 100 pounds and interest became due. A condition of the bond was that it was to be construed according to the law of England, and the parties submitted to the jurisdiction of the English courts; and the other material condition was that the bonds should constitute the direct and unconditional liability of the company in sterling in gold coin of the United Kingdom. Held by Farwell, J. (174 L.T. Jour. 367), that the bond was for the repayment of 100 pounds with interest and not for the repayment of some unascertained sum. As regarded the contention that the 100 pounds with interest was payable in gold currency, no doubt that appeared on the literal construction of the document to be true; nevertheless, the plaintiff could not insist on the obligation being fulfilled in that way, and the defendants were entitled to satisfy the obligation by tendering 100 pounds with interest in any form which happened to be legal tender in England at the time when the money became payable, and there would be a declaration to that effect. The plaintiff appealed.

Held, dismissing the appeal, that the words "in sterling" denoted the standard currency of this country, for the contract was to be interpreted according to English law. The law of England had withdrawn gold from circulation, and in 1928 the issue of notes was given again to the Bank of England in denominations of £1 and 10s., and those were made legal tender. Under the express terms of the material statutes the plaintiff was legally bound to accept bank notes in payment of the moneys secured by the bond. The company had agreed to pay the debt and interest in gold coin, but the legislature had said that it might lawfully be discharged by tendering bank notes.

Simonds, K.C., and H. S. Buckmaster. Solicitors: For the appellant, Allen and Overy; for the respondent company, Stephenson, Harwood, and Tatham.)

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the Senator from Oklahoma desire to ask me a question?

Mr. GORE. Yes. I agree with the Senator that Congress may pass an act which incidentally impairs the obligation of contracts. Congress may directly impair the obligation of contracts under the bankruptcy powers. I have never felt, in view of the fifth amendment, that Congress could make a frontal attack or a direct attack on a contract, otherwise than through the bankruptcy powers.

The Senator used an apt illustration and he came to the direct point that the Government could, under the war power, take a human being and send him to war, perhaps send him to his death. That is true. Does the Senator think that, under the war power, Congress can confiscate property?

Mr. CONNALLY. No; because of an express prohibition. If there were an express prohibition in the Constitution that Congress could not impair the obligation of a contract, there might be some comparison between the Senator's position and mine.

Mr. GORE. I am sorry to hear the Senator say that. The Senator from Idaho asked a few minutes ago why the fifth amendment was inserted in the Constitution at all. There was an historic contest on that proposition.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon me? I want to conclude. I yield for a question, but not for extended remarks.

Mr. GORE. Very well. I will put it in the form of a question.

A State government possesses all legislative powers which are not denied to it either by its own constitution or by the Federal Constitution. Congress has no legislative power except such as is vested in it by the Constitution of the United States, either expressly or by implication. That is true, is it not?

The challenge that there is no clause in the Constitution which prohibits Congress from impairing the obligation of contracts leads us nowhere. Congress has only such powers as are granted it, either expressly or by implication.

I was going to mention the controversy as to implied powers between Hamilton on the one side and Jefferson and Madison on the other, Jefferson and Madison insisting on the first 10 amendments as a bill of rights to protect the citizen against the arbitrary exercise of power. Hamilton insisted that a bill of rights was unnecessary. I ask the Senator, as I was unfortunately absent when he began, did the Senator comment on the decision by the World Court rendered July 12, 1929, holding that the gold clause in international contracts was valid and had to be observed?

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator did not.

Mr. GORE. I hold the decision in my hand, holding that Brazil and Yugoslavia were bound to make payment in gold or its equivalent.

Mr. CONNALLY. With all due respect to the Senator, I yielded only for a question. I want to conclude. I do not care to have published in the middle of my remarks this decision of the World Court, if the Senator will please excuse me.

Why, of course; but, Mr. President, answering the statement of the Senator from Oklahoma, in which he said that Congress had no power except that which is expressly delegated to it, I will say there is no conflict between that position and the one which the Senator from Texas occupies when he says that Congress has been expressly granted the power to regulate the value of money; and when it regulates the value of money if in doing so some man's contract is affected, under the holdings of the Supreme Court, such contracts must give way, because it is the action of a sovereign government under an express power.

Mr. President, I want to conclude. I beg the Senate's pardon for consuming so much of its time.

Mr. President, I started out to endeavor to demonstrate that the Senator from Pennsylvania and others were in error when they undertook to hold up this amendment as providing for wholesale inflation. I ventured to suggest that the first section provided for only $3,000,000,000 expansion, when, under the present gold reserve, we might expand $4,000,000,000 and still have a sufficient Federal gold reserve. However, Mr. President, referring to what the Senator from Oklahoma said a minute ago about a decision of the World Court on the gold standard—I have not read the decision—I drew from what the Senator said that the World Court, and international authorities, regard gold and gold settlements as the heart of international finance; and that is true.

We are about to enter an economic conference; the President already is discussing with statesmen of Europe the settlement of currency questions, arrangements with reference to war debts, perhaps, foreign trade, tariffs, and commerce. May I say to Senators that money and currency are the heart of all these other questions. The pending amendment is a grant of power to the President in order to arm him so that when he enters that conference, if it shall be desirable to have Europe return to a gold standard—and the Senator from Pennsylvania admits that it is desirable to have that result accomplished—the President of the United States may have the power to enter into agreements with foreign nations whereby, if they return to the gold standard on a lower ratio of gold for their currencies, the United States may revalue its own gold dollar in a measure somewhat comparable to the standards of foreign nations. So far as the consequences that might follow are concerned, we can take care of them here at home. Let me say to the Senator from Virginia that Government obligations can still be paid in full when the Congress comes to settle the results after the revaluation of the gold dollar. A man who has a contract requiring the payment of gold in grains of standard weight and fineness is not deprived of any right which he may have, for he still has the forum of the courts; he may go into the courts, and, if his contract is still valid, he may have that contract enforced.

Mr. President, simply because we have not revalued the gold dollar in the immediate past is no reason, when we are now confronted with the wisdom and the desirability of reducing the value of the gold dollar, why Congress should be so timid and so afraid as not to do that which is required by the public interest.

Mr. President, we have been in the grip of this depression for nearly 4 years. Instead of conditions improving, they have been growing more bitter and more distressing from day to day. In this tragic era, to whom are the people of the United States to look for redemption? Are we going to look to European nations that by the reduction of their own currencies have won our trade, that by the instability of their currencies are disturbing our transactions? Mr. President, the people of the United States are looking to Congress and are looking to the President to take those steps which will be in the national interest, and I believe—

Mr. GORE rose.

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma for a question.

Mr. GORE. I think the Senator's answer to my question was correct when he said that Congress could not confiscate property even in time of war. His answer was in effect to cite an express prohibition that no person shall be deprived of property without due process of law. I do not think the courts have passed directly on the point I am about to mention, and, for that reason, I propound it to the Senator: Suppose that I had bought from the Senator a number of yearlings, to which he referred awhile ago, and had given him my note for $1,000—I have considered contracts as property—does the Senator think that Congress could pass a law providing that that $1,000 contract could be paid off with $500?

Mr. CONNALLY. No. The Senator from Texas thinks that the contract calling for the payment of $1,000 can be paid in $1,000 of a value fixed by Congress between the date of the making of the contract and the time of its payment. That is what the Senator from Texas says.

Mr. GORE. The Congress cannot directly provide that a $1,000 contract may be liquidated with $500, but it may do so by cutting the amount of gold in two. I think the Senator is right where the contract does not stipulate that the payment shall be made in gold of the present weight and fineness; there is no doubt about that, but I doubt the power where the contract calls for payment in gold coin of standard weight and fineness. That is the point of law which I raise and which I believe the Court has settled.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator confuses bullion contracts—and that is what the English decision held—with dollar contracts. If I make a contract for the payment of so many dollars, payment can be discharged with so many dollars, while if I make a contract for so many grains of gold, it can only be discharged by the payment of so many grains of gold. A contract, however, cannot be both a bullion contract and a dollar contract; it must be one or the other.

Mr. GORE. The Supreme Court, in the case of Bronson against Rhodes, I believe, did say that.

Mr. CONNALLY. If the Senator had been here, I quoted from the Bronson case in the opening of my remarks. I am not trying to delude the Senate.

Mr. GORE. I assume that in the second set of Legal Tender cases, the case of Lee against Knox and in the case of Parker against Davis, in Twelfth Wallace—

Mr. CONNALLY. I have read both of them to the Senate.

Mr. GORE. Did the Senator read to the Senate another case decided at the same session of the Supreme Court in which Mr. Justice Bradley, who had concurred in the opinion in the Legal Tender cases, dissented because, he said, the argument in the case of Treblecox against Wilson was contrary to the doctrine which he had laid down in the Legal Tender cases bearing upon this very point at the same term of the court. The case of Treblecox against Wilson involved a contract payable in gold of standard weight and fineness. The court sustained the contract in spite of the then recent legal-tender decisions.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the Senator that I did not read that particular decision, but I read to the Senate every pertinent decision in the Legal Tender cases. I did not read the dissenting opinions. If the Senator had been here honoring me with his presence, I should not now have to repeat what I have said to the Senate, much to my own embarrassment and much to the annoyance and weariness of the Senate.

Now, Mr. President, in conclusion let me say that of course the pending amendment contains a tremendous grant of power to the President. I am not going to discuss the constitutional aspects of that question, but, Mr. President, the task before the President is a gigantic one. He must have tremendous power to meet the responsibilities which rest upon him; and after these agreements shall have been made, let Senators be not afraid. Congress will still be here in Washington; the Constitution will still remain in force; the courts will still be sitting, and Senators need have no fear that any substantial right or privilege of any American citizen guaranteed by the Constitution will be deprived him.

Mr. President, this is an effort of the Congress and of the President to do something toward recovery. For 4 years we have followed the leadership of the Senator from Pennsylvania and his colleagues under the last administration. We followed many will-o'-the-wisps, and we became lost in the bogs and swamps. Now that the administration has changed, now that we have a leader who has vision and courage and a program, a leader in whom the people of the United States have confidence, let not the Congress stand in the way; let us arm the President with sufficient power to go to the economic conference and bring back some tangible result and offer to the people of the United States a highway out of the morasses of panic and suffering and depression with which they are now surrounded.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I am through.

Mr. DILL. I want to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. CONNALLY. Very well, I yield.

Mr. DILL. Does not the Senator think it would be wise to bestow the power also to increase the gold content of the dollar, as well as to decrease it?

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Texas would say "yes" if this were to be a continuing power, but in the present attitude of the world, the Senator from Texas cannot conceive why there should be any increase in the gold content of the dollar.

Mr. DILL. Of course, if we decrease it, we make gold more valuable; we double the value of gold?

Mr. CONNALLY. We double it by statute, but we leave the value of gold as a commodity where it is now. It will be the same at the mint. At the mint it will be worth more in dollars, but it will not affect any other currency; it will not affect any commodity; it will merely buy more dollars; that is all.

Mr. DILL. It seems to me the trouble today is that gold is too high, and if we decrease gold we make it even higher.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me say that the Senator confuses gold with the gold dollar. The gold dollar is high, but whether the gold dollar has 23 grains or 16 grains does not change the amount of gold in the world. As a commodity, robbed of its status as a dollar, it will remain just the same; it will be worth just as much in British pounds and French francs and German marks. We will take 23 grains of gold and we will make a dollar and a half, we will say, but the gold itself will have the same intrinsic value; it will merely buy more dollars because dollars are merely a fiction; a dollar is a symbol; it is simply a certain amount of money which the Government says is a dollar.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. DILL. What is now the value of gold per ounce?

Mr. CONNALLY. It is worth $20.67.

Mr. DILL. What will it be worth if we double it or increase it by 50 percent?

Mr. CONNALLY. In dollars it will be worth 50 percent more.

Mr. DILL. It will be worth twice as much more. If one had a $20 gold piece he could then get two $20 gold pieces.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thought the Senator said if we increased it—

Mr. DILL. No; if we decreased it.

Mr. CONNALLY. If we decreased it 50 percent, of course, the gold would be worth two $10 gold pieces instead of one $10 gold piece.

Mr. DILL. Yes; we would have doubled the value in dollars.

Mr. CONNALLY. We would have doubled the number of dollars, but we would not have changed the intrinsic value of gold.

Mr. DILL. And when the world is suffering from the high price of gold the Senator wants to make it higher.

Mr. CONNALLY. What does the Senator want to do about silver?

Mr. DILL. I want to increase its price so as to bring it more nearly to the value of gold.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator wants to increase the price of silver. When we cut the gold dollar in two we will raise the price of silver just twice.

Mr. DILL. It will take twice as much silver to buy it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Oh, no. Here is a 50-cent piece. We will assume it is a gold dollar; we cut that gold dollar in half, and make each half a gold dollar. Is there any more gold when we get through than when we started? The amount of gold is the same; we merely have 2 dollars. When we cut the dollar in two we have made a dollar worth 50 cents in gold, whereas formerly it was worth a dollar in gold.

I yield the floor, Mr. President.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States, submitting several nominations, were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H.R. 5012) to amend existing law in order to obviate the payment of 1 year's sea pay to surplus graduates of the Naval Academy was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

RELIEF OF AGRICULTURE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 3835) to relieve the existing national economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power.

Mr. VANDENBERG obtained the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I do not desire now to take the time of the Senate, and I shall not attempt to discuss the amendment which I now propose to offer, except to say that untold thousands of veterans of various wars of the country and their dependents find themselves at this moment in dire need and distress.

The perfectly indefensible legislation that was enacted at the request of the President, known as the "economy bill", will, of course, ultimately have to be repealed and the great wrong done the thousands of veterans and their families must be righted. Otherwise the Nation will continue to be on the downgrade. It never can be on the upgrade until that wrong is righted. A nation that deals ungenerously and unfairly with its defenders can never succeed, and so that wrong must be righted. But in the meantime we must look after the economic needs of the people who have been wronged.

Therefore I am offering an amendment, now that we are about to have plenty of money, providing for the immediate payment of the adjusted-service certificates, commonly called the bonus, to be paid under subsection (b) (1) of section 34, providing that the President may direct the issuance of $3,000,000,000 in Treasury notes, but not increasing that authorization. I shall discuss the amendment at length at the proper time. Meanwhile I send it to the desk and ask that it be printed and lie on the table.

I am very grateful to the Senator from Michigan for yielding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Indiana will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, in respect to the pending problem which is generally described as the philosophy of inflation, my own view at the moment runs to neither of the extremes which have been submitted thus far in the debate.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator to yield so that a quorum may be called?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator for his courtesy. I am quite happy to proceed for the RECORD. However, I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. JOHNSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California suggests the absence of a quorum. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Carey	Hale	McNary
Ashurst	Clark	Harrison	Metcalf
Austin	Connally	Hastings	Murphy
Bachman	Coolidge	Hatfield	Neely
Bailey	Copeland	Hayden	Norbeck
Bankhead	Costigan	Hebert	Norris
Barbour	Couzens	Johnson	Nye
Barkley	Cutting	Kean	Overton
Black	Dickinson	Kendrick	Patterson
Bone	Dill	Keyes	Pittman
Borah	Duffy	King	Pope
Bratton	Erickson	La Follette	Reed
Brown	Fess	Lewis	Reynolds
Bulkley	Fletcher	Logan	Robinson, Ark.
Bulow	Frazier	Loneragan	Robinson, Ind.
Byrd	George	Long	Russell
Byrnes	Glass	McAdoo	Sheppard
Capper	Goldsborough	McCarran	Shipstead
Caraway	Gore	McGill	Smith

Steiwer	Townsend	Van Nuys	Wheeler
Stephens	Trammell	Wagner	White
Thomas, Okla.	Tydings	Walcott
Thomas, Utah	Vandenberg	Walsh

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ninety-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The Senator from Michigan has the floor.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, my view of the existing problem now confronting the Senate in respect to the proposed inflation program runs to neither of the two extremes that have been submitted. Upon the one hand, I decline to reject the entire potential inflation program. This is no hour for static attitudes. On the other hand, I decline to embrace that section of the program which involves an unconscionable surrender of congressional power to an executive dictator and a needless threat against the precise stabilities which the inflation program contemplates.

I concede, Mr. President, the existence of an emergency. I am not at all sure that it is not just as much of an emergency as 1862 which produced the Monetary Act of 1862 and which we are in a degree about to paraphrase. I concede the existence of a disparity in respect to the relationship between debtor and creditor which cannot be left any longer exclusively to the natural law. I concede that except as there may be successful legislative contribution to this economic situation promptly, it is entirely possible that we confront not only bankrupt individuals by the millions, not only bankrupt corporations by the millions, not only bankrupt municipalities, but bankrupt States. Today's relentless deflation of citizens and commerce and banks and communities must stop. We are at the zero hour.

In the face of a situation of that character I decline to entrench myself against all experiment and adventure. The things that we have attempted thus far have not succeeded. New efforts must persist until success is found. There is a new administration in Washington which has a clear mandate to make its own attempts to proceed by a different course. I propose so far as it is humanly possible and except as my conscience rejects certain elements, to permit the new physicians to write their own prescriptions.

I shall submit to the Senate, Mr. President, the view that we are justified in permitting this potential inflation program to proceed down to that point in the amendment where it is proposed to permit the President of the United States, if, as, and when he pleases, responding to his own individual wish or whim or his own personal judgment and always upon his own unsupported initiative, to rule or ruin the value and the volume of the gold dollar and therefore the monetary system of the United States. Indeed it is amazingly proposed even to let him launch us upon the free and unlimited coinage of silver at any ratio which suits his fancy.

I shall submit that we are justified in approving the pending amendment provided this despotic and wholly dangerous section is deleted.

I shall submit, Mr. President, that this section is indefensible as a delegation of power which is entirely too close an analogy and too suggestive of what has happened to dead democracies all around the globe during the past decade of rising tyrannies and languishing liberties.

I shall submit that it is a needless crime because the balance of the potential inflationary program, in the purview of the best authorities I can find in this country, is sufficient to achieve our ends.

I shall submit that this vital power, the so-called "gold section" of the bill, is not only unnecessary, not only unconscionable, not only probably unconstitutional, but that it also serves to defeat the very purpose of the balance of the bill, first because it creates a status of perpetual uncertainty in respect to the standards of value upon which American business shall be done and, secondly, because it casts a shadow upon the faith and credit of the United States in respect to its monetary contracts, and casts that shadow at the precise moment when under the other so-called "greenback section" of the bill we are going to ask the American people to trust the faith and credit of the United States, backed by nothing else, as they have not trusted it since 1862.)

From my point of view, this one section of the bill dealing with the Presidential authority and the gold and free-silver sections of the law is wholly at war with the balance of the pending inflationary proposal, wholly at war with the spirit and the genius of American institutions, wholly at war with our responsibilities, and wholly at war with the best welfare of the American people.

Mr. President, so far as the other powers for inflation are concerned that are involved in this bill, there is often a chance for formidable argument against them. But there is better reason for argument in their favor. It seems to me that the position is defensible in respect to every section of the proposal except the one which I shall undertake to identify as objectionable.

I think there is universal agreement that the recent embargo upon American gold and the decision to permit the American dollar to take its own course in international exchange, was a wholesome, helpful, useful, worth-while thing; and I think there is universal agreement that the President acted with great wisdom in that decision. I unequivocally support him in it. It renews our first opportunity in many months at fair competition for the world's trade.

It seems to me that the specific provisions for inflation in the pending amendment, one by one, can be similarly defended as useful and potential contributions to the existing situation. Certainly the price trend of commodities can be stimulated by legislation affecting the currency, although it is well known, from my view, believing as I do in the velocity theory rather than in the volume theory of currency, that we are neglecting to serve the primary impulse when we deal first with physical currency instead of with bank-credit currency. In other words, our problem is not so much to create currency as it is to put currency to work. That means a normal banking function.

I shall not expand that argument this afternoon. I spoke upon it in the Senate again last week. It is my feeling that bank-credit currency is 15 times as important as physical currency, because 15 times as much business is done with bank credit in the form of checks and the like as with physical money. So far as an economic resurrection for America is concerned, we would do far better to start our program with a liberalized Federal Reserve policy in respect to banking, and with emergency money to release frozen bank deposits to the depositors, and with a Federal warrant behind bank deposits, so as to create that confidence out of which renewed commercial activity and commercial credit and bank-credit currency must flow. Like Cato speaking everlastingly of Carthage, I say again that bank-deposit insurance, by Federal warrant, will do more for America than any other single aid. In passing I quote a recent observation by Thomas Nixon Carter, professor of political economy at Harvard University:

Credit will not expand again until confidence is restored. Confidence will not return until people believe that their money is safe when in a bank or when invested. They will not have confidence in banks until the Government guarantees bank deposits. That is a drastic measure, but nothing short of that will do.

Again, Professor Carter says:

If the Government would do these two obviously right things—namely, guarantee bank deposits and subsidize gold production—it would not be necessary to do the many futile things they are now trying to do. The depression will end when we have a banking system in which depositors cannot lose their savings and when there is gold enough on the market to make it cheaper and the prices of other things higher in terms of gold.

I associate myself with that opinion. But the administration in its wisdom has concluded, for the present, to launch experiments in physical currency instead of bank-credit currency; and I repeat my willingness to go along with rational inflation for whatever it may be worth.

I concede—who can deny it?—that there will be utility in legislation in respect to the commodity-price index, and thus in respect to breaking this vicious deflation circle that has us in its paralyzing grip. But make no mistake. There are victims of inflation even as of deflation. Rising prices will not be offset by rising wages. Fixed incomes will all suffer in their buying power. Increased cost of living is not an unmixed benediction. Even controlled inflation has its jeopardies. Still, we must break the vicious circle. The "new deal" would try this weapon. So be it.

When we come to this amendment I do not see how anybody can complain against the first permission included in subsection (a) respecting a total of $3,000,000,000 in open-market operations, and in the direct purchase by the Federal Reserve Board of obligations of the United States Government—yes; including even a suspension of the penalties against a reduction of the 40-percent gold cover. I agree to that. I am happy to go along with it.

If this particular proposition fails to produce the desired results, I shall not seriously quarrel with the subsequent provision permitting the issuance of United States notes to a total not exceeding $3,000,000,000 for the purpose of purchasing and retiring an equivalent amount of United States bonds. This is an emergency. It is an emergency in the precise analogy of 1862, when the original so-called "Greenback Act" was passed. It is not the type of thing I would voluntarily embrace—by no manner of means; nor would I embrace it without the most utterly solemn warning that that which is controlled inflation in the first instance may easily become uncontrolled inflation day after tomorrow, and that the precise door which is opened in this precise section may well be the door that opens upon subsequent uncontrolled inflation unless there is a sterner caliber of decision and judgment here than there has usually been in any other nation or any other parliament that ever tried it. But I submit that it is something of a paradox to entrench our fears against so-called "greenbacks" when we contemplate a variety of far less valuable scrip in circulation locally in many sections of the country.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. Does the Senator see any particular merit in limiting that section to $3,000,000,000?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Well, yes, Mr. President; I see this merit: It is the merit of sending the whole problem of inflation back to the Congress for a renewed expression of its judgment if the permitted volume is insufficient. I want renewed judgment exercised in respect to this section of the law, because I repeat that there could be nothing more menacing than the initiation of uncontrolled inflation. The more checks and balances the better. We want all the advantages which we can get from controlled inflation. We want to arm ourselves against the disadvantages. I look for real advantages and real hope and real aid so long as inflation is controlled. I look for disaster if the control falters or fails. My warning to the administration is an integral part of my approval of this section of the bill.

Rash friends of reckless inflation may brush aside the experience of the German Republic and say that it has no place in this debate, because no such tragedy is contemplated by us as we embark upon this adventure. But, Mr. President, I am sure there was nobody sitting in the German Parliament who ever contemplated when they first launched printing-press money that within 4 or 5 years they would have printed 418 quintillion marks—and that is 418 with 18 ciphers after it—and that nobody over there contemplated that the ultimate stabilization would have to be upon the amazing and devastating basis of one trillion to one.

There always is menace so long as you have started down the road to inflation under this type and character of inflation. But we must choose today between relative evils, and there is no evil comparable with a continuation of existing grief and woe and disintegration. The best protection in the world that we can have, if we embrace this recourse, is to understand baldly, as we start upon it, precisely what the responsibilities are, precisely how and why there has to be stern repression, or that which is controlled today will be uncontrolled tomorrow. Today's tonic will be tomorrow's poison.

I remember listening a year ago to a Member of Congress testifying before the Commerce Committee in respect to some great river project. After he had outlined this magnificent undertaking I said to him:

"How do you propose to pay for it?"

He said, "Why, we will print the money."

"Do you mean just print it?"

"Yes; just print it."

"Well, after you have started the presses, why do you stop with just half a billion dollars for this project?"

"Oh", he said, "I would not."

"Well, how much more would you print?"

"Oh, I would print two and a half billion more to pay the bonus."

"Well, would you stop there?"

"No; I would print five billion more for public building projects."

"Well, would you stop there?"

"No; I would print a couple of billion more to pay the current Federal deficit."

"Well, would you stop there?"

"Well", he said, "I will tell you, I am not much of an economist and I do not know where it would be wise to stop." [Laughter.]

There is an illustration of the menace. That is the way controlled inflation easily runs on into the danger zone. I voted a few days ago for the so-called "Frazier bill", as a philosophy of action, because it not only offered mortgage relief to the hard-pressed farmer but also, and particularly, because it proposed to tie inflated money to the land. The land may fluctuate in value, but it does not disappear. I prefer currency tied to things instead of to human fallibilities. But if we recognize the danger in the course we are invited here to take, we may avoid it. At any rate no danger could exceed that of a failure to arrest the contemporary economic degeneration in the United States.

Mr. President, I did not quote the Commerce Committee episode in any invidious aspect at all. It was a perfectly frank and honest expression of a perfectly frank and honest viewpoint. That is the danger of these viewpoints. They are frank and they are honest; and too frequently, when once controlled inflation has been undertaken, these viewpoints are willing to proceed step by step on into uncontrolled inflation. Except as that warning were laid upon the bar of the Senate and laid upon the conscience of the country, it would be utterly dangerous to proceed under the section to which I advert. But I say again that if controlled inflation is the process by which this new administration, unequivocally commanded to this job last November, proposes to try to save the situation, I propose to permit them, so far as I conscientiously can, to proceed under the prescription which they desire; and I concede that there is large advantage in the thing that is proposed, provided we can have the assurance that we do not overshoot the mark. In other words, it is not merely the length of the step which challenges our attention; it is particularly the direction of it which must call us to account.

So, I say, I am willing to proceed under these sections of this proposed inflation program. I am perfectly willing to agree to that additional section of the program which contemplates the acceptance of certain amounts of silver on account of foreign war-debt installments. Anything obtained upon that account is worth while; and there should be no serious problem regarding silver coinage, and silver certificates based thereon, as a further element of controlled inflation. Certainly I agree to any program which encourages the international stabilization of gold or silver, or both.

I am perfectly confident that the international stabilization of silver would be of incalculable advantage to the export trade of the United States. I was told in China 2 years ago, by a man of dependable judgment, that the pacification of China and the international stabilization of silver would represent $2,000,000,000 a year of new export trade to the United States alone. That is 50 percent of all our export trade today. I am eager to encourage the approaching World Economic Conference in respect to this international stabilization of gold and of silver, or of one or of both. Anything that we can do by way of encouragement I am prepared, so far as I am concerned, to undertake to do. In the final analysis, if all of these things have failed and there is no other recourse left, I shall have no horror in approaching the question of revaluing the gold dollar in the United States for the purpose of overcoming this insufferable disparity between debtor and creditor, so long as we confront it upon our own responsibility as legislators under the Constitution.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. DICKINSON. Right there the question of whether or not we can have an international agreement is a most interesting question. It seems to me that one of the things we ought to think about is, in case an international agreement cannot be reached, then whither are we drifting?

I should like to read here a short paragraph from Garet Garrett's article in the Saturday Evening Post of April 15, which I think fits into the picture suggested by the Senator from Michigan.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield for that purpose?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Briefly. I desire to conclude as soon as I can.

Mr. DICKINSON. This is just a short paragraph.

There is nothing sacred about the gold standard. But, again, this is not a struggle over any principle of money. It is a struggle for power.

Suppose it were agreed to debase the American dollar. To what level should it be debased? To the level of the pound sterling or to the much lower level of the Japanese yen? Suppose we should debase it only to the level of the pound sterling. Then suppose the British Treasury should further debase the pound sterling, as it has already threatened to do, and suppose the Japanese should further debase the yen. That way lies a competitive debasement of currencies to the point of zero. What then? Well, then, total world-wide insolvency, probably a universal repudiation of international debt, at the expense of the principal international creditor, and complete financial chaos. Out of that chaos the strongest country would emerge on a gold-money basis again—necessarily on a gold-money basis because every other kind of money would be worthless.

Those who have been playing against us this game of exchange have not intended, of course, to let it go as far as zero, just as countries going to war never intend the destruction to be total. Each one expects to be able to inflict more damage than it suffers.

This country can defend itself; it can make itself invulnerable, but it cannot afford to play the game of depreciated currency, either competitively or in reprisal.

I am wondering whether or not, under the suggestion the Senator from Michigan is making now, that he concurred in the first section, providing for inflation, and particularly section (2), providing for the debasement of the gold dollar, if those sections stay in the bill, we are not headed in the very direction suggested by Garet Garrett.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, if the section respecting the gold dollar stays in the bill in the form in which it now is, and particularly if it is amended to include the free and unlimited coinage of silver by mere Presidential fiat, I cannot support it, for the reasons which I shall now undertake to detail. Furthermore, I am perfectly conscious of the deadly menace in a race between nations in respect to depreciated currency. I think that race has a substantial bearing upon this precise gold section, because it seems to me that the creation of an indefinite Presidential power to raise or lower or manipulate the gold content of the dollar and the ratio of our silver coinage is a virtual invitation to our entry and participation in just such an international race to see which nation can debase its exchange the most and the quickest. It is virtually saying to the President that we propose not only to allow him but to encourage him to engage us in this competition of depreciating currencies. I want to come to that with a little greater definiteness in just a moment.

The thing I am trying to say, very briefly, is that, in my opinion, 90 percent of the people, at least in my section of the country, want to see President Roosevelt and this administration given a chance to try properly controlled inflation. I think there are many Senators who feel as I do, that they also are willing to permit reasonable and even aggressive experiments in that behalf, if this one repugnant and offensive section, around which 90 percent of the debate here and the argument and controversy always rages, can be eliminated. Since I think it is a subject of proof that it is the least important section from the standpoint of these prescriptionists themselves, I submit that it ought to be eliminated, so that there may be a reasonable unity of action behind the President in this ambitious assault upon the depression.

Mr. President, a great deal has been said here of a political character in the last 2 or 3 days by way of attempting to reflect upon the recent administration and its two Secretaries of the Treasury, Mr. Mellon and Mr. Mills. I call the Senate's attention to the fact that, as to this particular gold section of the pending amendment which I am begging shall be taken out of the bill, my appeal does not rest for its support upon those particular Secretaries of the Treasury, but I call the Senate's attention to the fact that the Committee on Banking and Currency of the Senate divided 10 to 10 upon this precise proposition, and that two Democratic ex-Secretaries of the Treasury, who now honor this body with their membership, the distinguished senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Glass] and the distinguished junior Senator from California [Mr. McAdoo], were recorded against this section of the pending amendment.

I am not undertaking to infer what their attitude may be respecting the balance of the proposal; they will speak for themselves. But I am addressing myself particularly to the proposition that this gold-and-silver section should be deleted, and I submit that the deletion of the section has behind its argument not only the recommendations of ex-Secretaries Mellon and Mills, if such recommendations were made, but that it also has behind it the recommendations of ex-Secretaries Glass and McAdoo. Turn your back on Republican ex-Secretaries if you want to, I say to my friends across the aisle, but do not turn your back on your own Democratic ex-Secretaries, who are your own present colleagues, and their seasoned opposition to this portion of the bill.

Mr. President, if 4 ex-Secretaries of the Treasury, divided 2 upon one side of the aisle and 2 upon the other, are a unit in their recommendations that this section ought to go out of the bill, I submit that some of the rest of us, who are merely humble laymen in respect to complex fiscal problems of this nature, have received some advice worth heeding.

I said that I thought that, fundamentally, we have no right to sublet this authority to manipulate the currency to the Executive. I was speaking not merely in terms of constitutional technique; I was speaking with a view to the spirit and the genius of American institutions. Perhaps that is an academic sort of contemplation when men and women are hungry. But it was not an academic conception even in the presence of hunger and want and woe when the foundations of the Nation were laid down. We are under no greater urge to embrace fiscal expedients which might be relatively easy than were the fathers and the founders, who inherited the necessity to set fiscal chaos right when the foundation of the United States was established in fiscal honor and fiscal integrity. From that day to this there is not one spot or place in the story of the whole Government of the United States that has in it any remote parallel for the autocratic and dictatorial powers which the pending bill, to say nothing of the pending section of the pending amendment, proposes to strip from Congress and to grant to the President, in contravention of every theory of ordered liberty.

As friendly a newspaper analyst as Mr. Arthur Krock, of the New York Times, initiated a discussion of the existing prospectus last Sunday with the following sentence:

A poetic statistician has estimated that, after 49½ days in office, Franklin D. Roosevelt possesses, is seeking, and has been offered more absolute power than the sum of the arbitrary authority exercised at various times in history by Generals Washington, Lee, Grant, and Sherman, Presidents Jackson, Lincoln, and Wilson, and all the Emperors of the Ming dynasty.

[Laughter.]

Mr. President, that is an exaggeration, of course. Yet not so much of an exaggeration in essence. It is an analogy with a challenge. All over this world we have seen liberty crumble in the presence of these emergencies of today, and most of the emergencies are economic. We have seen ordered liberty disappear upon the one hand in surrender to individual autocracy or on the other hand in surrender to communism. Why should we feel that we are totally immune to those forces which thus are putting liberty in chains all round this world? In the presence of a situation such as that which is involved in this farm bill as a whole, whether with or without the inflation annex, have we a right to think of this thing solely in terms of crops and processors, in terms of markets and of commodity indexes, in terms of dollar content? Have we a right to consider ourselves relieved of assessing the net result, or at least the trend, when we propose to arm the Executive of this Nation with another power greater than anything that was ever remotely contemplated in the sum total of the history of the United States if not in the sum total of human experience? I do not cringe from unified command in this or any other war. That is why I earnestly seek to follow and support the President. But I do balk at blank checks and dictatorships.

I read what Mr. Krock had to say on the subject. I should like to read one other sentence from another friendly critic, and I quote now from Mr. John W. Owens, the editor of the Baltimore Sun:

The Roosevelt administration is nearing the edge of pronounced left-wing radicalism—so pronounced that it may involve little less than economic and social revolution.

I do not know whether they are approaching "the edge of pronounced left-wing radicalism" or not. I assume that the edge of left-wing radicalism means socialism or communism. I am not sure they are not trending rather in the direction of the edge of pronounced right-wing radicalism, which bespeaks its power and its efforts and its authority in terms of Hitler-ism and Mussolini-ism and personal dictatorship. Neither result will be acceptable to the American people.

Nobody has the remotest idea that either of these objectives rests in the mind of the President or in the minds of his advisers, or in respect to any of the program which is now laid upon our desks. But can we sign off our responsibility by pleading the present good faith of those who are demanding these extraordinary powers and proposing to exercise them?

Why do representative democracies always insist that their parliaments shall control the public purse? Because the power to tax is the power to destroy. The power to regulate the value of money—given by the Constitution to the Congress, not to the President—is a potent control of the public purse. Therefore it, too, may be the power to destroy. Our destruction, no matter how unmediated, should never rest in the authority of any one officer of government.

I remind Senators of the immutable truth set down in the Federalist Papers:

No man can be sure that he may not be tomorrow the victim of a spirit of injustice by which he may be a gainer today.

No man, Mr. President, can be sure that he may not be tomorrow the victim of a surrender of constitutional safeguards by which he thinks he might be a gainer today.

Mr. President, under the pending bill, upon which we are now proposing to graft this amendment, we are undertaking to allow an agent of the Executive to fix virtually unlimited sales taxes on the food and clothing of the people, then to appropriate and pay public revenues to such private persons as he sees fit, then to issue or withhold licenses over industry, and to put America's farms on rations. "More absolute power than the sum of the arbitrary authority ever heretofore exercised."

On top of that we are proposing, under the amendment, through the objectionable section which I attack, to permit the same Executive authority to rule the volume and the value of our money, and if that does not complete an absolute autocracy one was never completed in this world.

I submit that since it is not necessary to include this permissive power in the amendment—and it is the only part in the amendment where any such permissive power is lodged—since it is not necessary, I submit that we dare not encourage this antidemocratic trend.

It is well to remember Washington and his Farewell Address. I know some Senators are impatient in the presence of any such ancient recollection, but, after all, we cannot get away from the fact that we have a responsibility to American traditions and to American institutions.

We have a primary oath to maintain the genius and the spirit of these American institutions. I merely want to read one paragraph from President Washington's Farewell Address:

It is important likewise, that the habits of thinking in a free country should inspire caution in those intrusted with its administration, to confine themselves within their respective constitutional spheres, avoiding in the exercise of the powers of one department, to encroach upon another. The spirit of encroachment tends to consolidate the powers of all the departments in one, and thus to create, whatever the form of government, a real despotism. A just estimate of that love of power and proneness to abuse it which predominate in the human heart, is sufficient to satisfy us of the truth of this position. The necessity of reciprocal checks in the exercise of political power, by dividing and distributing it into different depositories, and constituting each the guardian of the public weal against invasions of the others, has been evinced by experiments ancient and modern: some of them in our country and under our own eyes. To preserve them must be as necessary as to institute them.

What is to become of the checks and balances under a measure which permits price fixing by a single dictator upon the one hand and tax levying by a single dictator upon the other hand, and, over all, the privilege to one human, fallible judgment by its own ipse dixit if, as, and when it pleases, to decide what our money shall be worth and how much of it there shall be, and to change his mandate whenever he pleases?

I submit, Mr. President, that there can be nothing more repugnant to the spirit of the institutions of the United States and to the principles of the Democratic Party, as well as of the Republican Party, than a needless concentration of dangerous power of this nature; and I submit that the Congress has no right to surrender it not merely as a matter of constitutional inhibition—for I would not undertake to argue that legalistic point—but as a matter of plain fundamental fidelity to what we know to be the necessary boundaries with which we must protect and surround ordered and organized liberty.

I say it is unnecessary to put this gold section in the bill. I have not been discussing the morals of reducing the gold content of the dollar; I do not dismiss that final recourse. On the contrary, I have said that I can conceive of an ultimate emergency in which that might be necessary if done on the strength of our responsibility as legislators under the Constitution; but I say the inclusion of this section, which I know is repugnant to the viewpoint of many a Senator who is going to vote for it, runs against the best advantage of the bill itself to accomplish its own purposes.

We cannot rebuild American commerce and American economics on bases of uncertainty. If there is one thing more than another that we have got to create, it is signboards of dependable certainty, so that men may know with some degree of reliance what is to happen tomorrow and the day after.

How can there be any commercial certainty of any degree whatsoever in respect to American business or anything else so long as there exists, floating nakedly in space, the privilege in the hands of one human dictator to manipulate the value of the American dollar up, down, sideways, any way he wants to? How can there be any certainty in anybody's business or in anybody's heart; how can we have anything to tie to; where is the anchor?

And yet the remainder of this program, to which I have been willing to subscribe for the sake of experiment and adventure, may have within it the precise hope and the precise relief for which we all beg and pray if it shall be given a fair chance to succeed. But you propose, by this gold section, to leave a veritable sword of Damocles suspended above the American market place, and then you expect the market place to blandly ignore the hazard. You defeat your own purposes.

One of the most distinguished Democratic bankers in America telephoned me two nights ago to say that "there ought to be nothing in this bill except the first section which", said he, "supplementing the gold embargo is ample to bring us out of our troubles if under these two propositions America can have a chance; but", said he, "there is no chance of any nature so long as the standard of American monetary value is itself chaotic, is itself a straw in the wind, and no more reliable than a broken reed."

How can a business man contemplate a long-range development for tomorrow, if he does not know what his dollar is worth even this afternoon until he reads his newspaper? How can there be any of that courageous forward march which is so necessary in this situation if there is no point at which our captains of industry and their lieutenants and adjutants, upon whom they must depend, can ever know from one day's end to the next the value of the basic measure of exchange in which all their transactions must be assessed?

Talk of managed currency! Do you know of any managed currency on earth which has just one manager, as proposed in this gold and silver section, who can do as he pleases, when he pleases, how he pleases with this vital element? Management implies orderly and regular control. This section invites potential chaos—not because the President is unreliable, but because the intended power is unreliable, unbounded and uncontrolled, and unresponsive to any checks and balances.

I submit that the inclusion of this section in the bill completely nullifies and vetoes all chance of the remainder of the program to succeed. "Well", it is said, "we want it there in order to free the arms of the President when he enters the economic conference, so that he can deal authoritatively in contact with other great world powers in that notable and highly important contest." Mr. President, I hold to the theory, so often expressed by the able senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lewis], that the principals speaking for the nations of this earth are infinitely safer when they negotiate through agents, through plenipotentiaries, than when they themselves negotiate.

I think that the President of the United States will be in better position to deal with the great international authorities at the approaching world conference if, instead of being a free agent, so that he can be "put upon the spot" the very moment any proposition is laid down to him by Great Britain or by France or by some other power, he has the protection afforded by the necessity of returning to his native land and to his Congress for its O.K. I think he will be infinitely safer as a negotiator not only from our viewpoint as a nation but from his viewpoint as a negotiator. If the international contract he negotiates is good, it will be ratified when he comes home; if it is not good, it ought not to be ratified either before he comes or after he comes home. I know of no way by which we, as Members of the Senate, can sublet to anybody the final responsibility for passing upon those contracts and those contacts when they shall have been made. I remind the Senate that the advance issuance of any such unchecked privilege of international negotiation would have put us in the League of Nations in 1920.

Finally, I submit again that the existence of this section runs squarely counter to the remainder of the inflation program, because if this section goes into the amendment and into the bill on the heels of these debates, there is raised a question as to whether or not the Government of the United States proposes to keep its word in respect to its gold bonds. The able Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] put his finger squarely on it in an interrogatory a little while ago when he stated that the gold section of this bill squarely invites suspicion and doubt as to whether or not the promise of the United States is good as literally made heretofore; and yet in the same measure and in one section of it to which I have already given my approval it is proposed, for the first time in half a century, to ask the American people to trust the faith and credit of the United States in respect to their money with no other reliance behind that money.

In one section of the bill we propose to issue paper money upon the naked word of Uncle Sam, and in another adjacent section of the amendment, unless this clause goes out as I plead, we propose to threaten that the word of Uncle Sam may not be good for the first time in 150 years. I submit that the two things are utterly incompatible, and that this section does not belong in the amendment. You cannot create confidence at the same moment you threaten to destroy it.

Mr. President, with this section eliminated, and for the reasons that I have indicated, and because of my willingness to try new experiments in the face of new and unprecedented problems, I am willing to vote for this proposition so long as this one utterly repugnant, offensive, indefensible section is taken out. I speak of it in those terms not so much because of the specific thing which it is proposed to do, namely, to devalue the dollar, because, I repeat, I am willing to face even that contingency if it be necessary to rescue America; but I speak of it in the sense that it is proposed that this power shall be exercised in a method and fashion for which there is not only no precedent in any ordered democracy but for which there is no justification. In its lengthened shadow some day, Mr. President, this thing will come back to plague those who consent to it. When all is said and done, these institutions which we have inherited and which are at the mercy of every single piece of legislation of this character which goes through the Senate—these institutions are no stronger than our fidelities to them.

They were not made with the mountains;
They are not one with the deep.
Men, not God, devised them, and Men, not God, must keep.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, in the very able address just concluded by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] he made some reference to the supposed constitutional invalidity of the provision contained in paragraph (2) of subtitle (b) of this amendment, but he did not undertake to discuss it in detail. Yesterday, if I correctly understood the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], he suggested that there was doubt of the constitutionality of the provision, but announced that he thought it futile to discuss that subject in this body. I think, Mr. President, that the RECORD should disclose something of the views of some of us upon this subject. At the risk of being presumptuous or endeavoring to instruct those who are better informed than myself, I desire to submit certain observations which will express my opinions concerning it.

Before I do that, I want to say that I am in favor of the general purposes of the amendment. I am one of those who believe that the people of this Nation will benefit by the maintenance of a dollar which will stand somewhat nearer parity in international exchange. I feel that such a dollar will be helpful in restoring our foreign commerce and in the protection of our domestic markets against the imports of countries which have willfully depreciated their currencies. I think it will tend to strengthen domestic prices, and without doubt a parity dollar would tend to make our tariff more adequate and more effective. I am happy, therefore, to declare my support of the chief purposes of the amendment.

If it is thought wise by the Congress of the United States to deal with the subject of the gold content of the dollar, as I am presently advised, I am even willing to take a step in that direction. I oppose subsection (2), however, not because it reduces the weight of the gold dollar but because in fact it fails to attain that objective. At least it is true that it does not directly reduce the weight of the gold dollar. It is merely a grant of power to the President of the United States to be used by him in such way as he may in the future see fit. It is this delegation of power to the President that I find objectionable. I think it hurtful to our country at this time for a number of reasons. I shall refer only to a part of them, because I speak only in a brief way.

I think the proposition is objectionable in the first place because the language of subsection (2) is itself equivocal. It is equivocal because it is impossible to determine whether it is proposed to clothe the President with authority to adjust the weight of the dollar from time to time or whether it is proposed merely that he may make one effort, and having once made an adjustment that the gold content will be fixed at the point at which he makes the adjustment. I have heard Senators suggest in private conversation both of the two different propositions. At this time I make no effort to sustain either interpretation. I am content to observe merely as I pass that this equivocal language is employed in the first part of the paragraph.

The language is objectionable for other reasons. In the second alternative of paragraph (2) we find language commencing with the statement, "in case the Government of the United States enters into an agreement with any government or governments." It was suggested before the Committee on Banking and Currency that this paragraph clothes the President with powers with respect to the making of agreements, and some of those who have addressed the Senate in their consideration of the paragraph have assumed that it does in fact clothe the President with power to make agreements with other governments.

It is my own humble judgment that the language is not intended so to authorize the President of the United States. I believe that the language, commencing with the phrase "in case the Government of the United States enters into an agreement", is merely subjunctively used and is a condition precedent upon which the President of the United States may subsequently by proclamation fix the weight of the dollar. But whether my view is correct the fact remains that Members of this body have taken different views as to the construction of the language, and we are dealing now with an equivocal structure upon a subject affecting the happiness of all our people and the welfare of the Nation, probably more than any other subject that the Congress of the United States could be called upon to consider.

I submit with respect to both of these propositions that on account of the transcendent importance of the subject we ought not to legislate in terms of ambiguity.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GEORGE in the chair). Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I should like to inquire if the Senator from Oregon considers it necessary to have an enabling act passed in order to give the President of the United States power to negotiate a treaty?

Mr. STEIWER. Oh, no; the President has the power under the treaty-making powers of the Government to negotiate a treaty, but of course nominally the treaty is not effective until ratified by the Senate. If we accept the construction that it permits the President to make a treaty with a foreign power, we in effect make an exception in this case and say that the agreement might be made without compliance with the usual constitutional processes under the treaty-making power.

These various objections are not of controlling importance, because they could, of course, be corrected by the use of more appropriate language. But an examination of the two propositions referred to leads us deeper into the real meaning of the section.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield.

Mr. KING. I ask for information as to the interpretation which the Senator places upon it and, if his interpretation is right and he thinks it should be made more certain, whether he thinks we have sufficient information now to warrant us in passing a measure declaring that the gold dollar, instead of being 22.23 grains per unit, shall be, for instance, 11.115 grains? Is the Senator ready now, if he objects to conferring a discretion upon the President, because obviously we have not the facts, does he think he possesses sufficient facts to warrant him in voting now for a legislative declaration that the gold content of the dollar shall be 11.115 grains?

Mr. STEIWER. I hope the Senator will not be offended if I answer by saying that I do not think it is very important or very material whether I regard myself as qualified to deal with the subject here and now. If, however, the Senator is interested, I will say that I feel that I am not equipped at this moment to make an orderly, sound, and safe conclusion with respect to the reduction of the gold content of the dollar; nor am I sure, Mr. President, that any other one person presently identified with the Government of the United States is at this time equipped to make such a conclusion.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. STEIWER. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I agree with the latter statement, if I understood the statement; but I understood the Senator to say that his objection to this provision is that it is ambiguous and uncertain. I deduce his meaning to be that he feels that the Congress ought now to fix the value of the gold dollar.

Mr. STEIWER. I have not said that. I think that in the purpose of the administration the other provisions of the amendment are to come first. According to newspaper reports, and also according to the advice we have here upon the floor of the Senate, the provision dealing with the gold content of the dollar is the last provision to which resort would be had. It would seem to me that if we are to support the program of the President in this important hour in the history of the Republic, we might well accept his views and permit the other sections of the amendment to come first. Therefore, so far as I am concerned, if I am ever obliged to deal with the question of the gold content of the dollar I should prefer to deal with it after the other opportunities under the proposed amendment have been exhausted.

My more essential objection to the incorporation of paragraph 2 into the amendment comes from my deep belief that it constitutes a delegation of legislative power to the President. I know it has been said here, either on the floor or off the floor, that there is authority for this provision under the decision of the Supreme Court with respect to the flexible provision of the tariff law. I want in a moment to come to that. Before doing so, in order to develop in an orderly way the idea that is in my mind, I remind Senators that the power in Congress to regulate the value of money is not a casual power. It was placed there after full consideration and apparently upon the fullest understanding of the consequence of attempting to regulate the value of our coinage.

In section 8, article I, of the Constitution, we find the provision in express language that Congress is clothed with the power to coin money and to regulate its value. An increase or decrease in the gold content of the dollar is the most effectual and direct means that can be devised for the regulation of the value of the dollar.

I contend that this constitutional power, which is highly legislative in character, cannot be delegated away.

Before I attempt to make any distinction between the delegation of the sort here attempted and the delegation of powers had in the various tariff acts—I shall refer only to the acts of 1890 and 1922—I want to invite the attention of Senators to just what it is in this amendment that makes it a delegation of legislative power.

In the first place, as already observed, this paragraph does not attempt to fix the value of the dollar nor to reduce nor to increase its weight. It is merely a grant of power. Under what conditions is this power to be exercised by the President? I have noted, in order to save language and to save the time of the Senate, some of these conditions.

It is provided in subsection (b) as follows:

"* * * if for any other reason additional measures are required, in the judgment of the President, to meet such purposes, then the President is authorized" to make the proclamation provided in paragraph 2.

What are the purposes to which this refers? In order to determine these purposes it is necessary to refer to the beginning of the section. The beginning of that section contains certain language which, I am frank to say, may or may not define the purposes of the amendment. I quote:

Whenever the President finds, on investigation, that (1) the foreign commerce of the United States is adversely affected by reason of the depreciation in the value of the currency of any other government or governments in relation to the present standard value of gold, or (2) action under this section is necessary in order to regulate and maintain the parity of currency issues of the United States, or (3) an economic emergency requires an expansion of credit, or (4) an expansion of credit is necessary to secure by international agreement a stabilization at proper levels of the currencies of various governments, the President is authorized, in his discretion—

And so forth.

Mr. President, this language does not, by direct expression, declare the purposes of the amendment. It is true that it may imply the purposes, and of that I shall make some observations later. The language, under any interpretation, and under every view which may be taken of it, is nothing at all save the expression of four alternative conditions precedent to the exercise of the delegated power. I think lawyers will agree to this proposition. When these conditions, or any part of them, are found, then, and not until then, may the President exercise the authority conferred by the amendment.

If that can be said to imply the purpose of the act, then I submit that the purpose must be, or may be, any one of the four alternatives.

It must be, or may be, that an economic emergency requires the expansion of credit.

It must be, or it may be, that an expansion of credit is necessary to secure, by international agreement, "a stabilization at proper levels of the currencies of various governments."

I submit that if these conditions precedent are to be employed to furnish a basis for the construction of the act, and if, from them, we are to imply the purposes of the act, at the best those purposes become nebulous. They are uncertain, if they are not entirely unknown.

That, however, is not all, Mr. President.

After we start with this unsatisfactory basis, we go on over to the proposition which more definitely defines the condition upon which the President may proceed.

It is provided at the beginning of subsection (b) as follows:

If the Secretary, when directed by the President, is unable to secure the assent of the several Federal Reserve banks and the Federal Reserve Board to the agreements authorized in this section, or if operations under the above provisions prove to be inadequate to meet the purposes of this section of this act, or if for any other reason additional measures are required in the judgment of the President to meet such purposes, then he is authorized—

To proceed in accordance with subparagraphs (1) and (2).

The point I seek to make is that the last condition which I have just read refers us back to the supposed purposes; and if we take all of them together, it merely means this:

That the President, if he finds that an economic emergency exists, may deal with that emergency; and then, if he finds that the efforts which he has made are not adequate in his judgment, or if the operations under the provisions prove to be inadequate to meet the uncertain purposes of the section, then, for any additional reason, which the President himself may define, and which is not written into this law, even by the most nebulous sort of implication, he may take such additional steps as in his judgment may be required to meet the purposes; and in taking those additional steps he acts, not by formula, not by legislative plan or purpose laid down by this enactment, but he acts in accordance with his own personal judgment as to what should be done in the premises. In his action he is limited by the broad authority of paragraphs 1 and 2.

Because of the lack of formula, because of the lack of declared policy, because of the lack of a plan, I submit that this provision is a delegation of legislative power. The exercise by the President of his discretion as to what the policy shall be condemns the paragraph as unconstitutional. It is the exercise of this discretion as to the formula or as to the plan that distinguishes this kind of a proposition from the statutes heretofore sustained by the courts against the charge of constitutional invalidity. It is this proposition, coupled with one other that should be mentioned, that distinguishes this case from the holding of the court in the Hampton case and the historic case of Field against Clark, for we find here that the President is not required to go either forward or back. In all the other statutes with which I am acquainted, when there is imposed upon the Executive the duty to find a fact, the duty to find an event, the duty to determine the happening of a contingency, there has always followed a mandatory requirement that the President shall proceed in the execution of the law laid down by Congress.

Here, we find no duty to proceed, no mandatory requirement upon the Chief Executive. For a mandatory requirement there is substituted discretion of the President of the United States. For a definite legislative policy there is substituted the President's judgment as to whether additional measures should be taken, and the President's discretion as to what those additional measures may be.

Mr. President, when we examine the authorities we are struck immediately with wonderment that the authors of the amendment should even attempt to couch this delegation of power in the language which has been here employed.

Now, let us consider briefly the decisions that deal with this subject.

The one most spoken of is the Hampton case, which related to the exercise by the President of powers conferred by the flexible provision of the tariff law.

Section 315(a) of the act of 1922 contains the following language:

... whenever the President, upon investigation of the differences in costs of production of the articles wholly or in part the growth or product of the United States and of like or similar articles wholly or in part the growth or product of competing countries, shall find it thereby shown that the duties fixed in this act do not equalize the said differences in costs of production in the United States and the principal competing country, he shall by such investigation, ascertain said differences and determine and proclaim the changes in classifications or increases or decreases in any rate of duty provided in this act shown by said ascertained differences in such cost of production necessary to equalize the same.

As we know, the Supreme Court of the United States upheld this statute against the charge that it violated the Constitution of the United States in the delegation of legislative powers to the President. In doing so, Chief Justice Taft applied the rule laid down in the historic case of Field against Clark, and in doing so he reviewed a statute which was substantially the same in its essential legal requirements as the Tariff Act of 1922.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. STEIWER. I do.

Mr. HATFIELD. In other words, it is the Senator's contention that the formula should be prescribed by the Congress?

Mr. STEIWER. Yes; it is my contention, but, what is yet more important, it is the law of this country and has been for a hundred years. It is the rule of all the courts. It is the rule of the Supreme Court of the United States. It is the binding rule of law which determines the power of the Congress and limits and defines that which Congress may delegate and that which Congress may not delegate.

In discussing this matter, the Chief Justice said with reference to the case of Field against Clark:

After an examination of all the authorities, the Court said that while Congress could not delegate legislative power to the President, this act would not in any real sense invest the President with the power of legislation, because nothing involving the expediency or just operation of such legislation was left to the determination of the President; that the legislative power was exercised when Congress declared that the suspension should take effect on a named contingency.

The 1922 Tariff Act, in my humble opinion, amply justified the opinion just stated, and the application of the rule as made by the Chief Justice, because in the language quoted from section 315 (a) of the tariff act just referred to it is provided that upon the contingency named—that is, upon a certain finding by the President, and the establishment of a fact—the President shall make the necessary investigation and shall proclaim the result. The President in that law is not vested with any legislative discretion. He does not deal with policies, nor does he determine anything concerning the justice resulting from an increase or decrease in tariff duty. In the opinion of Chief Justice Taft, he observes that to avoid such difficulties—namely, the exercise by the President of discretion which is legislative in nature—the Congress has adopted “the method of describing with clearness what its policy or plan was, and then authorized a member of the executive branch to carry out this policy or plan.”

The differences between the flexible provision and the pending proposal are obvious. In the flexible provision the plan or policy was to provide a duty to equalize the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad. The President is directed to investigate such differences, and if he finds that the duties provided do not equalize the differences it is made his mandatory duty to ascertain the differences and make the necessary change in rates and classifications. In other words, upon the finding of the fact the President is directed to proceed in a certain manner.

As already pointed out, under the pending amendment the President of the United States is not required to find any certain fact. He is not required to act upon any contingency save upon the exercise of his own judgment. He is not required to act in a certain way. There is no mandatory rule that he act at all. It may be that he feels there ought to be an expansion in credit, and that such expansion is justified because he feels that an economic emergency requires it, and that it is necessary to secure international agreements for stabilization “at proper levels”, and it may be he entertains the further belief that the purpose of the amendment has not been met or that for any other reason “additional measures are required.” It all rests in the judgment of the President, and after he formulates his judgment he then exercises a further judgment whether he shall take any action, and if he decides to act he may then elect which of the permitted actions will be taken.

I pause long enough to suggest that the phrase “at proper levels” is not defined. That, also, is left to the judgment of the President. And so it is that the authority of the President to fix the weight of the dollar does not depend on any known rule or policy described by the Congress. He may do the things that are enacted under subparagraph (1), or he may resort to subparagraph (2), or he may resort to the first alternative of subparagraph (2), or he may resort to the second alternative under the treaty provision of subparagraph (2).

I submit, Mr. President, that the failure to define the contingency upon which the President would act, the failure to prescribe a legislative policy, the failure to make a formula, the failure to outline a plan, the failure to fix the event upon which the President should act, and determine the time when he should act, the failure to make any requirement of him, giving to him the boundless discretion to which I have already referred, takes this language out of the rule as defined in the Hampton case, out of the rule as defined in the old case of Field against Clark, and entirely beyond the power of the Congress to enact. The proposal is unconstitutional.

Mr. President, I do not want to detain the Senate much longer, but I want to observe two or three other things which I believe are so objectionable in their nature that this provision ought to be stricken from the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma.

I have said that the language constitutes a delegation of legislative power which I think is in violation of the Constitution. But it does another thing equally as important and possibly more fraught with danger to the Republic than the mere delegation of legislative power. It surrenders the monetary independence of the United States. To the extent of agreements made with foreign powers, it takes from the Congress the authority to deal with the price level in our own country. If exercised by the President through agreement with foreign governments, it effectually strips the Congress of its constitutional power to regulate the value of money and to deal with the price level in our domestic markets.

It may be that that is desirable. It may be that Members of this body will urge that our country will be benefited if we surrender this power to the influences which come from abroad. I cannot find it possible, in my own mind, to reach such a decision upon that point. I am bound to remember that the foreign nations will, in the very nature of things, be more concerned over the welfare of their own people than of ours. Some of them are our debtors; some of them may expect to benefit in one way or another by the price levels, by the value and weight of a dollar. Some of them may think it possible to achieve some of their national aspirations at the expense of the American people.

I do not doubt but that foreign governments would find it possible to reach agreements with us with respect to this matter regulating the value of our money and the value of our commodities. I do not doubt but that competing commercial nations would look upon that proposition with very considerable favor. But, as I have said, I cannot win my own assent to a proposition of that kind.

This proposal, viewed in the light of the suggestion which I am now making, raises the question whether it is better for the United States to fix the gold content of its own dollar, by its own independent action, or whether we are to yield up the power to regulate the value of our money through international agreements.

This subject would permit of discussion far beyond my present purpose. It embraces the question of the foreign debts. The action contemplated under the amendment would involve this country by treaty commitment to a greater degree than any treaty yet made by the Government of the United States in the entire history of the Republic. It involves the question of the control of prices in the domestic price field, and yields up a part of that control to foreign agencies, and these are agencies whose interests are not always identical to ours.

In this connection I call attention to the telegram sent under date of April 24 by Prof. Irving Fisher to the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency. This telegram is as follows:

In my opinion it would be a great mistake to require the President to obtain foreign consent to any changes in the dollar's weight. Such a requirement would impair his bargaining power. It would also have the more serious disadvantage of making our unit of value dependent upon foreign conditions—the very thing that in large part was responsible for our present trouble. Our objective, regardless of the outside world, must be such monetary measures as will reestablish the price level of 1926 and then to hold it there with the minimum of change so that our economic life may not again be disrupted by a fall in price level. Let us have a monetary declaration of independence. Such independence will later on enable us to preserve and stabilize our unit of value no matter what other nations may do.

Mr. President, I am not contending in behalf of the proposition here expressed that we should have a price level equivalent to the price level of 1926. I read this telegram merely because it illustrates in clear language the thing which I am attempting to state, namely, that it is better for our Government to deal with respect to the regulation of its own money and the regulation of its own price level upon an independent basis than to yield up the control to agencies in other parts of the world.

In the entire discussion of this subject I have heard no defense for the proposition of bartering away our constitutional authority to regulate the value of our own money. Something can be said for the idea that the creation in the President of this power to make agreements respecting the weight of the dollar would enable him to restore parity in international exchanges.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I want to ask the Senator whether he does not feel that this proposal is an emergency matter and that it does not attempt to fix and establish a permanent monetary policy for this country?

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, if I were to answer the question from an inspection of the amendment itself, I would be obliged to say to the Senator that there is nothing about it to suggest that it is an emergency matter. There is no limitation of time upon this proposal to deal with the gold content of the dollar. Nor do we propose vesting this power in the present occupant of the White House alone.

If this legislation shall be enacted, the power will rest with the President of the United States, whomsoever he may be; it will reside there until it is recalled by Congress, and if the effort ever is made to bring it back against the force of an Executive veto, we know that it will not be recalled until two thirds of both bodies vote in that behalf. So we may realize now that if we enact this paragraph as it is written, this power may never be recalled by the Congress in the lifetime of the Senator from Florida, or in my lifetime, and we are not justified, I think, in saying that this proposal is a temporary or emergency proposal, because as it is written it seems to be a permanent declaration of policy, a permanent delegation of authority to the President.

Mr. President, resuming at the point where I attempted to answer a question propounded by the Senator from Florida, I want to reread one sentence from the telegram sent by Dr. Fisher. He says in his wire:

Let us have a monetary declaration of independence.

Such a declaration is wholly unnecessary. It would be trite and unnecessary, probably, for me to remark that the American Colonies fought for that independence and attained it over a century and a half ago. It has been ours ever since the beginning of this Government. It will remain ours unless we barter it away. I cannot support a proposal which even suggests or invites bartering away all the essential power of control over our own monetary system.

Now, I will discuss one other proposition and then I will conclude. I want to refer to the importance of this power. I think we should not support this paragraph or withhold our support from it merely upon the ground of its importance.

We are in an eventful era. We are dealing every day with matters of gravest consequence; but I submit to all Senators, and especially those who favor this proposal, more to them than to those who oppose it, that the importance of the matter makes it all the more necessary that we view it with the very closest kind of scrutiny. It is because of the magnitude, the possibilities, the extent, of this amendment that I am constrained to examine it in order to determine whether or not it meets constitutional requirements. It is because of its importance and extent and magnitude that I am disposed to criticize it for being equivocal in its structure. If it were a trivial matter, I would not detain the Senate and argue here that the language in itself is ambiguous. It might under other circumstances be of little consequence whether the language was ambiguous or whether it was interpreted finally in one way or another, but because of the gravity of the situation and because of the consequences which may flow from the enactment of this kind of legislation we have a right to regard the importance of the proposition.

With all respect to the President of the United States, I feel that the authority is too great to be reposed in any one citizen of the Republic.

The power to regulate the value of money is a power to increase or decrease in terms of money the value of everything that man possesses. It is the power to enrich and to pauperize. It transcends the limits of imagination. It is the power of absolute monarchy. In its extent and magnitude it equals the sovereignty of the mightiest rulers in history, and, if employed unwisely, could destroy the Nation.

Granted in times of peace, it exceeds the authority exercised by the President in time of war. It is a greater power than that which Lincoln exercised in the emancipation of the colored race, because it may be employed for the enslavement of all races.

With the sympathy which I feel, Mr. President, for the general purpose of this amendment I regret to be obliged to declare my dissent from this particular paragraph. Because I feel that it is unconstitutional, because I feel that it is ambiguous in its phraseology, because I oppose bartering away by treaty the power to regulate American money and American prices, because I regard the powers in question too great in consequence and in magnitude to be conferred upon one citizen of the Republic, I am obliged to withhold my support of this paragraph. It ought to be stricken from the amendment.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the New Orleans Item, signed by Mr. James M. Thompson, which covers the question now before the Senate, I think, in such manner that it will be of great interest to the other Members of the Senate.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Front page editorial from the New Orleans Item, Apr. 25, 1933]

THIS IS THE TIME TO RALLY

The stage is set in Washington for the greatest battle over finance, both public and private, that has been fought in the United States since Andrew Jackson braved destruction by attacking selfish and corruptive private control over the money of the Republic, as then vested in Nicholas Biddle's Bank of the United States.

Franklin D. Roosevelt was nominated and elected President against the opposition of the corrupt and corrupting money powers operating, first, through their creature, the Republican Party, and, next, in the Democratic National Convention. There the Power Trust and other "conservative trusts", and the money masters of Wall Street did all they could to prevent his nomination by the progressive Democrats of South and West.

Roosevelt, "the weak man", also "the only Democrat who cannot be elected", was swept into office by an overwhelming vote of the progressives of both parties. Nor could Wall Street stem the tide for him in his native State of New York. Even Pennsylvania, home of the Nicholas Biddle's Bank of the United States, perpetual political bulwark of a corrupt alliance between politics, money, and business, was almost dragged into line by revolt among a suffering people. A vast patient majority of Americans, robbed, almost ruined, saw Mr. Roosevelt take his presidential oath amid complete collapse of the Wall Street controlled system of banking and finance.

The same interests whose policies had wrecked a third of our banks hoped and tried to sell Roosevelt a financial policy which would close 5,000 more banks and leave Wall Street in chain control of the banking and financial power then surviving in the United States.

Big money, selfish and corrupt national and international finance, doesn't care who sits in the White House, who presides over the Treasury, so long as it controls the money and the fiscal policies of the Government itself. It is bipartisan. It is non-partisan. It aims always to keep enough "conservative Democrats" on legislative rolls to offset any "progressive Republicans" who may defy its dictates or slip its leash.

So these little Wall Street Democrats, more particularly from the South, Mr. Mellon's man, Senator DAVID A. REED, of Pennsylvania, and little Oogie Mills, the darling of Wall Street, are appealing against the program of President Roosevelt and the progressive majorities in Congress.

These Bourbons who have delivered the richest Nation in the world to the brink of ruin, on the very day they were handing over the power of government to Roosevelt, were, like Samson of old, pulling their temple down around them. And, like so many Delilahs, they have since been trying to cut Roosevelt's hair. They would now prevent him and Congress from following the only line that can save the very money which gave them place and leave them some remaining power.

The greed, callousness, and hoarding of the class for whom they speak have had their day. They would do well to bow to the storm. Money—its control and regulation in the United States are almost purely a domestic question. Responsibility for our money constitutionally rests with the Congress.

The pending money bill has no necessary relationship to farm bills. The President and Congress should agree on measures and methods so far and so well safeguarded that no room is left for reasonable dispute over the constitutionality in the exercise of power. The line should then be drawn, the issue made, the roll called on the question which of the people's representatives in this great crisis serve mammon and which serve man.

It is inconceivable to us that any Congressman from stricken Louisiana, Mississippi, or Arkansas can align himself for Mr. Mills' kind of "sound" money, "sound" banking, and "sound" finance.

It will be a matter of deep concern to the people of America for a generation to come to note how many conservative Democrats from the South and West respond to the despairing cry of REED, of Pennsylvania, and to the lobby calls of Ogden Mills and interests for which he stands and works.

Common honesty, national honor, and the emancipation of our great people from thralldom to a sterile and dead system, demand monetary reform in America. A man who is not free to work, who cannot get a living wage, is not a free man. A man with work who cannot pay a reasonable debt on his home or his farm is not a free man. A man in an average business who cannot make a living is a slave to the lender. When Roosevelt came into office, 9 out of 10 Americans, measured by those standards, were not free men.

Good, able, and conscientious men may, and will, align themselves in Congress against a forward policy in the Nation. Nor will all who vote for it be angels.

But the vote will constitute, as a whole, the greatest test of the mastery of money against service to the people, which has taken place since Jackson asserted the sovereignty of the people against the power of money.

JAMES M. THOMPSON, Publisher.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I feel under some obligation to take a limited time of the Senate owing to the fact that there are some provisions in the pending amendment to which I cannot give my support while with other parts of it I am in full sympathy. I wish to make my vote intelligible if possible.

Mr. President, we are legislating in the face of a great national peril, indeed, in the face of a great world peril, and naturally our minds, our conclusions, and our thoughts are affected by the conditions and environment which surround us. At the present time the representatives of the leading nations of the world are gathering in Washington to consult with the President of the United States relative to world conditions. That which brings them here is the economic distress and suffering of the people in the respective countries from which those representatives come. We have had depressions heretofore, and it is sometimes said that this one is no different from previous ones. It is different in its world-wide extent and in its intensity. There is no nation in the world whose people are not suffering at the present time because of unhappy economic conditions. Nations of the world have come together to consult. One of the representatives who is here and who has given his life to the cause of humanity, an apostle of peace, has stated that this contest was no less than a contest for civilization; that if we could not find a solution for the problems which now confront us and could not by adjustment find relief for our people, he could not see how it was possible to escape calamities beyond the power of human language to portray. It is these conditions, Mr. President, that confront us at the present time and with which we are striving, as best we may, to deal.

It has been said that there is at this time throughout the world an indebtedness of some $300,000,000,000 which is now in default, either in interest or in principal. It is estimated that some one hundred and odd millions of people are without employment throughout the world, and that number is constantly increasing. Commodity prices until within the recent days have receded to a point where they have not been found in 300 years; the problem which we have is to find a means or a method by which to raise commodity prices. It is thought by some of us that controlled inflation will assist in that respect. I am of that belief.

It is not alone, Mr. President, the material loss which we are called upon to suffer, but the changes which are being wrought in the whole structure of government and in the spiritual, moral, and physical welfare of the people. It is something without a precedent in history, either in time of peace or in time of war. Our own form of government, under the devastating forces which now play against it, is undergoing a change with which in after years, should we escape from this condition, we shall find it necessary in many respects to reckon. So, Mr. President, we are legislating under extraordinary conditions.

I do not find, outside of one section, any reason to be alarmed over the inflation provided for in this amendment. I think it, indeed, a conservative measure, save and except for one section to which I shall refer later.

The first section of the amendment dealing with the question of open-market transactions or with the inflation which may flow from the action by the Federal Reserve authorities is certainly a very fairly guarded and conservative proposal of legislation. If we secure inflation or an expansion of the currency under this section, we will do so after having secured the judgment and the approval of an exceptionally able and certainly an exceptionally conservative body of men. There must first be procured upon the part of the President an agreement having the endorsement and approval of the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal Reserve banks. Before the $3,000,000,000 can be put into circulation the action must have the approval of these able and conservative gentlemen, who are thoroughly advised with reference to financial matters. I feel no one need to fear that there will be any misuse or abuse of this particular provision of the bill. I do not myself anticipate any expansion here. I wish it were more liberal. I am afraid those of us who want inflation have most to complain of.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President—

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. Would it somewhat astonish the Senator from Idaho to be told that these gentlemen were not consulted about this provision of the bill?

Mr. BORAH. No; I do not think that would surprise me, but it would surprise me tremendously if they were not consulted before this currency should be issued. It is certain that before any action can be taken with reference to putting in circulation the currency provided for by this section it must have the approval not only of the Federal Reserve banks but also of the Federal Reserve Board; no action can be taken until that approval is given.

Mr. GLASS. Does the Senator realize that if such approval is given, the Federal Reserve Banking System is at once degraded to the point of becoming a subservient agency of the Treasury, to be operated not to respond to the requirements of commerce and of industry and of agriculture, but merely to respond to the requirements of the United States Treasury?

Mr. BORAH. I assume that in giving its approval the Federal Reserve Board will be governed by what it thinks are the commercial and financial interests of the country rather than political interests.

Mr. GLASS. Then the Senator assumes things that I do not assume.

Mr. BORAH. I am the last man in the Senate to differ with the able Senator from Virginia upon a matter of this kind; but as an inflationist, as one who believes that controlled inflation is a very important element in bringing about recovery, I was rather discouraged that the first section of the amendment was put under the control absolutely of men who thus far have stood against any kind or form of inflation.

Mr. GLASS. If the Senator will permit a further interruption—

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. The Federal Reserve Banking System today has, with its gold supply, ample facilities to expand the credits and currency of the country in excess of $4,000,000,000. Why should it be expected that they will make use of this proposed $3,000,000,000 of expansion when they do not now expand when they have ample opportunity to expand?

Mr. BORAH. I have thought of that ever since this bill came before the Senate, and that is the reason why I say that, as one who believes in inflation, I do not get very much comfort from the first section; but it does seem to me that those who are opposed to inflation ought not to find any difficulty in supporting this provision of the measure.

Mr. GLASS. If I have the strength, I think perhaps I shall take occasion to present some reasons why I do not feel at liberty to support it.

Mr. BORAH. Above all things, I trust the Senator will have strength enough and for many years to come. But if we were going to select a body of men in the United States to pass upon the question of an expansion of the currency, of what is called in popular parlance "inflation", where would we find a more intelligent, a more conservative body of men to pass upon that question than the directors of the Federal Reserve banks and the members of the Federal Reserve Board?

Mr. President, in all probability there will be no expansion under that section; but that is a matter about which we should complain rather than those who are opposing the measure. If we are not going to reject all expansion and all inflation, if we are going to set up a body at all with which to deal with the matter from a conservative viewpoint, I know of no more conservative body than that which has been selected.

Mr. GLASS. The point of contention is that if there be inflation under that section of the bill—in other words, if that section of the bill shall be used—just in the measure that it shall be used for the purposes of the Treasury, the Federal Reserve System will be unable to respond to the legitimate requirements of commerce, industry, and agriculture.

Mr. BORAH. I take it that the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal Reserve banks will in passing upon that question take into consideration that very fact. I assume that they will be guarding the interests of the Federal Reserve banks and the interests which they are there to protect in conjunction with passing upon the question of the expansion of the currency.

The debate has ranged around what is known as the "greenback" laws more than the first section. Mr. President, much has been said in the way of criticism of paper money, but I call attention to the fact that there has never been a great emergency in the history of the world, where finance was involved, that the government involved did not rely in the last instance upon paper money to carry them through. Of course, it is an emergency matter, it is an emergency money; but it is nevertheless called upon in all great exigencies to supply that which cannot be secured without it.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator that I think that is the least objectionable provision of the bill and the most sensible, if any part of it is sensible.

Mr. BORAH. I thank the Senator.

It has been said that this money which is to be issued is just paper, nothing but paper. It is just paper. But, Mr. President, behind the paper and in support of the paper are all the brain, all the energy, all the integrity, all the patriotism, all the wealth of the United States. The honor of the United States supports it. It is issued under the old law of 1862, but it is issued with far more conservative provisions than accompanied the issuance in those days. Here there is a provision for a sinking fund and a provision as to how the money, when issued, shall be used, which makes it, in my judgment, a perfectly conservative provision. It is safe and sound if the wealth and the honor of the United States can make it so. It is called into existence purely as an emergency proposition and will be taken care of under normal conditions in a way that no one will suffer by reason of it.

Mr. President, we come to the portion of the bill to which I find it impossible to give my support.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, before the Senator leaves that section, does the Senator know of any objection, if we are going to issue $3,000,000,000 of currency, to paying the obligations of the United States which will have to be paid anyway in 1945? In other words, if we need 3 billions more of currency, though I doubt very much whether the Federal Reserve Board will issue that three billions, how would the Senator look upon our paying an obligation which we have to pay anyway in 1945, when we get the money?

Mr. BORAH. The Senator is speaking of the soldiers' bonus?

Mr. LONG. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. I do not care to discuss that until I hear the amendment which has been offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON]. That will come up for discussion later.

Mr. President, the provision of the bill, with reference to what we may call devaluing the gold in the dollar, seems to me to be the very reverse of what we are trying to do here. It seems to me to be distinctly a deflationary provision of the bill. It will counteract to a very marked degree, in my opinion, any benefit which might be derived from the other provisions of the bill. If we say to the business world that we may at some time in the future devalue the gold dollar, it is the most deflationary provision, in my opinion, that we could put into a measure dealing with the money question.

If I were called upon to enter into a contract to be concluded in 5 years or in 2 years, it would be practically impossible for me to do so with any degree of certainty as to my rights or as to the development of my business under such a contract. It might be of such and such a value one day and a different value on another day. Business requires some degree of certainty when we come to the question of entering into long-time contracts or into any form of business development. This provision of the bill will be calculated to sterilize any improvement of prices which might flow from the other provisions of the bill.

There is an element of uncertainty in it which cannot be foreseen. I do not say that I would not vote under some circumstances to reduce the value of the gold in the dollar. But it is one of those things which, as Shakespeare said:

If it were done, when 't is done, then 't were well
It were done quickly.

We cannot suspend the business world or rather hang a sword of Damocles over the business world in the nature of deflation of the dollar and not have a deflationary effect upon business.

I am not going to discuss the constitutional question, but it is here, and this puts another element of uncertainty into the matter. No one knows, nor can anyone know until the Supreme Court passes upon it, whether we have the power to delegate to the President the authority which we are here undertaking to give. That is another element of uncertainty. We not only have the element of uncertainty as to its constitutionality but we have the element of uncertainty flowing from the fact that the value may be changed. If this is not deflationary, I do not know what would constitute a deflationary factor in the business world. It is for that reason that if I have an opportunity I shall vote to strike out of the amendment the gold section.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. REED. I offered an amendment to strike out that section, but temporarily withheld it in order to allow the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] to offer an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma which I propose to strike out. As soon as the amendment of the Senator from Montana is voted on, I take it the question will recur on my amendment to strike out.

Mr. BORAH. No one, I presume, will contend that the constitutional question is beyond doubt. I am discussing it now not in order to demonstrate that it is unconstitutional, although I believe it is, but to demonstrate the fact that it puts an element of uncertainty into the program. It is claimed that the Supreme Court, in what is known as Field against Clark and the flexible-tariff decision, has announced a rule which makes safe or justifies the delegation of this particular power. I have always thought those decisions went to the limit and even beyond. Under the flexible-tariff decision it seems to me the Court has almost given Congress an unlimited authority with reference to delegating power to the President. But if Senators will examine the opinion, they will find that the Court requires certain rules and specifications with reference to the delegation of that power, a certain formula or a certain condition, which are not found in this amendment. Therefore we have the undetermined question as to whether this power can be delegated, which makes for uncertainty.

Then we have, secondly, the question of whether the dollar will have a certain gold content today and another, different content next year.

The friends of inflation ought to be far more concerned about this matter than those who are opposed to it, judging it wholly from the standpoint of securing the objective which they have in mind in passing the measure.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. I invite the Senator's attention to the fact that the Secretary of the Treasury is to be authorized to sell some 3-year bonds. It is stated that it is to be agreed on the face of the certificates that at maturity they will be paid in gold of the present standard of weight and fineness. Assuming that to be so and assuming that 60 or 90 days from now the number of grains of gold in a gold dollar has been reduced, I should like to have the Senator inform me what course the Treasury might pursue with respect to a new issue in view of the new content of the gold dollar?

Mr. BORAH. I do not know. The question of the Senator from North Carolina only emphasizes what I am trying to express—the uncertainty which inevitably enters into the entire monetary system of our country if this is made the law of the land.

Mr. BAILEY. One set of bonds would be payable in 23-grain dollars and the next set in 15-grain dollars. Is not that true?

Mr. BORAH. That would be true. I do not know whether the Secretary of the Treasury is in favor of this provision or not. I see smiles playing over the faces of those who are in a better position to know than I am, but I do not know how to interpret those smiles. I assume that if he is in favor of this provision he has thought out such matters as the able Senator from North Carolina has submitted, and therefore is prepared to meet them.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know whether the Senator wants to be diverted into a metaphysical discussion of the gold subject or not, but it does have some bearing upon the interpretation of the Constitution.

From 1923 to 1929 the normal increase in production and business in the world was about 3 percent per annum. The increase in the production of gold was about 2 percent during the same period. The normal increase in the amount of gold available for money was about 1.7 percent compared to the 3-percent increase in the volume of business, production, and exchange of commodities throughout the world.

For a number of years, taking the average increase in production, in gold, and in the transaction of business, gold has not kept pace with the world's business in the matter of increase. Looking ahead many years to some solution of the growing disparity between new gold and new business, and assuming that we should not change the gold content because of contracts that are outstanding, what is to be the final solution of the monetary situation which now seems to be harassing the entire world if we are "hog-tied" because of contracts that have been entered into in the past and cannot change the content of the gold dollar because it would affect some contract heretofore entered into? That is a subject which bothers me very considerably in arriving at a conclusion as to this particular section of the bill.

Mr. BORAH. The extent to which the Government may go in effecting a contract by change of the gold content of the dollar is, I think, an undetermined question, but certainly the Government did go a long way in the Legal Tender cases in indicating that all contracts must yield to the sovereign power when it is dealing with the question of a medium of exchange or standard of value.

Mr. BARKLEY. I assume that, of course, the word "regulate" in the Constitution, authorizing Congress to coin money and regulate the value thereof, is the same word "regulate" that is used in the authority conferred upon Congress to regulate commerce, which does not mean that it can put into operation a regulation once and for all, and that it never can be changed. I assume that this constitutional grant of power is a continuing power which may be exercised from time to time.

Mr. BORAH. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is inconceivable to me that when the Constitution says that Congress may regulate anything one regulation originally put in force is final, and that it never can be changed; and I am growing in the conviction that the same interpretation must be placed upon this particular part of the Constitution authorizing the coining of money and the regulation of the value thereof. If we are to look into the future and realize, as it seems to me we must realize, that as business grows, and the world becomes an advancing economic unit, and the amount of any one precious metal, whatever it may be, either gold or silver, falls behind the procession, we must find some other way by which to stabilize—or, if "stabilize" is not the right word, at least to try to keep money in its sound aspects in some proportion of growth with business in the world—that we must consider whether we are always to be tied to this particular fetish with respect to gold, as it happens to be gold that we are worrying about now, or any other metal that might have been used instead of gold.

Mr. BORAH. We could obviate the serious situation which the Senator paints for a time, at least, by remonetizing silver.

Mr. BARKLEY. I agree that that would be one way of doing it, but I am wondering whether, after all, that is the better way; whether, as the Senator said a while ago, it would be better to issue money based upon the entire wealth and the entire character of the Nation, which is the kind of greenbacks we are providing for in this amendment, rather than to have a double standard of value, which is objectionable to many people who believe in hard money.

Mr. BORAH. The Supreme Court, in the Legal Tender cases, used language in different places which may easily be construed into support of the contention that we may at any time change the gold content, notwithstanding contracts. The language is not clear, but it is certainly indicative of that trend. The court says here:

As in a state of civil society property of a citizen or subject is ownership, subject to the lawful demands of the sovereign, so contracts must be understood as made in reference to the possible exercise of the rightful authority of the Government, and no obligation of a contract can extend to the defeat of legitimate government authority.

That would indicate that the Court at that time was entertaining the view that all contracts would have to yield to the sovereign power of the Government in dealing with the monetary question; but aside from the constitutional question, of course, there is the question of policy—

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. And the moral question, which is quite as important in some respects as the constitutional question itself. I do not think any government ought to establish, even if it has the power to do so, the principle of disregarding or violating its own contracts; and I should say that even if we had no Constitution, because that is the basis of all business security. It is the basis of all prosperity. There can be no progress in business affairs unless that is conceded.

Mr. BARKLEY. I agree to that principle. By analogy, though, we might go further and say that if the Government, as a matter of morality, ought not to violate its own contracts, it ought not to enact legislation either permitting or compelling others to disregard or impair their contracts; and when we go that far, we go far enough to paralyze the Government in all of its functions, because there never can be a time when there will not be some outstanding contract that might be affected in its validity to some extent by an act that Congress might pass in pursuance of a constitutional authority.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am not going to discuss the details of this legislation at all. I rose simply to explain my views in connection with the vote which I shall cast against what is called the gold section of the bill. If that is defeated, I shall nevertheless vote for the passage of the measure. I hope it will be taken out of the bill; but I regard the other parts of the measure as of such transcendent importance that I shall vote for it, notwithstanding the fact that that may be retained in the bill, although I shall regard it as most unfortunate if it is, for, Mr. President, we cannot pursue any longer the policy which we have been pursuing for the last 4 years. We have undertaken in no effective way to deal with the question of the fall of commodity prices. Everyone concedes that an inflation of the currency will have the effect of causing a rise of commodity prices. If it is adequately and safely and securely controlled, in my judgment it can be made to serve the cause of the people without bringing the injuries or the detriments which have been prophesied upon the part of some of the opponents of the measure.

Unlimited inflation, of course, would be almost as destructive, if not quite so, as unlimited deflation. There certainly must be a middle course, however, where reasonable men may pursue a reasonable policy and secure adequate relief to our people through a rise in the price of commodities without bringing such disasters as accompanied the effort in Germany and in France, which were wholly different from the one with which we are dealing.

Mr. President, I hope the measure will be corrected in that respect and then passed. It is a move in the right direction. But we shall have to go further.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I rise to speak briefly in support of the Thomas amendment proposing, as I see it, to give President Roosevelt the power, within well-defined limitations, to do two things that are closely related:

First. To enter a world economic parley in which monetary stabilization is one of the most important elements of the world problem, with sufficiently flexible powers to leave him free to act for the best interests of the people of the United States.

Second. To use the leverage of a controlled currency, within the limitations of the measure, for the purpose of raising commodity prices.

It must be admitted that this is an unusual grant of power to the President; but much as I regret the situation in which we find ourselves, much as I regret the necessity of action such as the Senate is going to take today or tomorrow, at the same time I must confess it seems to me this grant of unusual powers is necessary.

The man who cannot rise to an emergency by doing unusual things to conquer the emergency is very likely to be defeated by the emergency. The same thing is true of a community, of a nation, of a civilization.

It is in my mind, and has been in my mind for some time, that we face such an emergency today. We face it as individuals, we face it as a nation, we face it as a civilization. We as individuals, we as a nation, we as a civilization must rise to meet the emergency.

That means that we shall have to do things which are unusual, which have in them elements of danger.

Of course monetary inflation, no matter how well-controlled, is dangerous. Of course uncontrolled inflation would be fatal, as it always has been. But, Mr. President, deflation also has its dangers; and to my mind we have reached this point. Controlled inflation has in it, as I have just said, elements of danger; but, on the other hand, continued deflation is more than dangerous. It is comparable to national suicide, in my judgment.

We need, and the world needs, higher commodity prices. Commodity prices are so low that commodities cannot be produced except at a loss. Since the value of capital investments, the value of securities, the value of debts themselves, to say nothing of wages and jobs which bring wages, all depend in the last analysis upon commodity prices. It is highly necessary that we obtain higher commodity prices.

In other words, there is good inflation as well as bad inflation. There is a necessary inflation. An inflation which restores a reasonable price level achieves a comparably equitable balance between debtors and creditors, and which leads toward a restoration of international trade on a fair exchange basis, is more than a good inflation. It is a necessary inflation.

Mr. President, there is no question as to the need of higher commodity prices; and I think it is just plainly impossible to have higher commodity prices without a cheaper dollar. The value of the dollar is the reciprocal of the value of all commodities. The dollar is our medium of exchange. It also is our measure of value. When commodity prices go down the value of the dollar in terms of commodities goes up; and it is just as inevitable that when commodity prices go up the value of the dollar in terms of commodities must come down.

The interest, the prosperity, in the last analysis the physical existence, of 95 percent of the people of this country depends upon either the production of commodities or the services rendered in connection with the distribution of commodities. The immediate interest of perhaps 5 percent depends upon dealing in money—handling the dollar, in other words—and I say that the interest of 95 percent is of transcendent importance as against the immediate interest of 5 percent.

The purpose of the Thomas amendment is to raise the commodity price level. That is in the interest of 95 percent of our people, and I am going to support that program.

It seems to me fundamental under our capitalistic system—and I want to continue that system; I do not want to go to state socialism or to communism—it is fundamental that we have living commodity prices. By "living commodity prices" I mean prices which afford a living to those who produce commodities.

Living commodity prices are in the best interest of producers; also they are in the best interest of consumers and in the best interest of labor.

This is because consumers—95 percent of them—are either producers or distributors of commodities or of services necessary in the production or distribution of commodities, because the wages of labor, in the last analysis, are paid from the prices received for commodities.

Mr. President, for the last few years we have seen commodity prices go down and down and down. For the last few years we have seen the reciprocal value of the dollar go up and up and up.

That reached the point where the dollar that a few years ago would exchange for 1 bushel of wheat would exchange for 3 bushels of wheat. I am citing wheat merely as an example. Wheat probably is the best single barometer of commodity prices, though it goes to extremes at times.

I say commodity prices have gone down and down and down. The reciprocal value of the dollar has gone up and up and up. What has been the result?

Has labor profited from cheap commodity prices, from the high dollar?

Labor has not profited. Lowered wage scales and 14,000,000 unemployed are sufficient answers to that question.

Has the consumer profited from the high dollar and low commodity prices?

The consumer has not profited. Millions of them are in breadlines. Other millions face the loss of their savings, the loss of their homes, the loss of their jobs.

No one would be foolish enough to assert that the producers have profited.

As a matter of fact, less than 5 percent of the population has profited from the deflation of commodity prices which has been going on, which has been allowed to go on through a misunderstanding of the fundamental laws of economics on the part of those in high places.

The profits of the 5 percent, if this deflation goes on to the bitter end, will prove only imaginary profits, because if the 5 percent gets hold of the things the 95 percent need for their existence and material well-being, then the 95 percent will satisfy their needs by force. That has been the history of mankind from the beginning, because those in power, the 5 percent who profit from dealing in money, have failed to understand the laws of economics in terms of human beings.

The reflation program of President Roosevelt, as embodied in the Thomas amendment, frankly and seriously proposes to force a deflation of the dollar, which is the same thing as an inflation of commodity prices.

As I read the bill and gather from what is going on—I hope that when it is accomplished one more step will be taken, which I will mention later—the program embraces three steps.

First. It authorizes the Federal Reserve Board, through open-market operations, to place as much as $3,000,000,000 of credit money in circulation.

Second. It authorizes the President, if the Federal Reserve System does not do this, or if the three billion is just transferred from one banking deposit vault to another deposit vault, or if the three billion does not result in sufficient rise in commodity prices, to issue $3,000,000,000 in greenbacks, with a provision for their retirement in 25 years.

Third. It authorizes the President to devalue the gold dollar. That is, he can reduce the gold content of the dollar as much as 50 percent, or one half, if he considers it necessary.

Now, as I understand it, that last provision would make possible a further expansion of $6,000,000,000 beyond what is possible at the present time.

All these powers are permissive. They may not be used. They may be used. President Roosevelt says they are necessary for him to have in these times. I am willing to intrust him with that power, then to hold him to account for the manner in which he uses that power—or those powers, to state it a little more accurately.

It seems to me, in this desperate situation, that it is necessary for these or similar powers to be lodged somewhere. Congress evidently cannot exercise them effectively in this emergency. I think we may as well admit that. Flexibility and quick decision are needed.

The Federal Reserve Board and the Federal Reserve System are too banker-minded—they honestly and conscientiously see the 5 percent as more important than the 95 percent—to be intrusted with these powers.

If these powers are to be granted, it is logical to give them to the President and then hold him accountable. He is the one more directly personally responsible than anyone to whom such powers can constitutionally be given.

What would be the effect of devaluing the dollar? Of course, many factors enter into this question. A categorical answer is hardly possible; but, in a general way, something like this could happen. We would be placed on an equality in world trade with other nations which have gone off the gold standard, or to a lower gold standard. We would have to trust to the success of the President in the coming world parleys to obtain agreements by which another world-wide depreciation in currencies would be stopped. I believe such an agreement is possible, even probable, if our President has enough flexible powers to enable him to negotiate without having his hands tied by inflexible monetary statutes and regulations.

It would tend to make our tariffs effective against depreciated currencies, subject, of course, to similar limitations as to the results of negotiations with other nations as to trade agreements and monetary stabilization on an international scale.

It would reduce the debts of the country and its people, as measured by commodities, toward the debt level at the time most of those debts were contracted, which is fair to both debtor and creditor and in the best interests of both. A creditor does not profit from a bankrupt debtor. Better be owed $1,000 which can be paid, with interest, than $2,000 which will be defaulted and the security for which, after Nation-wide defaults, will be worth considerably less than $1,000.

It would result in easing the tax burden, measured in commodities—and it is commodities which pay the taxes through the device of money. That is fundamental, as I see it.

There has been a lot of talk about what deflation of the dollar to meet commodities would do to life-insurance policies and to savings accounts, upon savings generally. These orators paint a terrible picture of the depreciation of all these forms of savings.

As to the man who has hoarded money, the picture probably is true. He has in his possession money with a value out of proportion to commodities. The hoarder would see the value of his hoardings diminish. But the one whose savings are invested in life-insurance policies, in savings banks, in savings accounts in the long run would benefit from the deflation of the dollar, provided that the inflation means is controlled, and it must and will be controlled. So the devastating picture these folks paint is not the true picture. Why is it not a true picture? To me the answer seems simple and very plain.

The deposits in savings banks, the money invested in life-insurance policies, are not held by the banks or by the insurance companies in the form of cash. These deposits, these insurance payments, are invested. What are they invested in? They are invested in farm mortgages, in city mortgages, in railroad stocks and bonds, in Government, State, and municipal bonds, in utility stocks and bonds.

The value of all these mortgages and stocks and bonds rests finally upon commodity prices. Farm mortgages are not good security, are not worth face value, when farm products cannot be sold at a profit. City mortgages depreciate rapidly in value—and they have done so—when the city people do not have jobs, when the city merchants do not have trade, when the city banks must remain liquid and cannot lend their money at a profit.

Railroad bonds and stocks are sure to depreciate—and they have depreciated—when the low prices of commodities make it unprofitable to ship freight.

Two thirds of the assets of life-insurance companies are invested in the class of securities I have just described. Cut the value of these investments in two—and that is what deflation has done—and insurance policies and savings accounts cannot be realized at their face value. Put up commodity prices and they will regain face value. That to me is A, B, C.

Mr. President, I will admit it is dangerous to change the base of our monetary system, but it is fatal to allow this deflation to go on unchecked; it is dangerous to allow it to go on for the length of time it will take for bankruptcies, foreclosures, more unemployment to complete the job of deflation.

I would rather pursue a dangerous course of action that holds some promise of carrying us through to safety than to stand still and see this Nation go through bankruptcy and possible disintegration.

There is one thing more that I consider necessary in dealing with the monetary system. After we have deflated the dollar and brought it to parity again with commodities we should stabilize its purchasing power through Federal control of the dollar and its subsidiary coin and currency. By Federal control I do not mean Federal Reserve control. I mean Federal control in the interest of producers and consumers, not simply in the interest of the money changers.

We want and need an honest dollar. An honest dollar or a scientific money is one with a constant buying power for commodities rather than a fixed weight of one commodity. Our whole tax and debt structure rests on commodity prices. If this is to be kept sound for creditor or debtor—I would say for creditor and debtor—it is commodity prices that must be kept stable, not the weight of gold for which a dollar may be exchanged.

Two more points, and I will close. In the first place, I am supporting the Wheeler amendment to give the President power to remonetize silver if that is found necessary to help reestablish foreign trade. If it is not necessary, I am bound up myself with a traditional philosophy of a gold base in our monetary system. But I can see where a bimetallic system, if sustained by international agreements, might lead to better conditions in world trade. I am willing to trust that power to President Roosevelt also.

I am perfectly aware of the controversy over silver. I do not claim to have any superior knowledge when it comes to monetary systems. But it does seem to me that many of the objections to bimetalism or symmetallism are based on political tradition rather than on economic laws. For those reasons I am supporting the Wheeler amendment.

The other point is this: Much has been made of Germany's inflation and its failure. We all admit its failure. Of course, we do not want anything like that. There is no reason why we should get anything like that from this measure. But the conditions here today and the conditions in Germany when it went wild on an inflation spree are not comparable. Germany had a gold shortage. We have the world's largest gold reserves, and these reserves have been impounded by our Government.

Germany had an unfavorable trade balance; we still have a favorable trade balance. Germany is far from being a self-sufficient nation. We are not, of course, self-sufficient, but we are as near being self-sufficient as any nation in the world. Germany balanced her budget with printing-press money. We have balanced ours—or made possible its being balanced—so far as operating expenses are concerned, before we considered a controlled inflation.

So, Mr. President, I have resolved my doubts in favor of the Roosevelt-Thomas amendment and am willing to try this dangerous course, entrusting its execution to the President with the limitations provided in the measure.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I wish to submit a request with a view to imposing a limitation on debate on the pending bill and amendments thereto.

I ask unanimous consent that after 2 o'clock tomorrow no Senator may speak more than once or longer than 15 minutes on the bill or on any amendment which may be pending or which may be offered.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the Senator from Oklahoma whether he is prepared to accept the so-called "bonus amendment" which I have offered as an amendment to his amendment, and which lies on the table and is to be printed, and which will come up for discussion tomorrow very early, I assume. I do not think it will take long to dispose of the amendment. I do not suppose it will require a lot of debate, but I think we ought to have at least an hour for anyone who wants to speak on that one amendment. I am assuming that perhaps, since the Senator from Oklahoma last year was one of the principal sponsors of the bonus legislation which was proposed then, he will accept this amendment to the so-called "Thomas amendment." If he will, that will eliminate any debate, and then I will be perfectly willing to agree to the unanimous-consent proposal.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a suggestion?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Yes; I should be very glad to have a suggestion.

Mr. REED. Regardless of the absence of the Senator from Oklahoma, the limitation proposed by the Senator from Arkansas would give any Senator a half hour to discuss the so-called "bonus amendment." A Senator could speak 15 minutes on the bill, and 15 minutes on the amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I am suggesting an hour. I do not think it will take long; but that is what a cloture arrangement would provide for, and I think that any Senator who wants to speak on as important a matter as the so-called "bonus amendment", providing for the immediate payment of the adjusted-service certificates, should have an hour in which to discuss it. I do not imagine there will be many speeches. I do not know.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have conferred with most of the Republican Members of the Senate, and I think they are entirely in favor of and in full accord with the proposal made by the Senator from Arkansas. I hope the Senator from Indiana may find it possible to conform his desires to the suggestion.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I note that the Senator from Oklahoma is now in the Chamber. I should like to have his attention, if I may. He was one of the leading advocates of the so-called "soldier-bonus legislation" proposed at the last session. I should like to ask the Senator whether he would be willing to accept the soldier-bonus amendment to his proposal. That would eliminate the necessity for any discussion.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I was fighting the battles of the soldier boys at the last session when the Senator was silent.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I did not hear the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I stated to the Senator that I was fighting for the soldiers at the last session when the Senator from Indiana was silent.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Not I, silent; surely!

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Now, the Senator comes in at this late date and asks me to accept an amendment to the pending amendment. Even though it be my own amendment, I must respectfully refuse.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I must respectfully deny the suggestion made with reference to me. If anyone ever fought for the soldiers' bonus, I supposed everybody knew that I did. I understand the Senator refuses to accept the amendment?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, the only speech of any length that I know of against the Thomas amendment, or for it, for that matter, is that which, I believe, is intended to be made tomorrow by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Fess], who is necessarily absent at this moment. I believe that those who are interested in the amendment will all be satisfied with the limitation proposed by the Senator from Arkansas. But might I ask him to couple with it a statement that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Fess] might be recognized when we meet tomorrow at 12 o'clock?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, do I understand the Senator from Indiana to have objected, or not? Where do we stand on this matter?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, unless we can have an hour, or 45 minutes, to discuss the bonus amendment, I shall have to object. I am willing to accept 45 minutes, and agree. In other words, if this amendment shall be excepted from the general provisions of the unanimous-consent agreement so that any Senator who may desire to discuss the bonus amendment may have 45 minutes, I am willing to agree to the unanimous-consent proposal. Otherwise I shall have to object.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I cannot make an exception of any particular amendment. We have had the pending bill before the Senate for a very long time, and we have had the pending amendment, the so-called "inflation amendment" up for consideration for several days. Some days ago those who were opposed to the amendment indicated their belief that a vote could be reached today. The debate on that amendment is almost exhausted, as I view it. Now an amendment entirely foreign to that is proposed by the Senator from Indiana, and it is asked that such a limitation on debate be imposed as would probably carry this bill over into next week.

I say frankly that if we can dispose of this measure tomorrow and make satisfactory arrangements with respect to the unfinished business to follow it, I hope to have an adjournment or recess over the week-end so as to afford Senators an opportunity for the transaction of business in their offices. Every Senator is receiving a large volume of mail, and, considering the number of hours we are devoting to the work of the Senate, it is a practical impossibility to make response to the large number of communications that have been received. I had hoped that an agreement could be reached looking toward the conclusion of this measure probably tomorrow.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Of course, if the Senator from Indiana objects, he has complete power to do so.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Arkansas that unless I change my mind between now and when the time comes to vote, I expect to vote for the inflation program; and I have been in sympathy with the Thomas amendment notwithstanding the unkind words hurled in my direction a moment ago. I am wondering if the Senator from Arkansas would be willing to agree to such a limitation as I shall now suggest, which would satisfy me, though I do not know if it would satisfy others who favor the bonus proposition. I suggest that we have 30 minutes on the bill and 15 minutes on the amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. No; I cannot do that. I think that would prolong the debate unnecessarily.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma rose.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Just a moment, and then I will yield to the Senator from Oklahoma. It seems to me, with a 30-minute limitation, considering the fact that the subject matter of the amendment of the Senator from Indiana has been discussed from time to time continuously throughout the last 2 years, that that limitation ought to be satisfactory to him. Now I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma, if I have the floor.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The suggestion is made that I have done the Senator from Indiana an unkind act. I am wondering if he considers that his effort to take my own bonus bill and offer it as an amendment to my own pending amendment was doing me a very kind act?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I thought it would be, because I am trying to pass two of the Senator's bills at the same time. [Laughter.]

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I shall be content to have one passed at this particular time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Of course, it is fair to say that many Members of the Senate who are giving support to the pending amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma, as is well known from the Record, are not in sympathy with the amendment to which the Senator from Indiana refers. I feel that the Senator from Indiana is exercising a very liberal imagination, if not a most comprehensive one, when he assumes to think that the Senator from Oklahoma could be expected, under present circumstances, to accept the bonus amendment as a provision of the so-called "inflation amendment."

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield for a second?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I am thoroughly sincere in my very earnest desire to have the bonus amendment added to the inflation program, and I hope the Senator from Arkansas will believe me when I state that I am not trying to be dilatory in the slightest degree.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I am not raising any question as to that.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I am anxious to have the inflation program go into effect at the earliest possible moment, because the country needs something that may help to relieve the unemployment situation. We have now thousands of our old soldiers who are in dire distress, especially as the result of the so-called "economy legislation." I am anxious to have money made available, and if my proposed amendment should be adopted it would distribute the money where it is most needed, and the $2,000,000,000 would at once be circulated throughout the country.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. If the Senator will pardon me, I do not think, particularly in view of his failure to agree to a limitation of debate, that he should now under present circumstances exhaust his argument in favor of the bonus amendment. I think he ought, at least, to agree on a limitation before he avails himself of the opportunity to discuss the question.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. STEIWER. Would the Senator from Arkansas consider substituting a different hour in his proposal? It occurs to me that possibly the Senator from Indiana would agree to the proposal if the hour were changed either to 3 or 4 o'clock. I am most anxious that we find a basis for agreement.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Of course, if we do that we forego any prospect or hope of concluding this bill at any time tomorrow, even though we should arrange to stay here until midnight. If we carry the bill over the end of the week, as is possible under the rules and practices prevailing in the Senate, we must be compelled to begin holding night sessions. I have not asked Senators to come here at unusual hours and neither has the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], who has been very kind in cooperating in the effort to secure action; the suggestion I have made, in my judgment, is a fair and liberal one, and I hope the Senator from Indiana will agree to it.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. I should like to know what the proposal is.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I have asked unanimous consent—and we have discussed the request for some 30 minutes—that on tomorrow after the hour of 2 o'clock no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 15 minutes on the bill or any amendment that may be pending or that may be offered thereto. That is the request I made, but I am having hard sailing with it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request submitted by the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, unless it can be arranged that we may have at least 40 minutes for anyone who wants to speak on the bonus amendment, I shall have to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I shall be compelled to announce that it will be necessary to lengthen the hours of daily meeting of the Senate, and that tomorrow I shall expect that we meet at 11 o'clock and continue in session until a very late hour.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH. It seems to me we are losing sight of the original intent of the pending legislation. It is known as "the farm relief bill." [Laughter.] It seems to me that if we are to keep faith with the farmers of the country, we ought to devote ourselves to bringing that relief. All Senators know that if any relief is to come to them from this bill the measure must be enacted in time to benefit them for this year's production.

The proposal now advanced to put still another trailer on this lengthening freight train is not fair to the farmers. We have absolutely proven to the farmers of the country that we do not consider them at all. Whenever a measure comes up here for their benefit, we branch off on some question of banking, some question involving the intricacies of currency, and lengthen the debate to prove our intellectual acumen and our knowledge of a subject that we do not know a thing about, and let the farmers go. [Laughter.]

I have sat here and listened to lengthy speeches. The leader of the majority has cooperated with me to try to bring about some conclusion of this measure, which is ostensibly for the benefit of the farmers, and here we are no nearer a conclusion than we were when it was first brought to the floor of the Senate. I do think that every Senator ought to consider whether his own pet schemes ought not to be subordinated to the necessities that are involved here.

I will admit that the inflation that is proposed may do the farmers more good, if properly carried out, than all the other elements in the so-called "farm relief bill"; I believe that an expansion of the currency will bring relief; but why we should bring in other extraneous matters and load up this bill and delay it is beyond my comprehension. If it is a farm bill, let us give the farmer relief; if it is for the bankers' relief, let us say so and settle down to be here until August.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I am going to submit another and different request for unanimous consent. I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow after the hour of 4 o'clock no Senator may speak more than once or longer than 15 minutes on the bill or any amendment that may be pending or that may be offered thereto.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I do not want to be in the position of objecting, but I wish to say that no fault can be found with the so-called "inflation element" for any time that has been taken up. I am for this proposed inflation. The administration did not decide to come out for inflation until a few days ago, and it took considerable talking to get the administration to see the light. I do not know whether or not we are going to go through with the first provision of the amendment providing for the $3,000,000,000 issue of Treasury notes. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] does not think so.

I have looked over the amendment of the Senator from Indiana this evening, and, as one of the original inflationists, I think that I have the right to say that it is a great deal sounder than the first provision of the pending amendment; and I want to see the amendment of the Senator from Indiana considered, because I have some hope that the administration may see fit to take the amendment that has been offered.

I think the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] is certainly within his rights, handling this measure as he is for the administration, in not accepting any amendment at this time. Of course, he has not had time to study it, and I can certainly see that the Senator from Oklahoma, who has led in the movement for inflationary and soldier relief, is consistent in not accepting it; but I hope that we will go ahead and dispose of the amendment of the Senator from Indiana, and I do not think he is asking too much.

I have heard, Mr. President—and I want the Senator from Arkansas to understand that what I am about to say has no reference to anybody in the Senate—that there have been a considerable number of New York conferences after midnight and before midnight around here, and that we are not going to get this inflation if we vote it in the bill. I am not casting any reflections on anybody, but I have heard a little bit more than I care to hear around here. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] is getting entirely too well satisfied to suit me. [Laughter.] So long as the Senator from Pennsylvania was "bucking at the bits", I knew there was hope, but when the Senator from Pennsylvania begins to urge speed I commence to wonder, and I want to look at this thing and to see just what it is all about.

I am going to urge all the speed possible, Mr. President, but I think the amendment of the Senator from Indiana is the only one that guarantees inflation. One great trouble is that the administration comes out for inflation after a good many of us have been fighting for it for a long time. We voted inflation on the Democratic side 23 to 44 before the President came out for it. I do not know how he is going to look on paying the soldiers, but I think we ought to take the amendment of the Senator from Indiana, because it not only pays them but it absolutely guarantees 2½ billion dollars of inflation, and it does not depend upon the ipse dixit of the President whether it shall be had or not. It is a good amendment to this bill, and there are going to be a number of Senators when they consider it who are going to want to vote for the amendment, because we have got to pay the soldiers the money in 1945 anyway, and if we shall vote the money it will get out all over the country. There are 3,000,000 men who are going to get that money. We know that it has got to be done, in any event, at some time. I repeat, Mr. President, that I am getting very skeptical of the conferences being held with Wall Street men around here again. They tell us we are not going to get inflation. I understand that they are getting to be pretty well satisfied that even though we vote it, the people are not going to get it. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] may have heard something like that. I hope he has not.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. I should not like by my silence to indicate that I have heard anything of that kind. I have not.

Mr. LONG. I did not understand the Senator. The Senator was smiling so that I was afraid he had knowledge that ought to be given to the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I do not know what the Senator from Louisiana has heard or dreamed. [Laughter.] I had hoped that we could make an adjustment that would bring about a vote on the amendment which he apparently has concluded is essential to the bill. I do not understand that there is anyone here so poorly informed on the subject of the bonus that he must listen to a 2- or 3-hour speech or a 4-hour speech from any of his colleagues in order to form a conclusion as to what is right about the matter. There is no proposal here now, and none has been made that would prevent a fair expression of opinion touching the amendment to be proposed.

My proposition is in the interest of a fairly prompt determination of the issues involved in the bill. I have extended the hour for the limitation to go into effect at 4 o'clock in the belief that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Robinson], as well as the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Fess], may, prior to the limitation taking effect, have an opportunity to exhaust their very great store of information on the pending subject. I say that in the belief that the Senator from Indiana will be willing to accept the suggestion which I have now made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request submitted by the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, it has been the custom in the past very largely, when we were endeavoring to arrange to hasten a vote, to limit debate to 30 minutes on the bill and 15 minutes on any amendment. I think time will be saved by doing that now. I will cheerfully agree to such a proposal as that. At the most, that would only give a Senator 45 minutes altogether to discuss the bonus amendment—15 minutes on the amendment and 30 minutes on the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator from Indiana. If the proposal were so worded as the Senator from Indiana has just suggested, would the Senator from Indiana be willing to have the agreement go into effect upon the convening of the Senate tomorrow?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Of course I would.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The difficulty about that is that other Senators will not agree to it.

Mr. LONG. Oh, yes, they will.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I happen to be informed to the contrary. However, I will submit the request that after the Senate convenes tomorrow no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 15 minutes on any amendment or motion that may be pending or that may be offered, nor longer than 30 minutes on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if the Senator will make that 2 o'clock I shall be glad to agree.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I thought so!

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, why should there be any exception in favor of any particular Senator? Many Senators have been waiting to be heard.

Mr. FESS. I object.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Of course, I was informed in advance that the objection would be made. I have no alternative except to repeat the suggestion that I last made and which was not formally objected to. I again ask unanimous consent that after the hour of 4 o'clock tomorrow no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 15 minutes on any amendment or motion that may be pending or that may be offered, or on the bill. I ask that the request be submitted to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I should like to be heard on that just a moment. I do not like to refuse a unanimous-consent request; I never have done so; but we have had notice from the author of one amendment here that it is the most important proposition since the fall of Adam, if we take his word for it. If it is, I do not see why it should be rushed through in such a great hurry.

The other observation is that the bill takes from the Congress practically the last vestige of its power and transfers it to the President. I think we ought to go about that deliberately and carefully and slowly and in the fear of God. In the matter of transferring to the President the powers which the people of North Carolina gave me, as a Senator, as a sacred and express trust, I would rather go about it very deliberately and take the remainder of the week, and longer if necessary, in order that each one of us may fully realize the import of the action taken. I do not want to object, but I suggest to our leader that we will lose nothing by taking our time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Does the Senator object?

Mr. BAILEY. I was making an appeal to the Senator from Arkansas rather than an objection. I hope I may be heard tomorrow. I have never delayed legislation. I have been heard at some length in one speech, but I am rather urging the Senator from Arkansas that in a matter so important we will lose nothing by taking plenty of time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I have presented my request and should like to have it determined. If the Senator from North Carolina is going to object, of course, that is his privilege.

Mr. BAILEY. I shall not object. I have made my statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well, Mr. President; I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. REED. Let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, let us have the amendment read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], for himself and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], to amend the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], on page 4, by striking out the words beginning with "By proclamation" in line 20 down to and including the words "foreign currencies" in line 24, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

By proclamation to fix the weight of the gold dollar in grains nine tenths fine and also to fix the weight of the silver dollar in grains nine tenths fine at a definite fixed ratio in relation to the gold dollar at such amounts as he finds necessary from his investigation to stabilize domestic prices or to protect the foreign commerce against the adverse effect of depreciated foreign currencies, and to provide for the unlimited coinage of such gold and silver at the ratio so fixed.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I should like to inquire what question is pending before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment just read by the clerk.

Mr. TYDINGS. What became of that part of the bill to which the Filipino amendment was applicable?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair is advised that when the Senator from Maryland offered his amendment it proved not to be in order, and he agreed to withhold it. The amendment just read is the pending amendment.

Mr. TYDINGS. May I ask the present occupant of the chair when my amendment will be in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. When the pending amendment is disposed of.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Dieterich	Lonergan	Shipstead
Bachman	Duffy	Long	Smith
Bailey	Erickson	McCarran	Steinwer
Bankhead	Fess	McGill	Stephens
Barbour	Fletcher	McNary	Thomas, Okla.
Barkley	George	Metcalf	Thomas, Utah
Bratton	Goldsborough	Murphy	Townsend
Brown	Gore	Neely	Trammell
Bulkley	Harrison	Norris	Tydings
Bulow	Hastings	Nye	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Hatfield	Overton	Van Nuys
Capper	Hayden	Pope	Wagner
Carey	Hebert	Reed	Walcott
Connally	Kean	Reynolds	Wheeler
Copeland	Kendrick	Robinson, Ark.	White
Couzens	Keyes	Robinson, Ind.
Cutting	King	Russell
Dickinson	Logan	Sheppard

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS.]

Mr. REED, Mr. LONG, and other Senators called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LOGAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], who is absent on account of illness. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when his name was called). On this question I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], who is unavoidably detained from the Senate. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WAGNER. Upon this question I am advised that my general pair, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. PATTERSON], would vote "nay", and that he is specially paired on this question with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN], who, if present, would vote "yea." I am therefore at liberty to vote, and vote "nay."

Mr. KENDRICK. I desire to announce that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] are necessarily detained from the Senate on official business.

I also desire to announce the following special pairs on this question:

The senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] with the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE]; and

The junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] with the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL].

The senior Senator from Virginia, if present, would vote "nay" on this amendment, and the junior Senator from Washington would vote "yea."

The junior Senator from Vermont, if present, would vote "nay" on the amendment, and the senior Senator from Washington would vote "yea."

Mr. HEBERT. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK];

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DALE] with the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO];

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]; and

The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE].

I also desire to announce the following special pair on this amendment:

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL] with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN]; and

If present, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL] and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DALE] would vote "nay", and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] would vote "yea."

I am informed that the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], if present, would vote "nay", and that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 41, nays 26, as follows:

YEAS—41

Adams	Duffy	McCarran	Sheppard
Bachman	Erickson	McGill	Shipstead
Bankhead	Fletcher	Murphy	Smith
Bratton	George	Neely	Thomas, Okla.

So Mr. WHEELER's amendment to the amendment of Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK subsequently said: Mr. President, I was temporarily called out of the Chamber, and did not get back in time to vote on the Wheeler amendment. I ask unanimous consent that my vote may be recorded in the affirmative on that amendment.

Mr. REED. I object to that, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I simply desire to state for the Record that if I had been present I would have voted for the Wheeler amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator may make that statement in the Record. It is against the rule, as the Chair understands, for a vote to be entered after the result has actually been announced.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I desire to make a motion by way of an amendment. On page 5, commencing on line 1, I move to strike out all down to and including line 18, including any amendments that may have been made to the first 18 lines.

Mr. SMITH. On what page?

Mr. REED. On page 5. It is the section providing for diminishing the gold content of the dollar.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Is the Senator ready for a vote on his amendment now?

Mr. REED. I desire to speak briefly on it, not more than 5 minutes; and then I understand that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Fess] desires to speak more at length. I suggest that we can finish that in the morning, if that is satisfactory to the Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I have been admonished by some Senators that it would now be practicable to get an agreement limiting debate. I submit again one of the propositions made a few moments ago, to which objection was then registered, under the assurance that the objection will not again be made.

I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, after the hour of 2 o'clock, no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 15 minutes on the bill, or any amendment or motion that may be pending, or that may be offered.

Mr. HATFIELD. That will be 30 minutes in all, Mr. President?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent agreement submitted by the Senator from Arkansas? The Chair hears none, and the unanimous-consent agreement is entered into.

The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Pennsylvania desires to speak on his amendment, and that the Senator from Ohio desires to discuss it at length.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if I may be recognized, I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Arkansas to move to take a recess until noon tomorrow, or to have the Senate go into executive session.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I am perfectly willing to go on with the bill; but I think no time would be saved, in view of the limitation that has been imposed.

Mr. REED obtained the floor.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President—

Mr. REED. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Arkansas for a motion to go into executive session.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate several messages from the President of the United States submitting nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

GREAT LAKES-ST. LAWRENCE DEEP WATERWAY TREATY

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Reports of committees are in order. If there be no reports of committees, the calendar is in order.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read Executive C (72d Cong., 2d sess.), a treaty between the United States and the Dominion of Canada for the completion of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence deep waterway, signed on July 18, 1932.

Mr. REED. I ask that the treaty go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The treaty will go over.

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Ernest J. King to be Chief, Bureau of Aeronautics, with rank of rear admiral.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Without objection, the President will be notified.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I object to the President being notified.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, that is agreeable to me. I have noticed, however, that in at least half the cases of confirmations at this session of Congress the President has been notified immediately on confirmation. I think the rule of the Senate that confirmations be carried over is a good one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the calendar.

The Senate resumed legislative session.

RECESS

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p.m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Thursday, April 27, 1933, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate April 26 (legislative day of Apr. 17), 1933

CONFIRMATION

*Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate April 26
(legislative day of Apr. 17), 1933*

PROMOTION IN THE NAVY

Ernest J. King to be Chief, Bureau of Aeronautics, with rank of rear admiral.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 26, 1933

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Vernon Norwood Ridgeley, D.D., pastor of Calvary Methodist Episcopal Church, Washington, D.C., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray. Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, be gracious unto us and hear us while we pray. Accept our thanks for the manifold blessings which Thou hast bestowed upon us and keep us from forgetting our dependence upon Thee. Forgive us our feverish ways, be merciful unto us, and pardon us when we go astray. In the hour of temptation strengthen us. In the time of uncertainty hasten to our aid and lead us by Thy spirit into the way of truth and righteousness. When the burdens of life press upon us sustain us by Thy grace and help us to minister to the needs of Thy children. Bless every act that has for its objective the welfare of mankind. Incline our hearts to do Thy will and obey Thy laws. Guard our homes; protect them from disease and evil. We ask it in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

H.R. 4225. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Allegheny River at or near Parkers Landing, in the county of Armstrong, Commonwealth of Pennsylvania; and

H.R. 4332. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Allegheny River at a point near the Forest-Venango county line, in Tionesta Township, and in the county of Forest, and in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. I ask unanimous consent to extend remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SPEAKER. Is there objection?
There was no objection.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Speaker, as a Representative from Minnesota, I hope that this resolution will be adopted. In passing upon the question whether the treaty with Canada for the construction of the St. Lawrence seaway shall be ratified, the Members of the Senate should have the opportunity to know what proportion of the cost will fall upon the Government of the United States. The cost to the Federal Government of the seaway as a navigation project will depend upon how much and what proportion of the total cost will be borne by the State of New York on account of the power its power authority will develop. Without that knowledge, without knowing whether the net cost to this Government for work in the international section of the St. Lawrence River shall be $137,000,000 or $47,000,000, the Senate cannot act intelligently and prudently.

Those who have spoken in opposition to this resolution have seen fit to go outside the issue here involved and have made lengthy arguments against the project itself. We from the Middle West welcome this discussion, for we believe in the St. Lawrence seaway and are willing to accept every opportunity to present the case in its behalf.

The opposition has been singularly inconsistent. In one breath our opponents have argued that the development of the St. Lawrence would be a wasteful expenditure of money because the river will not carry much commerce in any event; in the next breath they have expressed grave fears that the diversion of traffic to the new route would spell ruin to the ports of the Atlantic seaboard. Our opponents should hold a council and agree on their strategy.

They have told us that the project should not be considered further until an official economic survey has been made, ignoring the fact that at least 3 such surveys have already been conducted, 1 by the International Joint Commission, 1 by the Department of Commerce, and 1 by the St. Lawrence Commission of the United States. Each of these surveys has resulted in unqualified endorsement of the project.

Our opponents have said that 90 percent of the St. Lawrence system lies wholly within Canada and that the United States should not spend its money to develop it for navigation. The truth is that the distance from the head of the Lakes to Father Point is 1,676 miles, of which 1,270 miles, or 76 percent, is international water.

They have said that 98 percent of the ocean-going ships that would carry grain over the proposed seaway would be foreign bottoms. I do not know, nor do our opponents, what the percentage of foreign-owned ships would be. It would be the same as in every other ocean port through which American grain now passes. We have not been hearing objections to Federal appropriations for harbor improvements on the ground that foreign ships use the harbors.

They have said that 80 percent of the water power capable of development would be Canadian. We get our half of the power developed in international waters and pay one half of the cost. We pay not one dollar to develop power in Canadian waters.

They say that the proposed waterway could be operated only 7 months each year. Again they are inaccurate. Government observations carried on for over 20 years have shown that the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence are open for navigation an average of 233 days a year.

They have stated that the cost of the project would be more than double the estimates. Government engineers testifying before the subcommittee of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate testified that the cost under present conditions would be about 60 percent of the estimates.

They have said that under the pending treaty the United States would surrender Lake Michigan and make it an international lake. Our opponents do not distinguish between navigational and proprietary rights. We get the same navigational rights in the Canadian part of the St. Lawrence as the Canadians get in Lake Michigan. If the concessions do not balance, they are decidedly favorable to the United States.

Our opponents say that the pending treaty does not provide sufficient water diversion for the Chicago Drainage Canal or for the Mississippi River Channel. Adequate diversion with 50-percent over-age is provided for navigation. This Government is under no obligation to furnish Chicago with sewage-disposal facilities. These she should provide for her own citizens as every other great city is doing. Of course Canada and the United States have the responsibility of maintaining a water level in the Great Lakes adequate for the needs of transportation. Accordingly, they have limited water diversion, but the limitation applies to Georgian Bay on the other side as well as to Lake Michigan on ours.

It has been said that the western farmer cannot be saved 8 cents a bushel on grain transportation, because the total cost from Duluth to Montreal is only 4½ cents. This overlooks the fact that the present rates are abnormal, owing to the great number of bottoms which during the depression are willing to accept wheat as ballast. It should also be remembered that if ships bound for Liverpool could be loaded at Duluth and Chicago, the cost of reloading at Montreal would be eliminated.

Then it is said that the cost of developing the power generated would be so great that it could not compete with electricity developed by private power companies. This does not require any answer beyond the statement that the New York Power Authority is asking for the passage of the pending resolution.

It is argued that this project would not furnish employment to many men and, therefore, should give way to other projects which would require the use of more labor. General Brown, Chief Engineer for this Government, has stated that the contrary is true.

Finally, it is said that the Department of Commerce stated in 1926 that no attempt has been made to determine the amount of traffic which would move over the proposed route and the total amount of saving that would result. The Department stated specifically that there were 26,000,000 tons ready to move. The potential tonnage capable of development is, of course, not capable of ascertainment. One would be foolish to attempt to predict how much tonnage will pass through the Boston or New York Harbor 10 years hence. In these days, when developments come quickly, prophecy is a hazardous occupation.

The Middle West, as a land-locked region, demands this access to the oceans. It is determined no longer to tolerate isolation. We have contributed for many decades to build harbors and improve waterways elsewhere. Our turn has come, and we hope that that sense of fairness and cooperation which alone makes the existence of this Federal Union possible will prompt the representatives of other States and sections to help us realize our legitimate aspirations.

Mr. SNELL and Mr. RAYBURN rose.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, at the appropriate time I desire to be recognized against the motion to recommit. This is the unfinished business before the House.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I am on my feet demanding recognition. The previous question has not been ordered.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I certainly shall object to the establishment of any precedent of debating motions to recommit.

Mr. SNELL. This is not a precedent. Motion to close debate by ordering the previous question has not been made. This is the unfinished business before the House.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question. I think I have the right to make this motion.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question on the motion to recommit.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, is it proper procedure, when one Member has obtained recognition, for another Member to be recognized? The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] had the floor and was recognized.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognized the gentleman from New York to ascertain for what purpose he rose.

Mr. RICH. Is it proper procedure for the Chair now to recognize the gentleman from Texas?

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. PARKER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas may have 5 minutes and that I may have 5 minutes, in which to discuss my motion to recommit. Very few Members were in the House when the motion was submitted yesterday. Very few of the Members understand the motion. I think it no more than fair that this request be granted.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I do not direct my remarks at the gentleman from New York or this particular motion, but I do believe it is very bad practice to start debating motions to recommit. This matter is supposed to be called to the attention of the House, or the committee, in the course of general debate. The gentleman had the opportunity to state to the House that he was going to move to recommit, and also to state the nature of his motion.

I feel compelled to preserve the customary practice of the House.

Mr. Speaker, I object to any debate on the motion to recommit.

Mr. PARKER of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I will withhold it, but not for debate.

Mr. PARKER of New York. The gentleman knows as well as I that but few Members were in the House when this motion was made. I doubt if there are 20 men in the House who know what the motion is.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Is not the motion to recommit simply an expression of the House of Representatives that a vote in favor of the motion to recommit does not mean a vote for or against ratification of the treaty?

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. PARKER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk read the motion to recommit so the House at least may know the substance of the motion. So that the House may at least know—

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I object to any further discussion of this proposition. The regular order has been demanded, and it seems to me we ought to have it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. PARKER of New York moves to recommit the resolution to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce with instructions to that committee to report the same back to the House forthwith with the following amendment:

"At the end of the resolution insert 'Provided, That the passage of this resolution shall be in no way construed as an expression of the attitude of the House as to the merits of the proposed treaty between the United States and Canada.'"

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PARKER of New York) there were—ayes 60, noes 86.

Mr. PARKER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and ninety-four Members present, not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 171, nays 224, answered "present" 1, not voting 35, as follows:

Mr. Sullivan with Mr. Burke of California.
Mr. Gambrill with Mr. Brand.
Mr. Cox with Mr. Montague.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.
The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. SABATH and Mr. BRITTEN demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I demand tellers.

Tellers were refused.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. RAYBURN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXEMPTION OF PARENTS OF CITIZENS OF THE UNITED STATES FROM THE QUOTA

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to file minority views on the bill (H.R. 3519) to exempt from the quota parents of citizens of the United States, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

SALARIES OF THE FEDERAL JUDICIARY

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, when Congress, somewhat over a year ago, set about to reduce Federal expenditures to try to balance the Federal Budget, a number of economies were invoked by way of cutting out Government activities and, particularly, in the matter of reducing the salaries paid Government employees and officials.

In the last Congress the so-called "economy bill" made a flat reduction of 8½ percent in the salaries of all Government employees. The salaries of Members of Congress were reduced 10 percent. Other activities were curtailed. A gigantic movement was started to balance the Federal Budget in the interest of reestablishing the credit of the Government.

Again this year drastic economies have been put into effect. Under authority granted the President, a reduction of 15 percent has been made in the salaries of all Federal employees, including Members of the House, the Senate, and the Cabinet. Veterans' benefits and pensions and hospitalization privileges have been cut to the core. Though protected by the Constitution, President Hoover and President Roosevelt, voluntarily, and in the spirit of the Economy Act, returned to the Treasury proportionate parts of their salaries. Every person in the Federal establishment has made his contribution to the reestablishment of an economic condition of safety in this country except one class of Government employees, and this class is the Federal judiciary.

In the economy bill Congress included a very polite invitation to these gentlemen to contribute voluntarily their proportionate part of their salaries to meet the situation.

Section 7 of the Economy Act of 1933 is as follows:

In any case in which the application of the provisions of this title to any person would result in a diminution of compensation prohibited by the Constitution, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to accept from such person, and cover into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts, remittance of such part of the compensation of such person as would not be paid to him if such diminution of compensation were not prohibited.

Notwithstanding this invitation to the judiciary, to date the impressive sum of $716 has been turned back into the Treasury by members of the Federal judiciary. One circuit judge sent two checks of $125—one dated September 1, 1932, and the other dated September 13, 1932. Having thus apparently eased his conscience he forgot about the matter in the future. Another Federal judge on September 10, 1932, sent a check for $83.33 and on October 7, 1932, a similar check and felt he had discharged his duty in the emergency and forgot remittances in the future. Another Federal judge on December 17, 1932, sent to the Treasury a check for $200 and on February 7, 1933, a check for $100, and no further remittances have come from this member of the judiciary, making a total of $716.66. Yet a fourth Federal judge has recently written to the Treasury Department he feels that he should contribute 15 percent of his salary to the Federal Treasury.

No other member of this favored and protected group of employees has exhibited the slightest concern in the sad plight of the public purse.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Will the gentleman state the number of Federal judges?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. CELLER. If the gentleman will permit, I think the names of those judges ought to be put in the RECORD.

Mr. WOODRUM. There are 151 Federal district judges, whose salaries are $10,000. There are 40 United States circuit judges, whose salaries are $12,500. There are 9 members of the Supreme Court. The Chief Justice gets $20,500 and the Associate Justices $20,000 each.

All of these gentlemen are appointed for life. They do not have to toss upon weary pillows of political uncertainty, nor do they have to look forward with dread to that day when a fickle constituency will retire them back to the humble walks of life and they have to look the poorhouse straight in the eye, because a generous Government has provided that when retirement time comes, at 70 years of age, they are to be retired, if you please, at full pay.

Mr. Speaker, when a Federal judge walks up the marble steps to his office in the morning, the janitor who salutes him at the doorstep, the Federal attorneys who appear before him, and every officer and employee of his court, including the charwoman, whose gnarled hands and bent form have cleaned the cuspidors in his office, are making regularly out of the little pittance the Government pays them their contribution of 15 percent to help to bring back economic solidarity in this country.

The total amount paid to the Federal judiciary is something over $3,000,000 per annum. If they should contribute from their salaries on the same basis as all other employees of office, which amendment will permit the Congress of the United States to fix the salary of the Federal judiciary, just as it fixes the salary of every other employee. [Applause.]

I yield to no man in appreciation of the honor and dignity of the judiciary, but to my mind its attitude in the present emergency in failing to cooperate along with other citizens is a shocking disregard of the efforts being made by the employees of the Government, often at a great sacrifice, to bring our Government back to a safe economic condition.

I propose a constitutional amendment repealing that portion of the Constitution which provides that the compensation of Federal judges cannot be reduced during their terms of office, which amendment will permit the Congress of the United States to fix the salary of the Federal judiciary, just as it fixes the salary of every other employee. [Applause.]

The proposal is as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three fourths of the several States.

“ARTICLE —

“SECTION 1. Section 1 of article III of the Constitution of the United States is hereby repealed.

“SEC. 2. The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The judges, both of the Supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behavior, and shall, at stated times, receive for their services compensation to be ascertained by law.

“SEC. 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within 7 years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress.”

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM. I ask for 1 minute more.

[Cries of “Take 5 minutes!”]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GAVAGAN. I object.

Mr. HASTINGS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have 2 minutes more.

Mr. WOODRUM. That is all I wish to say at present.

IMPEACHMENT OF JUDGE JAMES A. LOWELL

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of constitutional privilege. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, on my own responsibility, as a Member of this House, I impeach James A. Lowell, a United States district judge for the district of Massachusetts, for high crimes and misdemeanors. In substantiation of this impeachment I specify the following charges:

First. I charge that the said James A. Lowell, having been nominated by the President of the United States and confirmed by the Senate of the United States, duly qualified and commissioned, and while acting as district judge for the district of Massachusetts, did on divers and various occasions so abuse the powers of his high office and so misconduct himself as to be guilty of favoritism, oppression, and judicial misconduct, whereby he has brought the administration of justice in said district in the court of which he is judge into disrepute by his aforesaid misconduct and acts, and is guilty of misbehavior and misconduct, falling under the constitutional provision as ground for impeachment and removal from office.

Second. I charge that the said James A. Lowell did knowingly and willfully violate his oath to support the Constitution in his refusal to comply with the provisions of article IV, section 2, clause 2, of the Constitution of the United States, wherein it is provided:

A person charged in any State with treason, felony, or other crime, who shall flee from justice and be found in another State, shall, on demand of the executive authority of the State from which he fled, be delivered up, to be removed to the State having jurisdiction of the crime.

Third. I charge that the said James A. Lowell did, on the 24th day of April, 1933, unlawfully, willfully, and contrary to well-established law, order the discharge from custody of one George Crawford, who had been regularly indicted for first-degree murder in Loudoun County, Va., had confessed his crime, and whose extradition from the State of Massachusetts had, after full hearing and investigation, been officially ordered by Joseph B. Ely, Governor of the State of Massachusetts.

Fourth. I charge that the said James A. Lowell did deliberately and willfully by ordering the release of said George Crawford, unlawfully and contrary to the law in such cases made and provided, seek to defeat the ends of justice and to prevent the said George Crawford from being duly and regularly tried in the tribunal having jurisdiction thereof for the crime with which he is charged, to which he had confessed.

Fifth. I charge that the said James A. Lowell did on the said 24th day of April 1933 willfully, deliberately, and viciously attempt to nullify the operation of the laws for the punishment of crime of the State of Virginia and many other States in the Union, notwithstanding numerous decisions directly to the contrary by the Supreme Court of the United States, all of which decisions were brought to the attention of the said judge by the attorney general of Massachusetts and the Commonwealth's attorney of Loudoun County, Va., at the time of said action.

Sixth. I further charge that the said James A. Lowell, on the said 24th day of April 1933, in rendering said decision did use his judicial position for the unlawful purpose of casting aspersions upon and attempting to bring disrepute upon the administration of law in the Commonwealth of Virginia and various other States in this Union, and that in so doing he used the following language:

I say this whole thing is absolutely wrong. It goes against my Yankee common sense to have a case go on trial for 2 or 3 years and then have the whole thing thrown out by the Supreme Court.

They say justice is blind. Justice should not be as blind as a bat. In this case it would be if a writ of habeas corpus were denied.

Why should I send a negro back from Boston to Virginia, when I know and everybody knows that the Supreme Court will say that the trial is illegal? The only persons who would get any good out of it would be the lawyers.

Governor Ely in signing the extradition papers was bound only by the question of whether the indictment from Virginia is in order. But why shouldn't I, sitting here in this court, have a different constitutional outlook from the governor who sits on the case merely to see if the indictment satisfies the law in Virginia?

I keep on good terms with Chief Justice Rugg, of the Massachusetts Supreme Court, but I don't have to keep on good terms with the chief justice of Virginia, because I don't have to see him.

I'd rather be wrong on my law than give my sanction to legal nonsense.

Seventh. I further charge that the said James A. Lowell has been arbitrary, capricious, and czarlike in the administration of the duties of his high office and has been grossly and willfully indifferent to the rights of litigants in his court, particularly in the case of George Crawford against Frank G. Hale.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution of impeachment, and I ask that it be read, and move its immediate consideration by the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 120

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary is authorized and directed, as a whole or by subcommittee, to inquire into and investigate the official conduct of James A. Lowell, a district judge for the United States District Court for the District of Massachusetts, to determine whether in the opinion of said committee he has been guilty of any high crime or misdemeanor which in the contemplation of the Constitution requires the interposition of the constitutional powers of the House. Said committee shall report its findings to the House, together with such resolution of impeachment or other recommendation as it deems proper.

Sec. 2. For the purpose of this resolution the committee is authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, to employ such clerical, stenographic, and other assistance, to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, and to take such testimony, to have such printing and binding done, and to make such expenditures, not exceeding $5,000, as it deems necessary.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, in the discussion of this resolution, I think I should lay before you some of the facts in this case that bring the matter to this House.

I want it distinctly understood that there is no race question involved here. I may say—and I think I may say it with pride for my Commonwealth—that there is no race question in the Commonwealth of Virginia.

That does not enter into this thing at all. The question here involved and the question that has brought the situation about is whether or not a Federal judge, elected for life, has the right and power, unchallenged, to disregard the Constitution of the United States, to flaunt the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, flaunt the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and to flaunt the laws of the State of Virginia.

Let me tell you something about the facts in this case: I say, first, that this judge granted this writ of habeas corpus to a self-confessed murderer, duly indicted by competent grand jurors in the Commonwealth of Virginia. His extradition had been asked for of the Governor of Massachusetts by the Governor of Virginia, and granted.

On that extradition proceeding full and complete hearings had been had, both for the accused and for the Commonwealth.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I will ask the gentleman to wait until I have used at least 10 minutes. The gentleman will pardon me. Based on that investigation the Governor of Massachusetts decided that the papers were in order, that the identity of the prisoner was established, and ordered that requisition papers be issued. In compliance with that and with the request of the Governor of Virginia, Governor Ely, of Massachusetts, ordered this self-confessed murderer returned to the only tribunal in the world that had the right to try him for the crime to which he had confessed, namely, the circuit court of Loudoun County, Va. Thereupon Crawford applied for a writ of habeas corpus, which was granted by this Judge Lowell, and the purpose of that order granting the writ of habeas corpus was to turn loose upon the people of this country a self-confessed murderer before he had ever been tried. Happily an appeal by the State of Massachusetts has, I am informed, prevented the release of the accused from custody.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. May I proceed for at least 10 minutes?

Mr. LUCE. Will the gentleman yield before he concludes?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Yes. I want this House to know something about the facts of this case. Let me tell them to you in chronological order.

On the morning of January 13, 1932, Mrs. Agnes B. Ilsley, a prominent lady and a former resident of Wisconsin, together with Mrs. Mina Buckner, her companion, were found murdered in their rooms, both parties having been killed while asleep in their beds. Evidence discloses that the house had been broken into and that the two women had been murdered and property stolen from the house. On the same night Mrs. Ilsley's automobile was stolen.

A negro by the name of George Crawford, a former convict and a former employee of Mrs. Ilsley, was suspected of having committed the crime, as Mrs. Ilsley had had a criminal warrant sworn out against the said Crawford for house-breaking, and Crawford knew the charge had been lodged against him. The authorities were informed by various witnesses that Crawford and an unknown companion were seen in the vicinity of the home of Mrs. Ilsley, which is Middleburg, Va., on the afternoon preceding the night of the killing. A Nation-wide hunt was made for this man for a period of a year.

In February 1932 the said Crawford was indicted by a regular grand jury for the crime of murder in the first degree.

On January 13, 1933, Crawford was arrested in Boston on a charge of housebreaking. He was later identified by the State Department, by means of his finger prints, as the man wanted for the commission of the two brutal murders in Middleburg, Va.

Immediately upon receipt of the information of his arrest on the 17th of January, John Galleher, Commonwealth's attorney of Loudoun County, Va., went to Boston, where, on the next day, he obtained a sworn written confession from Crawford that he and another man had committed double murder in Virginia. This confession was made freely, frankly, without duress, and without the promise or hope of reward, he having stated in his confession that he was guilty of the crime and that he and his accomplice were planning to enter the home of Mr. Ilsley when she drove up in her car; that they hid in the tall grass and watched her put her automobile in the garage and enter the house. After waiting for a short while to permit her to retire, these two men entered this house knowing that it was occupied and committed two of the most brutal murders ever known. This confession was under oath and in writing but was not signed, as counsel had interceded before the record could be transcribed.

I have here and will submit for the inspection of the Judiciary Committee at the proper time his confession to that crime.

On January 17 petition was filed with the Governor of the Commonwealth of Virginia for extradition upon the Governor of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts for the return of Crawford. Extradition papers were received in Boston on January 21, but before their receipt notice was filed with Governor Ely's office by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People that they wished a hearing in the matter. This association was represented by two lawyers. The hearing was begun on the 24th day of January, and after 3 days was continued over until the 7th of February. It was concluded on the 9th of February.

On the 17th day of February Governor Ely granted the request of the Governor of Virginia for the extradition of Crawford and a warrant was issued and delivered to the State police. On that same day counsel for Crawford filed a petition for a writ of habeas corpus in the United States District Court for the District of Massachusetts. The only grounds for the writ were to the effect that Crawford could not lawfully be held by virtue of the extradition warrant, as it is in violation of the Constitution and of the laws of the United States and the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, in that he is not the person by name designated in said warrant or order, nor so to be taken, or held under the terms of the authority thereof; that said warrant or order does not upon its face or by its recital purport to authorize the taking or detention of the said George Crawford, and that the said Crawford is not the person alleged to have committed the crime set forth or exhibited in the demand for extradition.

Upon the return day of the writ Mr. S. D. Bacigalupo, assistant attorney general of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, representing the Governor of Massachusetts, filed answer on behalf of the respondent, Frank G. Hale, the police officer who held the extradition warrant. The matter was originally set for hearing on March 20, but was continued from time to time until April 24.

On April 24 the case was set down for hearing at 10 o'clock a.m. before Judge Lowell, judge of the district court for the district of Massachusetts. No question was raised at the hearing as to denying the identity of the fugitive. No question was raised at the hearing which questioned the jurisdiction of the court which returned the indictment. The Commonwealth of Massachusetts protested against the admissibility of the affidavit with reference to the drawing of juries, stating that the United States Supreme Court had held a long line of cases that matters affecting the insufficiency of an indictment, which was not apparent on its face, could not be raised in a habeas corpus proceeding; that the indictment in this case on its face admitted to be sufficient, as found by Governor Ely.

The United States Supreme Court has continuously held that matters of this character cannot be raised in a habeas corpus proceeding, but the fugitive must be returned to the court which found the indictment, in which court the question of sufficiency of the indictment may be raised, and if conviction is had, the fugitive has his right in the appellate courts.

Judge Lowell granted the habeas corpus, and gave as his reason therefor that he was certain that the United States Supreme Court would not uphold the verdict of conviction should Crawford be returned to Virginia and convicted, because it is not customary in that State to have Negroes on juries.

This judge deliberately ignored or was ignorant of the law to such a violent extent that his continued service on the bench is a menace to the peace and good order of the Nation.

I do not contend that a judge may be impeached on an honest difference of opinion as to the law or for an erroneous decision of a case where he acts in good faith, but I do aver and proclaim that a judge is impeachable who is either (1) so ignorant of the law that it amounts to flagrant incompetency; or (2) who knowing the law deliberately, wilfully, and knowingly, in direct contravention of the Constitution and well-established precedent and authorities of the courts of last resort releases on the world a self-confessed murderer of the most vicious type.

When the white heat of indignation concerning this outrageous action on the part of James A. Lowell shall subside, it may be said and contended that to seek his impeachment is a resort to harsh methods. In reply, I call attention to the fact that Federal judges are elected for life, and that the only method of discipline and the only power for punishment lies through impeachment proceedings in this House. When a Federal judge arrogates to himself such power that he is no longer amenable to the mandates of the Constitution or the decisions of the Supreme Court there is no other remedy than impeachment.

If the press quotes him correctly, he has referred to the efforts of the sovereign State of Virginia to bring to trial this fiendish murderer as "a piece of stage play." He will doubtless characterize this proceeding in the same category.

If the press quotes him correctly, he has expressed his indifference and contempt for the Members of this House who will seek to bring him to the bar for his misdeeds.

I wish to say in this connection that I have not taken the responsibility of initiating these proceedings without due deliberation and thought, and so far as I am concerned this proceeding will be cool, calm, and dignified, but an earnest effort will be made to remove this man from the Federal bench, and thereby issue a warning to others that the rights of sovereign States to solemn mandates of the Constitution and that the unbroken decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States may not be lightly flaunted in the people's face.

I am not a novice in judicial experience. I served for many years as a member of the judiciary of the Mother of States, and I say to you, with all solemnity and seriousness, when a human being who has perchance been elevated to a position where he passes upon the rights and liberties of human beings, when he loses the common touch with his fellow man, when he loses his perspective of equality by reason of his vanity and false pride in the position to which he has been elevated, then he has lost the primary and fundamental elements of a competent jurist, and his continuation upon the bench is a menace to the peace and good order of his country and to the fair and equal administration of justice.

It is, therefore, with a feeling of the utmost solemnity and seriousness that I have offered this resolution and ask its immediate adoption.

In closing let me remind the House again that by his conduct on the bench this man has defied the laws of the sovereign Commonwealth of Virginia.

He has flaunted the solemn order of rendition of the Governor of the sovereign Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

He has flagrantly and boastfully violated section 2, article IV, of the Constitution of the United States.

He has deliberately and knowingly attempted to override and ignore the plain decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States on the very identical question here involved.

And if the press of today quotes him correctly, he has publicly expressed his contempt for those Members of Congress who would dare to rebuke him for his misconduct.

The issuance of this writ of habeas corpus, ordering the release of the accused, was ordered in the face of his fingerprints, in the face of the testimony of numerous witnesses who had seen him near the scene of the crime on the afternoon before, and in the face of his written confession—a confession made not alone to the authorities of Virginia but made before an officer of the State of Massachusetts.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order against the gentleman's using the word "confession." The gentleman has admitted that the "confession" is not signed. I think until the gentleman produces some sworn evidence by some competent witnesses that the confession was made that language to the effect that a confession was made should be kept out of the RECORD.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I am confident that the gentleman from New York is too good a lawyer to seriously make that point of order. I have nothing further to say upon the point of order.

Mr. BLACK. The gentleman has repeatedly used the word "confession."

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. And I use it again.

Mr. BLACK. And the gentleman has said that it is not signed. The gentleman has not stated there were witnesses to the confession. I think in all fairness the language should not be used.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that this is a matter to be substantiated before the Committee on the Judiciary. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. All of that, I repeat, Mr. Speaker, is a matter fully proven and confessed by the accused in the presence of numerous witnesses, if the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLACK] wants to know. And I shall be glad, when I have concluded, if the gentleman from New York has any lingering doubts as to whether something should be done about this, to have him read the confession. Sworn or unsworn, it is a voluntary statement of the accused, and it makes no difference whether it is sworn to or not. He said it.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. LUCE. The gentleman under the rules has 1 hour, at the conclusion of which time he may move the previous question. I ask the gentleman if those who will present contrary views to those expressed by the gentleman may have the opportunity, when he has finished, to have the remaining time?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I will yield a reasonable proportion of the time, but somebody else on this side may want to be heard also. How much time would the gentleman like to have?

Mr. LUCE. I should like to have half of the hour.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I am sorry, but I will not be able to yield that much time.

Mr. LUCE. I call attention of the gentleman to the fact that Judge Lowell is my constituent, and it is not only my duty but my right to represent him here. Also, he has been my personal friend for many years. I am asking simply for fair play. Is there any man in this House who will refuse fair play? I now ask the gentleman how much time he will yield me?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I should be glad to yield the gentleman 10 minutes.

Mr. LUCE. Ten minutes, while the gentleman has 50 minutes; does he consider that fair play?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I shall yield the gentleman 10 minutes. There will be ample time later to discuss the merits, if the Judiciary Committee recommends impeachment proceedings.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I submit to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts that in yielding to him 10 minutes the gentleman from Virginia has shown more fair play than Judge Lowell showed the Commonwealth of Virginia and the people of the United States.

Mr. LUCE. I shall, of course, have to accept the 10 minutes.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, may I suggest to the gentleman that I can see no good object to be gained by a general discussion of this matter further than the statement made by the gentleman from Virginia. I agree that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] should have some time, of course.

I suggest to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] that perhaps we can come to an agreement to that effect, that the gentleman yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] with the understanding that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] and the gentleman from Massachusetts shall be the only speakers upon either side of this proposition. [Applause.]

Mr. GAVAGAN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Would it be possible for the gentleman to yield me 5 minutes to discuss the juridical questions involved?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I believe there has been unanimous consent granted to allow only two speakers.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield? I would object to that unanimous-consent agreement. Why should only two Members of the House have something to say on this question?

Mr. BYRNS. May I say that the juridical question, as the gentleman puts it, is a matter to be considered by the Committee on the Judiciary and not for this House. [Applause.] It seems to me that this is a matter which should be disposed of with full opportunity to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] to present his side of the matter, and then permit the Committee on the Judiciary to pass upon the legal questions, and, of course, they will be glad to give my friend from New York [Mr. GAVAGAN] an opportunity to appear before them for any proper time.

Mr. LUCE. Then I understand the gentleman accepts the suggestion that I have 15 minutes?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Yes; and no further speakers on the question.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. Do I understand the gravamen of the gentleman's impeachment is that the judge failed to exercise proper discretion in the granting of a writ and discharging of the prisoner as well as his gratuitous remarks concerning the Commonwealth of Virginia?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I charge, and I have so stated, that this judge deliberately violated his constitutional oath to maintain and uphold the Constitution of the United States and the laws thereof. I say that when a judge deliberately and purposely refuses to carry out the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, and further, that when he deliberately refuses to be governed by decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States on a question that is before him, if he cannot be impeached for that, how is he ever going to be gotten rid of? I am not going into this question of impeachment further on the merits of the case, because the sole purpose of this discussion today is to obtain, if I can, the passage of the resolution of investigation, which will put up to the Committee on the Judiciary of this House the investigation of the whole question—the conduct of the judge and the judicial questions involved—and then to report to this House whether he should be impeached or reprimanded or whether he should be permitted to go on his way and turn some more murderers loose.

Mr. CELLER. I respect the gentleman's judgment, and I simply asked whether the judge was exercising any discretion in this particular case, and if the gentleman feels the judge has gone so far afield in the proper exercise of discretion that he should be impeached.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. If I did not, I would not be here this morning. This matter is no joke with me.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I do not believe this is the proper place to discuss the merits of this matter, because it will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary; but I call the attention of the gentleman to this situation: rather than proceeding, as is usually done, by submitting his articles of impeachment and having them referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, the gentleman has asked the House to adopt a resolution, and I believe in all fairness, on the question of the adoption of the resolution, more than one side should be heard. I do not mean we should have general debate, but the gentleman is asking the House to adopt the resolution.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Merely a resolution of investigation.

Mr. O'CONNOR. But it is a resolution which the gentleman is asking us to pass judgment on. I believe the other side should be heard to some extent.

Mr. GAVAGAN. The gentleman proposing the resolution has 50 minutes and the opponents only 10 minutes.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. BLAND. I asked the gentleman to yield for the purpose of reminding him that if 15 minutes is to be accorded the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] the gentleman should reserve sufficient time out of the hour to move the previous question.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. O'MALLEY. This woman who was murdered happened at one time to have been a resident taxpayer of my district, according to information furnished by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE]. Has the action of this Federal judge prevented the Commonwealth of Virginia bringing this confessed murderer to trial?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Yes; and that is what it is all about this morning.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I say in respect to the State of Wisconsin that I believe the people of the State of Wisconsin would like to have this resolution supported, to investigate this judge. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. The gentleman said at the outset of his remarks that the judge had offended on divers times and occasions. The gentleman has only cited one occasion and one case. Has the gentleman in mind any other matters aside from this particular proposition?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Well, I did not intend to bring that up this morning, but there has been a great deal of discussion about this case and it has got into the press. It was in the press this morning that such a resolution was to be offered. I have received telegrams this morning from Ohio and another telegram from some other State at a great distance, volunteering that those gentlemen would like to have an opportunity to come in and present other charges against the same judge. I do not care to discuss that, but the gentleman has insisted upon it. [Applause.]

Now, I want to say that the Supreme Court has continuously held—and I am only going into the law briefly, because if you want to go into the law I have enough decisions the other way to consume the entire day—but the Supreme Court has continuously held that matters of this kind cannot be raised in habeas corpus proceedings, but that the fugitive must be returned to the court which found the indictment, in which court the question of the sufficiency of the indictment may be raised, and if conviction is had the fugitive has a right to appeal to the appellate court.

This judge has deliberately ignored or was ignorant of the law to such a violent extent that his continued service on the bench is a menace to the peace and good order of this Nation.

The time allotted to me does not permit a full discussion of the legal precedents, but amongst the large number of cases sustaining my position are:

In re Wood, Petitioner (140 U.S. 278).

Henry v. Henkel (235 U.S. 219).

Whitaker v. Hitt (285 Fed. 797).

Benson v. Henkel (198 U.S. 1).

Riggins v. U.S. (199 U.S. 547).

Sheriff v. Brown (205 U.S. 179).

Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE].

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, as I have already informed the House, Judge Lowell not only is my constituent but also through many years has been my personal friend. I served with him in the Massachusetts Legislature, and then in a long-drawn-out constitutional convention, and had close opportunity through all those years to watch the man and the workings of his mind. I know him; and I desire here to testify that I know of no man in the State of Massachusetts who stands higher in the respect of those who know him than James A. Lowell.

I testify that he is a man of exceptional intelligence; that he is a man of perfect probity; that he is a man with the highest regard for justice; that he has filled his office honorably; and that all suggestions that this episode is part of a career of misfeasance are absurd. Of course, men will be found who have appeared before him and who thought they had right on their side while his decision was contrary. Some of them will doubtless come forward and question both his judicial capacity and his integrity. Has not that been the fate of my friend from Virginia while he sat on the bench? Did he never observe anybody of whom it might be said:

No man e'er felt the halter draw,
With good opinion of the law.

Always the defeated litigant complains. Otherwise he never would have gone into court.

Now, sir, this man, his position in life, his associations, his whole course, repel as preposterous the suggestions made in the press that he has been influenced by communistic views.

I would call your attention to the fact that many of the charges against him by the gentleman from Virginia were based on quotations from the press. Who here passes a week without some misquotation of what he has said? Who here takes any active part in our work without knowing of the unintentional errors of the press? Who here but has been put in false position by what the press has said to be his utterances?

Shall you take this solemn procedure on the ground of rumors, on the ground of reports, on the ground of opinions voiced in the press?

I pray you discard at once all that part of the gentleman's argument which was prefaced by saying, "If the press is correct."

Shall we summon this man here; shall we hale him before the Judiciary Committee and presently bring him to the bar of the Senate on the ground that a newspaper reporter said that the judge had said something?

But, after dismissing all that, return to the charge itself. The only valid charge, the only charge with which any proof is presented is—and I deny that telegrams from disappointed litigants are proof—that in one instance, one instance in all his long and honorable career, he made a decision that has not satisfied the gentleman from Virginia.

Now, sir, picture to yourself what will be the course of events if we establish the precedent that because a lawyer, disappointed and chagrined by the judgment of a judge, feels that he ought to pursue the case, he may come to Congress with his contention. Do you think it wise that he shall be encouraged to come to this House and ask that the case be tried over again? How many hundreds and thousands of cases would be brought to Congress if you once set forth the idea, spread the idea, and laid down the principle that a disappointed litigant may have an appeal to the Congress. Why, you would crowd the docket of the Committee on the Judiciary with hundreds and thousands of cases if you proceeded on this novel principle.

Sir, it has not been my fortune to read the official documents of the case. I know nothing of the arguments as made in court. I can only submit to your consideration whether it is to be assumed that a judge in making a decision has had no law on his side to defend that decision; that he has not given due weight to precedent; that he has not exercised his function as a judge to decide between the opposing views of counsel.

The gentleman asks us, because he presents one side of the case, to assume that there is no other side to the case.

If, however, it should be taken for granted that any litigant, any lawyer, who loses out in his suit may then come here, let us further consider, if I may venture so far as to follow the same line of argument that the gentleman himself has presented, whether it is the province of a judge to determine what will be the treatment of an accused man when he is taken beyond the borders of a State. Let us face that issue squarely.

I am going to ask every man here to ask himself this question: "If tomorrow Germany should ask President Roosevelt to extradite and send to Germany a Jew, would I vote to support the President if he did it?"

This is a definite, specific question you may ask yourselves. Will you vote to support a proposal to send a man charged with crime into a neighborhood where it is believed he cannot get justice? Why, only a few days ago we read what went on down at Scottsboro. Let that be clear and fresh in your minds. There they had to resort to that practice of the law which is known as a change of venue. What is the basis of a change of venue? Why is it provided? How does it come about that a man may be tried in some locality other than where the crime was committed? The basis of it is the fear of prejudice, the fear of injustice, the fear of unfairness, and inasmuch as you have that principle in the law of change of venue, I ask you why you would deprive a judge anywhere in this country of considering the question raised by the principle involved in that issue. I maintain that a judge in Wisconsin or a judge in California or a judge in Massachusetts has the right to consider whether he will cause a man to lose his life by sending him into a hostile environment for trial.

I make no charge against Virginia. She has a right to be proud of her institutions, but we understand that Virginia views this particular question from a point of view other than that of a man from a northern State. We have felt that there are parts of this country where, by reason of his color, a man does not get a fair trial. We understand that in some parts of this country jurors are not selected with due regard to the constitutional provision that there shall be no debarment of any man from his rights as a citizen by reason of his color, the provision that says no State "shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

We do not attempt to answer the social question. We know the difficulties that are involved. We sympathize with our friends from the South. We do not pretend to be wiser or holier than they are. We do not advance that issue at all. We face the fact—the fact that a colored man sent from a Northern State and charged with crime will go into an environment where he is unlikely to get fair and even-handed justice. By the records we can show this to be the case.

So, sir, we maintain that there is no ground for impeachment to be found in the fact that this situation is recognized by a judge in another State.

You are asked to go to great expense and take much time in investigating this issue. We do not evade the issue. If it is your pleasure to invite the precedent that is involved therein, go ahead and do it. We know this judge can defend himself to the satisfaction of that committee and exonerate himself. We know what the report of that committee will be. If you are unwise enough to force upon them the labors involved, very well, but we ask you to start out at least with an open mind, to start out at least with knowledge that you have heard only one side of the case, to start out by treating this judge as fairly as you want to treat any other American citizen.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH], on his own responsibility as a Member of the House, has presented articles of impeachment. Would not these articles so presented, as a matter of course, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary for its consideration?

Mr. LUCE. So I understand the practice of the House.

Mr. LEHLBACH. And the resolution that is now pending is entirely unnecessary and will only serve to record the judgment of the House that a prima-facie case exists. The Committee on the Judiciary will have jurisdiction over the articles of impeachment whether this resolution is adopted or not, is not that the case?

Mr. LUCE. That I understand to be the case.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield.

Mr. GAVAGAN. I should like to inquire if the gentleman knows whether or not the State of Massachusetts has taken an appeal from the order of Judge Lowell.

Mr. LUCE. I do not.

Mr. GAVAGAN. I ascertain from the newspapers that the State has taken an appeal.

Mr. LLOYD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield.

Mr. LLOYD. Assuming that the members of our Federal judiciary should be above suspicion, in view of the fact that these charges have been made, should not the judge welcome an orderly, preliminary investigation before the Judiciary Committee of this House?

Mr. LUCE. Of course, any man ought to welcome any inquiry into his conduct, whether as a judge or in any other position, but I am pointing out to you that if you do this in one instance, you are in duty bound to do it in a thousand instances. You are in duty bound to flood the House and the committee with questions raised by disappointed litigants.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. BRITTEN. As I understand the gentleman's attitude, it is that he has no objection to all this matter that has been presented by the gentleman from Virginia going to the Committee on the Judiciary for proper and due consideration, but he does object to a record vote being taken on a resolution which has no place here at this time.

Mr. LUCE. Absolutely.

Mr. BRITTEN. There is no objection, of course, by any Member of the House to having all this matter very carefully considered, as it should be by the Committee on the Judiciary, and as it will be, without the passage of this resolution.

Mr. BYRNS. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. BYRNS. I want to ask the gentleman if this is not the usual resolution which is adopted in proceedings of this kind, and is not this resolution necessary in order to provide the Committee on the Judiciary with the necessary funds in the event they have to go to Massachusetts for the purpose of making the investigation? [Applause.]

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. BLACK. Does not the gentleman think it is highly unfair and prejudicial to the course of justice for the House at this time to interfere in any way, shape, or form with this proceeding until the appeal is disposed of?

Mr. LUCE. Absolutely.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Is not the correct practice to refer the articles of impeachment to the Committee on the Judiciary and if upon examination of the articles, the Committee on the Judiciary finds enough substance in them to proceed with an investigation, is it not then the function of the Committee on the Judiciary to come to the House and ask for the necessary money and the proper authority?

Mr. LUCE. That is the custom, and a very wise custom, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Is it not premature to take this up before the appellate court files its decision?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly; the Court of Appeals may decide the same way.

Mr. LOZIER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield.

Mr. LOZIER. Is it not true that a decision of the higher courts will not purge this judge of his wrongdoing. If he has violated the Constitution, if he has deliberately, by his decision, flaunted the Constitution he took an oath to defend, and if he has contemptuously ignored the comity which exists between the States, and set himself up to pass ex cathedra upon the ultimate result of a future trial in another State—would not that system and policy, if followed generally by judges, practically destroy our whole judicial system in the United States? [Applause.]

Mr. LUCE. I do not accept the basis upon which the gentleman has put his question.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

Mr. LUCE. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LUCE. The gentleman has preferred charges and also introduced a resolution. Which is to be voted on first?

The SPEAKER. The resolution provides that the Committee on the Judiciary shall investigate the charges made by the gentleman from Virginia. The vote will be on the adoption of the resolution. The question is on the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. LUCE. On that, Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 209, nays 151, answered "present" 12, not voting 59, as follows:

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present in the Hall and listening when his name was called?

Mr. KVALE. I was not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not qualify.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The charges made by the gentleman from Virginia are referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CLAIM OF UNITED STATES UPON ASSETS OF PAN AMERICAN PETROLEUM CO. AND RICHFIELD OIL CO. OF CALIFORNIA

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 13, authorizing the Attorney General, with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Navy, to release claims of the United States upon certain assets of the Pan American Petroleum Co. and the Richfield Oil Co. of California and others in connection with collections upon a certain judgment in favor of the United States against the Pan American Petroleum Co., heretofore duly entered, which I send to the desk to have read, and ask unanimous consent that the same be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The Clerk read the title to the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MCGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I have read the resolution. While on its face it does not say so, is not this a part of the old oil scandals in the Doheny case?

Mr. FULLER. Yes.

Mr. MCGUGIN. And the movement is to compromise part of the judgment against Mr. Doheny?

Mr. FULLER. It is not so much a compromise as it is a matter of getting all that we can out of him.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate joint resolution.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Attorney General of the United States, with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Navy, be, and he is hereby, authorized, in connection with collection of amounts due the United States of America under a certain judgment for $9,277,666.17 entered in the office of the clerk of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of California at Los Angeles on January 14, 1933, against the Pan American Petroleum Co., a corporation, to release from claim or lien under said judgment such part or portions of the property and assets of the said Pan American Petroleum Co. and the Richfield Oil Co. of California, in such manner and with such reservations as shall seem to him proper and advisable, in consideration of payments to the United States to apply upon said judgment, of not less than the sum of $5,000,000, and in connection therewith to release any claims of the United States against purchasers of oil and petroleum products from the leases commonly known as "E", "I", and "G" leases, or also known as "Visalia 010042, 010043, and 010097 leases" in naval petroleum reserve no. 1, Kern County, Calif., and to consent, in the premises, to the assignment of other oil and gas leases in said naval petroleum reserve no. 1, now part of the unmortgaged assets of Pan American Petroleum Co., with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Navy and to the assignment of other oil and gas leases, also part of the unmortgaged assets of Pan American Petroleum Co., of the United States outside the said naval petroleum reserve no. 1, with the consent of the Secretary of the Interior, said assignments to be authorized only to assignees otherwise duly qualified under existing laws.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, the gentleman from Arkansas will have control of 1 hour. Will the gentleman yield part of that time to this side of the House?

The SPEAKER. This is being considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, I am sure every Member of this House would be glad to vote for this measure if he knew its merits, especially if he is a lawyer. Sometime ago, as we all know, a scandal grew out of the Naval Reserve oil fields of southern California. Later the Government recovered the leases, and it was then discovered that during the time the Doheny interests had possession of those leases they took something over $5,000,000 worth of oil out of the property. The Government then instituted a suit to recover judgment for approximately $5,000,000 worth of this oil. By the time the judgment was obtained in November 1932, with the interest added of 7 percent, it amounted to $9,300,000. These two corporations mentioned in the resolutions were Doheny companies. He is out of the picture entirely. One is the Pan American Petroleum Co. and the other is the Richfield Oil Co. of California. The judgment is against these companies; they are in the hands of receivers and are hopelessly insolvent. It is necessary that this measure should be passed immediately in order that the Government may recover anything substantially.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. Yes.

Mr. McFADDEN. Is the Pan American Petroleum Co. in the hands of a receiver?

Mr. FULLER. Yes.

Mr. McFADDEN. I thought the Standard Oil Co. of Indiana had absorbed that.

Mr. FULLER. I cannot answer that because I do not know.

Mr. McFADDEN. I know the Richfield Co. is in the hands of a receiver.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I understand that they took over the Pan American.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The Pan American Co. is a subsidiary entirely owned by the Richfield Co., and both of these companies are in the hands of a receiver.

Mr. FULLER. That is what I understood.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The Standard Oil has no interest in it whatever.

Mr. FULLER. Not a bit. During the Hoover administration and preceding it, special counsel were employed by the Government to investigate this matter. Three of them are still connected with the case. They have gone to California recently and have obtained an additional compromise whereby they can at least get $5,000,000 for the Federal Government to apply as credit on the judgment provided this resolution is passed at once. This measure was recommended by ex-Attorney General Mitchell, and also by Mr. Adams, Secretary of the Navy. It is also recommended by Mr. Cummings, the present Attorney General, and by Mr. Swanson, now Secretary of the Navy. There is nothing political in it. I think the leaders on both sides of the House and the leaders of the Nation generally, who know about the matter, say that this legislation ought to be expedited and passed quickly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. What amount goes for attorneys' fees? Do the hearings show anything about that?

Mr. FULLER. So far as I know, none. Nothing goes to those who were special counsel for the Federal Government. If there is anybody who gets anything, we do not know anything about it. There is no way to ascertain it.

One of the companies, the Richfield Co., has a claim pending before the Revenue Department for a million dollars rebate on income tax. It would not be policy for me to state there was a possibility of recovery from the Government, but it is a very good time to eliminate this claim, and it will be taken into consideration in the settlement of this transaction. Some of this oil was produced before this scandal was known, and before there was any proof of rascality, and was purchased by the Standard Oil Co. of California, and the special investigators have been trying to get some evidence in order to bring suit against the Standard Oil Co. of California and make them pay, but they have been unable to get any proof, but they have used it as a club to the extent that the Standard Oil Co. of California was a party to this settlement whereby it agrees to buy the property, or at least bid $23,000,000 at public sale, whereby the Government will recover at least five millions on its judgment.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FULLER] has expired.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I yield.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The settlement provided in this resolution is the settlement recommended by former Senator Atlee Pomerene, who was chief counsel for the Government in all of this oil litigation. Is that not a fact?

Mr. FULLER. Yes, that is true; and the two men who were so active and who went out there and made this agreement both appeared before the committee.

Mr. DE PRIEST. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I yield.

Mr. DE PRIEST. Is this claim of the Government a preferred claim?

Mr. FULLER. No; it is not. We have judgments against those companies for $9,200,000, but they had a prior mortgage on much of the property. We doubt if their assets would sell on the market today for $10,000,000. They owe every bank in all that part of the country. Under this compromise no one is to get any money except the Federal Government, which is to receive 50 percent; one of the sets of bondholders is to receive 30 percent, and another set is to get 40 percent, and all the common creditors will get absolutely nothing.

Mr. SWANK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I yield.

Mr. SWANK. Did not this same bill pass the Senate in the last Congress, while Senator Walsh of Montana was a Member of that body?

Mr. FULLER. Yes; and Senator Walsh is the man who started the investigation and conducted it, and he was in favor of this measure. The leaders of the Senate are in favor of it. It was passed in the Senate without any dissenting vote. I am sure if anybody has any doubt about it, if he will just state it, it can easily be cleared up.

Mr. MONTET. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I yield.

Mr. MONTET. Is this to be a cash settlement?

Mr. FULLER. A cash settlement. This resolution authorizes the Attorney General, with the consent and approval of the Secretary of the Navy, if in their judgment they think it is to the best interest of the Government to accept not less than $5,000,000 in the settlement as a credit on the judgment; not in full satisfaction of the judgment, but a credit on the judgment, and thereby releasing any other claim which the Government has on the properties of these two insolvent oil companies. Retaining the right to recover from Doheny.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I yield.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Will the gentleman explain why, if those companies have $5,000,000 worth of property, the Department of Justice cannot discover the property and levy on it under the judgment they already have?

Mr. FULLER. It is just as any other lawyer will tell you, many times you can get a judgment and cannot collect it.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Not when they have $5,000,000 worth of property outstanding.

Mr. FULLER. Oh, they had $50,000,000 worth of property in book values, but it is covered by mortgages and bonds long before the judgment was obtained, and we cannot reach it.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Then the mortgage and bondholders are entitled to preference. Why should the mortgages and bondholders consent in this case to admitting $5,000,000 to go to the Government when it ought to go to them?

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I yield.

Mr. McFADDEN. It is my understanding that when the Richfield Oil Co. took this property they took it subject to the claim of the United States Government, and the same thing applies to the purchase by the Pan American Petroleum Co., and the assets were taken over by the Standard Oil Co. of Indiana. In other words, they made a reservation that whatever judgment was acquired by the United States would have to be paid by those old companies. Therefore, why should they compromise when both of these judgments would be a lien against the property?

Mr. FULLER. In the opinion of the committee and in the opinion of those who have the authority and responsibility and have investigated it, if we do not pass this bill this week they will put all of their property up for sale and it will sell for less than $10,000,000, and the party who will buy it is the Standard Oil Co. of California, and the United States Government would not get a million dollars out of it. If I knew more about this case than all these lawyers who have the responsibility, in both the past administration and the present administration, and if I did not have any responsibility at all, I would vote against this and make my conscience clear. I certainly do not understand the facts to be as stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GILCHRIST], and the record bears me out.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. FULLER. No. I do not have any further time to yield.

Mr. GILCHRIST. I wanted to ask the gentleman if the lawyers had to take the responsibility of voting here this afternoon?

Mr. FULLER. No, sir.

Mr. GILCHRIST. I was simply asking for the facts. I am not indicating how I shall vote.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FULLER] has again expired.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I fully agree with what the gentleman from Arkansas has said in connection with this bill. This is plainly a case of insolvency; it is a case of settling up an estate that may have assets or may not have assets, according to the way it is handled.

The settlement proposed in this bill is in no way a final settlement. You will notice the Attorney General is given permission to make this settlement, to take the $5,000,000, with such reservations as seem to him proper and advisable in consideration of the payment to the United States, this to apply upon the said settlement.

In other words, if you study the report, you will find that it is expected money will be secured from other sources with which to pay this judgment of the Government.

The attorney, Mr. Harrison, who was with Mr. Pomerene in the case originally, agreed to make this settlement with the creditors of the California company which is now recommended. He made this statement:

"The bondholders of the Richfield Co. expect a dividend of 30 percent, the unsecured bank and trade creditors a dividend of 12 percent, the bondholders of the Pan American a dividend of 40 percent, whereas the Government is assured of more than 50 percent, with the possibility of an increase resulting from the allowance of income-tax refund and a recovery against Mr. Doheny. We have no hesitancy," they say, "in urging this settlement."

The reason this matter is brought up this afternoon in what may possibly seem to be rather a hurry is because next Saturday is the last day on which the Government can take advantage of this proposition.

I think this is a good settlement. I have looked into the matter very closely. The matter has been gone into by a number of committees of bondholders and creditors. They have entered into an agreement that this money should be paid to the Government; that this amount, $5,000,000, is given in settlement, no matter what other collection the Government may make.

I think we should do this. I think $5,000,000 in hand at the present time from an insolvent estate is well worth having; and I think, as long as we are not forgiving the balance of the judgment but have the possibility of collecting it from other sources, that this is a wise agreement for the Government to enter into.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Speaker, I take the floor for 2 minutes to say that in propounding my questions to the chairman of the committee I was in search of facts. I do not like to be told that if I do not like it I can vote "no." I should like to know why I should vote "yes." I should like some facts concerning this resolution which would justify us in believing that the Government cannot collect the $9,000,000 judgment it has against this property. With that thought in mind, I asked the chairman of the committee about it, and was advised by him that if I did not like the bill, I could vote "no."

I think the committee must have some information on this question. The information so far given us is simply a conclusion; the facts are not disclosed, but we are told that the end of the whole matter is that the Government cannot collect. Are there any facts to show that the Government cannot collect? If so, what are they?

We are told that this judgment is not a lien ahead of the stockholders and other creditors. Ordinarily this is not true. Ordinarily the king for his debt has a lien ahead of the citizen.

I do not know what the facts are. I should like to know, and I am in as good faith in asking for information as any member of the committee. We ought to be informed of the facts which will support the proposal.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILCHRIST. Certainly.

Mr. EDMONDS. I call the gentleman's attention to page 12 of the report.

Mr. GILCHRIST. I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. EDMONDS. If the gentleman reads it, he will find that the Government by its representatives, together with representatives of the other creditors, met. Out of this meeting an agreement was reached. Under section 5, on page 13, the Government is to be paid this $5,000,000. Then a division was made of the balance.

We do not release our claim on Doheny for the sum of $800,000 income tax returnable. I believe we will get hold of that money and at a later date will probably get some of the other claims mentioned in the report.

Understand, this is not a settlement of the claim. This is simply an application of $5,000,000 on account of the claim.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. McFADDEN. Then the Government retains its judgment against Mr. Doheny, who is not a bankrupt.

Mr. EDMONDS. This does not relieve any of the other claims at all. It simply applies $5,000,000 on account, so as to release these properties so they can be sold in order to get more assets into the company.

Mr. McFADDEN. It is my understanding that when Mr. Doheny sold his interests that there was a reservation of funds to cover whatever the Government recovered. In other words, these companies that bought these assets reserved in their contract with Mr. Doheny sufficient money to cover any judgment which the Government might obtain at a later date.

Mr. EDMONDS. It states in the agreement, at the bottom of page 11 of the report—

The Government is assured of more than 50 percent of the claim with the possibility of an increase resulting from the allowance of an income-tax refund and a recovery against Mr. Doheny.

Mr. McFADDEN. In that connection, are they exercising their rights against Mr. Doheny?

Mr. EDMONDS. They say so.

Mr. McFADDEN. If they are, then the Government will recover the entire $9,300,000.

Mr. EDMONDS. That is something the Attorney General is supposed to attend to, and I presume he is. He says he will do it, and I think he will.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask for recognition for 5 minutes in order to definitely state my position as a member of the committee upon this resolution and to offer an amendment to it.

I voted against the resolution in committee, and as a matter of consistency I am going to vote against it here unless it is amended so as to place the responsibility for the proposed settlement of this case where it belongs. In taking this stand, however, I do not want to be understood as opposing the merits of the proposal to make the settlement or compromise authorized by this resolution. Neither do I want to undertake to persuade anyone to vote against the resolution if he is satisfied from such information as is available to him that the compromise here proposed would be a good thing. The point I am making is that in voting for this resolution the Congress is taking upon itself the responsibility of saying whether a settlement or a compromise ought to be made, and I think this responsibility should be upon the Attorney General as the person in charge of this lawsuit for the people of the United States and not upon the Congress.

Mr. FULLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOTT. Yes.

Mr. FULLER. Did the gentleman notice that both the Attorneys General said that under the law neither one of them had any authority to settle this case without the authority of Congress and that the only reason they were asking for the authority of Congress was because it was not a Treasury matter where the Treasury could step in and act in the premises?

Mr. MOTT. I asked the Attorney General's representative that question directly and he said that he was not able to state whether a resolution was necessary or not, and his own opinion was that perhaps a resolution was not necessary.

This, Mr. Speaker, is my first objection. I do not believe it is necessary to authorize this settlement by an act of Congress passed for that purpose. The case is in the hands of the Attorney General. He is representing the people of the United States as his clients and he has the same power to compromise or settle this case as he has to compromise or settle hundreds of other lawsuits which the Department of Justice settles or compromises every year.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question there?

Mr. MOTT. Certainly.

Mr. SNELL. I was directly informed from the Attorney General's office that that Department recommended this settlement as presented to Congress.

Mr. MOTT. I will say for the information of the gentleman, and of the House also, that there is considerable doubt in my mind and in the minds of other members of the committee whether the Attorney General has, in fact, asked for this authorization.

Mr. SNELL. A gentleman called me up from that office and distinctly told me that anyway. That is all I know about it.

Mr. MOTT. I will say to the gentleman that there have been two or three different statements from the Attorney General's office as to what the Attorney General's position on this matter is. If you will turn to page 3 of the report, you will find a short letter from the Attorney General addressed to Senator KENDRICK, Chairman of the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate. The letter is dated March 15, and in that letter he says:

I am pleased to advise you that the proposed legislation seems to me to be highly desirable. Those here in the Department who have had to do with this matter strongly urge the passage of this resolution.

Upon that authority and upon that statement the committee was about to vote to report this resolution favorably, when the personal spokesman of the Attorney General stopped the vote, in effect, and said: "Gentlemen, before you vote to report out this resolution, I have a message from the Attorney General. I want the gentlemen of the committee to distinctly understand that the Attorney General is not asking for this authorization."

Upon the strength of this statement the members of the committee decided that they should wait until they could get a direct statement from the Attorney General as to whether or not he wanted this authorization. So the committee adjourned until the next day. The following day the Attorney General sent a letter to the committee, and the only statement he made in this letter as to whether or not he wanted authority to settle the case was to refer the committee to the letter he had already written and to state that he had not changed his opinion as expressed in the first letter. This certainly was not an answer to the committee's question. I do not think the Attorney General has definitely asked the Congress to give him the authority the resolution proposes, and, if in these circumstances we pass the resolution, we are taking the affirmative responsibility which ought to be upon the shoulders of the Attorney General. If the Attorney General wants this authorization he should say so, and he should say so in no ambiguous terms.

So I propose that a protective amendment be adopted to this resolution.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOTT. I suggest that in these circumstances, where the Attorney General was not willing to say that he wanted this authorization by congressional act, that the Congress, if it passed the resolution, would be put in the position, in spite of the permissive language in the bill, of not only putting its O.K. upon this settlement but of directing the Attorney General to make it.

So, in these circumstances, and inasmuch as no Member of the Congress and no member of the committee has sufficient information upon which to say that this settlement ought to be made or ought not to be made, I think it is proper to put a protective amendment in this resolution, and I now offer such an amendment:

Provided, That the authority herein granted is permissive only and shall not be construed as a declaration of approval by Congress of the compromise or settlement herein authorized to be made and that said authority shall not be exercised by the Attorney General unless in his judgment such compromise or settlement shall appear to him to be for the best interests of the United States.

I think that in view of the ambiguous position that the Attorney General has taken, if we are going to pass a resolution authorizing the settlement, we should be very certain that the resolution states in no uncertain terms that it is merely permissive, and not to be exercised unless the Attorney General deems it for the best interests of the United States. Mr. Speaker, I send to the desk the amendment I have just read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 3, after the word "laws", strike out the period and insert a semicolon and insert the following: "Provided, That the authority herein granted is permissive only and shall not be construed as a declaration of approval by Congress of the compromise herein authorized to be made and said authority shall not be exercised by the Attorney General unless in his judgment such compromise shall appear to him to be for the best interests of the United States."

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman agreed in committee that he would not present that amendment. The committee is opposed to it, for the reason that it is surplusage; it only carries out the language in the bill which is set forth more clearly than it is in the amendment.

All the resolution does is to give the Attorney General authority, with such reservations as he deems proper, to settle this case. He does not have to settle if he does not want to, will not unless advantageous to the Government, and there is no use for us to "pass the buck" and not assume any responsibility at all. We might as well leave it where it is.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Why should we assume any responsibility, except the permissive responsibility? We give him authority and permission to make the settlement.

Mr. FULLER. That is all there is to it.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Why should we put this amendment in the bill when it is clearly set forth in the bill?

Mr. FULLER. There is one thing I want to call attention to, and that is we have got to pass this law right away, or on Saturday the court will order the property sold and we will be barred from carrying out our agreement.

This is nothing personal to me, the administration wants the bill to go through, and it does nothing more than to give the Attorney General the authority to settle it if he thinks it is for the best interests of the United States to do so. The Attorney General will have to study every detail, the proceedings in the former administration, and he has a great deal of work to do after this bill is passed.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I will yield.

Mr. BRITTEN. Is it not a fact that the amendment read does nothing more than merely refuse the authority of Congress or the approval of Congress for doing what is already carried in the bill? The word "permissive" is nothing more than a substitution for the word "authorized" in the bill. So the amendment can do no harm. It permits the Attorney General to do just what he is authorized to do in the bill, but it does one other thing—it indicates a lack of approval by Congress of the entire transaction. That is what the amendment does, but it leaves the Attorney General to do as he pleases. I can see no harm or no objection to the amendment.

Mr. FULLER. The gentleman is taking up all of my time.

Mr. BRITTEN. I am trying to help the gentleman pass the bill.

Mr. FULLER. The gentleman is making a strong argument.

Mr. BRITTEN. I am talking for the gentleman.

Mr. FULLER. All right. We do not want this bill amended, so that it will have to go back to the Senate. The amendment is unnecessary.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. "The lady does protest too much." If the amendment does not interfere with the bill at all and is purely unnecessary, what is the objection to it?

Mr. FULLER. Because we do not want it, and we do not want to load the resolution down with an amendment and then have to take it back to the Senate. Time is of the essence in this matter. The amendment is meaningless and its adoption means delay. We want the matter settled between now and Saturday.

Mr. PARKS. We have a conditional contract that they will pay us $5,000,000?

Mr. FULLER. Yes.

Mr. PARKS. What is the amount of the judgment?

Mr. FULLER. Nine million three hundred thousand dollars. In addition to that we are settling a refund claim which might be collected of over $1,000,000. The only thing that we are doing is to release property from our judgment which is covered by a prior and valid mortgage.

Mr. MARLAND. Did the judgment run against the Pan American only, or against the Pan American and Doheny?

Mr. FULLER. It was against all, but we do not release our right to recover from Doheny.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. MCGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, with or without the amendment of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT], I do not believe it is advisable for the Congress to pass this resolution, but, above all, it seems to me very unwise to pass the resolution without the amendment of the gentleman from Oregon.

The principal thing involved in the entire oil scandals is the honor, credit, and integrity of the Government. The question involved is not whether or not the Government obtains some money from that source. I say to you quite frankly that in order to preserve the character, integrity, and the faith in the Government in this country I would rather say let the courts take their course and let the Government take what the courts give, if it be only a thousand dollars, rather than to take $5,000,000 on the basis of a compromise when you and I and no other person in this House knows whether the compromise is right or wrong. This whole matter was turned by Congress over to the executive department of this Government back in the Coolidge administration. Public sentiment was such that it was necessary to restore public confidence in government, and in order that there might be no question about that, President Coolidge went further than merely turning it over to the Department of Justice of his administration. He appointed special counsel, men of different political faith. They have handled this matter.

I believe that the overwhelming majority of the people of the United States believe in the honor and integrity of the courts and of the executive department of the Government, in the manner in which these matters have been handled. For God's sake, let us not shake public confidence by coming in here at this late day and under the guise of obtaining a few million dollars pass a resolution authorizing a settlement which, to say the least, the overwhelming majority of the Members of this House know little or nothing about, and about which, of course, the public knows less. Therefore I hope the resolution is voted down, but in the meantime I do hope that the amendment of the gentleman from Oregon is accepted, because if the resolution is to be adopted it is indeed preferable that the responsibility may rest upon the Attorney General. It is not a case of Congress passing the buck. The Attorney General is the only authority who is in position to actually ascertain the truth as to whether a settlement should be made. Congress is not the proper tribunal to ascertain such a fact. That is something beyond our power to do.

Mr. FULLER. Do you not think these attorneys would have the best information about that? They come in here with this report and ask that this compromise be made, and they say that it is the only way in which we can recover any money. Do you not think that we ought to accept it?

Mr. MCGUGIN. If they want to do it let them go ahead and do it, but do not come to Congress and place the responsibility upon Congress.

Mr. FULLER. They have no authority except by this resolution.

Mr. MCGUGIN. If they have not, let it go on where it is, with the courts. Let the matter go on with the authority granted by Congress in the first instance.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCGUGIN. Yes; I yield to my friend from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. It is said that the resolution provides a yardstick for compromise, but I call attention to this language—in such manner and with such reservations as shall seem to him proper and advisable, in consideration of payments to the United States to apply upon said judgment, of not less than a sum of $5,000,000.

The crux of this matter is the reduction of this judgment to $5,000,000. What proof is there that they cannot pay all of it?

Mr. MCGUGIN. None, so far as we know. Here is a $9,000,000 judgment, and when you and I vote for this resolution today we have reduced it from 9 million to 5 million. That much is certain. I choose to let the courts ascertain whether it is $9,000,000 or $4,000,000 or $5,000,000, or whatever it may be. I am not going to vote for it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the amendment. I hope the amendment will be agreed to. I should like to call attention to some language in the committee report. When the former Attorney General sent this report to Congress, under the Hoover administration, he said, for the Department of Justice:

Accordingly we submit herewith a form of resolution for adoption by the Congress if it approves thereof.

Mr. Speaker, note the words "if it approves thereof." The amendment that has been offered by the gentleman from Oregon takes away any suggested approval of Congress for this particular transaction and places it where it belongs, in the Roosevelt administration and in the office of your very, very capable Attorney General, Mr. Homer Cummings.

Now let me call to your attention the language of your distinguished Attorney General, Mr. Cummings. He says in conclusion:

And I am pleased to advise you that the proposed legislation seems to me to be highly desirable. Those here in the Department who have had to do with this matter strongly urge the passage of this resolution.

That is very evasive—those in the Department who have had to do with this resolution strongly urge the passage of it.

Now, my friends, in the interest of the Treasury, in the interest of a proper settlement which we all desire, because very few Members of the House know what is back of this entire transaction, I am willing to presume that everything behind it is honest and is being done for the best interest of the Government, and that the Government, from Franklin D. Roosevelt down, desires this legislation, but there can be no objection to this permissive suggestion carried in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon. After it has been attached to the bill I cannot see any reason why every Member of the House cannot vote in favor of it. It seems to be a good resolution.

Mr. LOZIER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. I yield.

Mr. LOZIER. Is it not true that this bill in its present form, in the last analysis and as a practical proposition, is a legislative authorization, and in fact will be construed as a legislative direction to the Attorney General to settle on this basis; and what objection could there be to adopting the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon, which would place the responsibility on the Department of Justice, where it should rest, because that Department has charge of the litigation, and it is supposed to know whether this is the best settlement that can be obtained; but without some language similar to that offered by the gentleman from Oregon, I fear that as a practical proposition this resolution will be construed as congressional authorization and direction to the Department of Justice to settle upon this basis.

Mr. BRITTEN. If the gentleman is correct in his idea that this is a congressional direction—and I do not agree with the gentleman—but, if the gentleman is correct, then by all means we should favor the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I am inclined to agree with what the gentleman said—that it would be for the best interest of the country to pass this bill. Does the gentleman know whether this corporation is solvent or not?

Mr. BRITTEN. We are informed that this corporation and an adjoining corporation are now in the hands of receivers. I am not a lawyer, but my thought is that the Government sees an opportunity to collect $5,000,000 on a former $5,000,000 debt, which has been increased three or four million dollars by accretion of interest, and if it does not take advantage of that opportunity the Government may lose a considerable portion of that $5,000,000. I am willing to take my chances with your Attorney General. I am satisfied with his honesty of purpose and of his ability to protect the Government.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The Attorney General accepts the recommendation of your former Attorney General.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] has expired.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. I yield.

Mr. PARSONS. When was the judgment first obtained in this case?

Mr. BRITTEN. The report will show that.

Mr. PARSONS. Why is it that the previous administration did not collect this from the oil companies before they went into the hands of receivers?

Mr. BRITTEN. Is the gentleman playing politics or asking me a pertinent question?

Mr. PARSONS. I am asking the gentleman a question.

Mr. BRITTEN. I do not have the slightest idea. The chairman of the committee is on your side of the House and he can undoubtedly tell you about it.

Mr. FULLER. If the gentleman will yield, I can answer the gentleman. We did not get the judgment until 2 or 3 years ago. They could not get the proof. This is not a settlement of the entire judgment. This is only a credit on the judgment; and as the gentleman from Oklahoma asked me a while ago, the report shows that it is not liquidation and settlement and satisfaction of this judgment. The Government still has a right to pursue the judgment for the purpose of collecting from Edwin L. Doheny. So this is only for the purpose of relieving certain assets of these defunct institutions now in the hands of receivers.

Mr. PARSONS. Relieving them of what?

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Arkansas may proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Goss]?

There was no objection.

Mr. PARSONS. Relieve them what for?

Mr. FULLER. Those companies are in the hands of receivers, and this property had a bona fide mortgage on all of it before the Government got any judgment against it. That mortgage is good today.

It is impossible to collect anything on the judgment. They have other assets distributed all over the country, and in order for the Standard Oil Co. to get a little stigma off of them, and fearing that we might follow them a little further when we know we can not collect from them, they are willing to go into the open market and bid with every other company in the world on these concerns, and pay $23,500,000, with the understanding that the Federal Government will get a credit of at least $5,000,000 on this judgment.

If we do not go through with it the receivers will sell it just the same, and in all probability they, or somebody else, will buy it and we will not get our money.

Mr. PARSONS. The gentleman states this judgment was rendered 2 years or more ago.

Mr. FULLER. Yes.

Mr. PARSONS. What has the Department of Justice been doing these 2 years, or even prior to that time, that they were not taking steps to force this collection?

Mr. FULLER. I cannot answer that, but the mortgage was upon this property before the Government obtained its judgment.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The corporation is in the hands of a receiver.

Mr. FULLER. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Where are they getting the $5,000,000?

Mr. FULLER. They have made an agreement with the Standard Oil Co. of California that on this promised agreement they will bid $23,500,000 for the property, and we get the $5,000,000 out of them.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Does the gentleman think there is anything under cover?

Mr. FULLER. There may be; I do not know.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAPES. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Arkansas may be extended 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAPES. The resolution itself answers the question of the gentleman from Illinois. This judgment was entered on January 14, 1933; not 2 years ago, but less than 4 months ago.

Mr. FULLER. That is the judgment by the Appellate Court.

Mr. MAPES. No; it says it was entered in the office of the clerk of the District Court of the United States for the District of California, Los Angeles, on January 14, 1933.

The last administration had no time in which to collect the judgment, if this has any bearing on the matter.

Mr. MARLAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman from Arkansas be granted 2 additional minutes in which to answer the question of the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. MARLAND. A moment ago the gentleman stated that the judgment ran against the Pan American Co. and E. L. Doheny. If under this resolution this settlement of $5,000,000 is made with the Pan American Co. the judgment still runs against E. L. Doheny for $4,000,000.

Mr. FULLER. Yes.

LXXVII—154

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the amendment because I do not think it will aid us at all. If you propose to vote for this amendment, I would suggest that it be modified by eliminating the words "of the compromise herein authorized." This is an application of $5,000,000 on account of a judgment. There are other parties in this claim from whom the Government expects to collect.

If you read the report, you will see that Mr. Doheny is in the case and there are other sources from which it is expected to collect. However, in settlement of this particular receivership they are willing to pay $5,000,000, and the Government officials seem to think that this is all we will be able to collect out of it. Therefore we are taking this $5,000,000 on account of the judgment of $9,000,000 and going after the other parties to collect the balance as far as possible. This is the situation.

Replying to those who seem to think there is no necessity for this legislation, let me say I do not believe the executive branch of the Government has the right to dispose of any property of the Government without the consent of Congress. You are disposing of a lease today that has value. Therefore the probabilities are that the legal authorities decided that in order to give a complete title it would be necessary for them to get this legislation. It was proposed and passed by the Senate in the last Congress. It is now proposed and passed by the Senate again.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. I yield.

Mr. PARSONS. In view of what has just been said on both sides of the aisle, there seems to be some kind of a contract or collusion whereby certain bids are to be made if this resolution is passed and these lands are involved; a company is going to bid so much in order that we can get $5,000,000.

What is the proposition behind these bids with the Standard Oil Co. perhaps getting title to these lands, and the Government losing them, when we could perhaps collect the entire amount if they were sold on a fair market.

Mr. EDMONDS. The $5,000,000 will be paid to the Government under this agreement.

Mr. PARSONS. That is, for only $5,000,000 we release it whereas under other conditions some other company would gobble it up.

Mr. EDMONDS. Do not forget this is to be disposed of at an open sale. Any company may get it; it will be sold at a fair open sale.

Mr. PARSONS. But how many companies are in a position to bid in competition with, for instance, the Standard Oil Co.?

Mr. EDMONDS. I have not the least idea, and the gentleman knows that.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Speaker, there seems to be a misunderstanding as to the date of the judgment in favor of the Government. By reference to page 6 of the report you will find that the suit to cancel these leases was decided at Los Angeles in November 1930, against the United States, which judgment was, on February 5, 1932, reversed by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, which court directed a decree canceling these leases. On October 10, 1932, the Supreme Court denied an application for writ of certiorari, and on November 7, 1932, said Court denied an application for rehearing. Then the district court, pursuant to the mandate of the court of appeals, on November 29, 1932, entered a final decree canceling the leases and directing defendants to account for the value of oils taken from the leaseholds. After an accounting, final judgment was entered January 14, 1933, for $9,277,666.17, with interest thereon from November 29, 1932.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOZIER. I yield.

Mr. MAPES. Even that makes the judgment only 45 days longer, November 29, 1932.

Mr. LOZIER. The gentleman from Michigan is correct. I am merely correcting the record as to the date of this judgment.

Mr. EDMONDS. But the gentleman will acknowledge they still owe the money?

Mr. LOZIER. Yes; they owe the money. They owe much more than the $5,000,000 they offer us. They owe Uncle Sam more than $9,000,000. While I do not look with favor on the proposed compromise, I am willing to authorize the Department of Justice to make the best settlement obtainable, because it has all the facts, is in charge of the litigation, and is in a better position than Congress to determine what can be collected under our judgment.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Mr. Speaker, the Richfield Oil Co.'s main office is in the city of Los Angeles. The Richfield Oil Co. went into the hands of a receiver more than 2 years ago. Its president and chairman of the board were prosecuted for embezzlement of funds and were found guilty and are now languishing in the State penitentiary in California.

I hold no brief for the mismanagement of the Richfield Oil Co., but, Mr. Speaker, this Richfield oil situation has been hanging like a dark cloud over the city of Los Angeles and the county of Los Angeles because there are so many creditors involved.

As I recall, more than $30,000,000 worth of bonds were sold by so-called "respectable bond houses" to the people of the city of Los Angeles and there are millions of dollars' worth of credits outstanding held by banks and other companies in the city of Los Angeles, and this matter has to be settled by the Richfield Oil Co. one way or another.

I have received this morning a telegram from Mr. McDuffie, who is the receiver in charge of both the Richfield Oil Co. and the Pan American Petroleum Co. This company was a California corporation and not the one you are thinking about.

In part of his telegram he goes on to say:

I have, as receiver for Richfield and Pan American, constantly recommended to the court and creditors that the Richfield and Pan American properties should be sold as a unit and sold or reorganized at the earliest possible date, and that in my opinion the best interests of all creditors would be best served by such a sale or reorganization. There has been no disapproval of such recommendations by the court or by the creditors' committee. The creditors' committees, of which there are four, namely, original bondholders' committee, original bank-credits committee, original unsecured-trade creditors' committee, and Pan American bondholders' committee, have for months past been endeavoring to secure offers for the property in receivership. Offers were received from both Consolidated Oil Corporation and Standard Oil Co. of California, and, after consideration, all committees accepted Standard's offer. In view of the fact that the receiver, the court, and all committees are desirous of selling the properties, and in view of the fact that the Government attorneys have recommended the settlement of their judgment and that the settlement is very advantageous to the Government, and as the settlement can only be paid through the sale, and particularly in view of the fact of the telegram—

He refers to a telegram which was sent to the President—

I ask your active support in combating any opposition to the immediate approval of the House of the compromise, so that the sale and reorganization can be carried through. It must be remembered that if this settlement is not made and lengthy litigation ensues not only will the Government not get its money, but it will probably be necessary for the receiver to sell the properties piecemeal, in which case there will be little recovered for the creditors, secured or otherwise.

Mr. MCGUGIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Yes.

Mr. MCGUGIN. I will ask the gentleman if it is not his experience that it is very extraordinary, if not unethical, for receivers to go around appealing to creditors to compromise their suits?

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Not at all; and if the gentleman knew the type and character of Mr. McDuffie he would not say so.

Mr. MCGUGIN. I am talking about receivers in general. I am referring to receivers going around and appealing to creditors to compromise their suits.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOCKWEILER. I yield.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will the gentleman state whether he is opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT]?

Mr. DOCKWEILER. I do not think the amendment of the gentleman from Oregon hurts this particular resolution, although I think it is unnecessary.

It has been said that the Government should be in a position to settle this case without authority from this Congress. [Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. It has been said that this House does not need to pass a resolution to authorize the Attorney General. That the Attorney General has really asked for this authorization and that he has recommended that his Department act under this resolution I think goes without saying from the contents of his letter dated March 15, 1933, excerpts from which have just been read in the House.

This judgment was secured this year, January 14, 1933. The Richfield Oil Co. has been in the hands of receivers for over 2 years. The judgment that the Government has stands as an ordinary judgment and stands in no better position than a bondholder's judgment or the judgment of a general creditor.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOCKWEILER. I yield.

Mr. GILCHRIST. What does this resolution mean when it provides that the Government is to assign oil and gas leases in the naval petroleum reserves which are now unmortgaged and are unmortgaged assets of the Pan-American Petroleum Co.? This is stated in line 19, and also in line 22 of page 2 of the resolution. If these are unmortgaged assets, why does not the Government stand in better relationship to them than ordinary creditors?

Mr. DOCKWEILER. That is because, under the terms of the Oil and Gas Leasing Act passed about 10 years ago in this House and in the Senate, a corporation, as I gather it, could not hold over a certain number of acres, and I know that upon the dissolution of this company these particular leases would have to go into some other hands.

I hope you will all support this resolution because it will help us in Southern California to settle this question.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution and all amendments thereto to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT].

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be again read for the information of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

The Clerk again read the Mott amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the third reading of the resolution.

The resolution was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Goss) there were 125 ayes and 16 noes.

Mr. MCGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 244, nays 117, answered "present" 1, not voting 69, as follows:

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I move that House Resolution 119 be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

LOANS TO HOME OWNERS

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] if we may not agree on time for general debate on the bill (H.R. 5240), the home-mortgage relief bill. What time would be satisfactory?

Mr. LUCE. It is now after 4 o'clock and manifestly we cannot conclude the consideration of the bill today.

Mr. STEAGALL. I will say to the gentleman that it is my purpose, after we agree upon the time, to move to adjourn and take the bill up tomorrow.

Mr. LUCE. That is agreeable to me.

Mr. STEAGALL. Will the gentleman agree on one hour and a half of general debate?

Mr. LUCE. The bill is long, and there will be ample opportunity to consider it under the 5-minute rule. Therefore, I think an hour and a half for debate will be ample.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Reserving the right to object, when the bill is under consideration under the 5-minute rule will the gentleman agree not to cut off debate?

Mr. STEAGALL. I could not do that, but I will say that there is not the slightest desire to preclude proper consideration of the bill. If there were, we would not be here asking for an agreement. The bill will be open for amendment under the 5-minute rule. The bill is not very controversial—there are only 2 or 3 provisions that will provoke controversy. I hope the gentleman will agree to an hour and a half.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. With that assurance, I am willing to agree to an hour and a half, but I want to tell the gentleman that there should be something in this bill of value to the home owner when it is passed. There was a political fraud perpetrated in the last Congress when the home-loan bill was passed, and we want this bill worded in such a way that the forgotten man in my State will have his home saved and his property rights conserved. I offered an amendment in the form of a bill providing for an 80-percent loan to home owners direct, and I could not get a hearing before the gentleman's committee. I want to see this bill worded in such a way that the people of my city who are having property taken away and can get no redress will have an opportunity to get something from the Government of the United States as citizens of other sections of the country have received assistance.

Mr. STEAGALL. So far as the former legislation is concerned the gentleman knows as well as I do, and the older Members of the House understand the circumstances under which that legislation was passed. I was not very much enthused over it than was my friend. We passed that bill finally an hour before adjournment on the last night of the session. The fight was carried on until that hour.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Is the gentleman enthused over this bill?

Mr. STEAGALL. Even though the original bill fixed the valuation for loans at 40 percent, the gentleman yesterday complained that no loans had been made under it. I will ask the gentleman if he thinks any more loans would have been made if the limit had been raised to 80 percent.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. That was the trouble. The home-loan board absolutely refused to recognize the individual. That is where the trouble was. Congress wanted the individual recognized, but the bank board did not. You are repealing that paragraph in this bill. Section 3 repeals that paragraph in the existing law.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] let me suggest to him that the matter about which he wishes to call attention concerns a section of the bill which will be reached for amendment. If his argument is delivered in general debate, it will stand very much less chance of convincing Members than if made at the time when the section is reached. The general debate should be devoted to the general principles of the bill, and it strikes me that that ought to be devoted to the general principles of the bill. I think we can dispose of that in an hour and a half, and get through with the bill tomorrow afternoon.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I thank the gentleman. I agree to 1½ hours, but I hope we will not be cut off under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. BRIGGS. An hour and a half on a side?

Mr. LUCE. No; an hour and a half altogether.

Mr. BRIGGS. Is that going to allow members of the committee time enough to answer questions put by Members of the House? The trouble with some of these great bills that come before us is that Members frequently never get a chance to get any information, because the speakers at the moment say that they have only 5 or 10 minutes and they have to hurry along. What the House wants in respect to some of these bills is some information from the committee which has been studying the subject for weeks.

Mr. LUCE. It is my own disposition to answer every question that may be asked.

Mr. BYRNS. Does not the gentleman from Texas appreciate the fact that he will get infinitely more information when the bill is being discussed under the 5-minute rule than when under general debate, which is attended probably not by more than one fourth or one third of the Members?

Mr. BRIGGS. That has not been my experience about these bills. I know that the time is very frequently taken up by people who talk under the 5-minute rule, who have not been identified with creating the bill at all, when Members have not time enough to ask the chairman of the committee something about the bill.

Mr. DE PRIEST. Is the general debate to be confined to the bill?

Mr. STEAGALL. I meant my request to be so worded.

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's request?

Mr. STEAGALL. That general debate be limited to an hour and a half and be confined to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that general debate on the bill be limited to one hour and a half, to be confined to the bill, to be divided equally between himself and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H.J.Res. 135. Joint resolution to amend section 2 of the act approved February 4, 1933, to provide for loans to farmers for crop production and harvesting during the year 1933, and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

SENATE

THURSDAY, APRIL 27, 1933

(Legislative day of Monday, Apr. 17, 1933)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S.J.Res. 13) authorizing the Attorney General, with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Navy, to release claims of the United States upon certain assets of the Pan American Petroleum Co. and the Richfield Oil Co. of California and others in connection with collections upon a certain judgment in favor of the United States against the Pan American Petroleum Co. heretofore duly entered, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H.J.Res. 157) providing for the use of water of the St. Lawrence River for the generation of power by the State of New York under and in accordance with the provisions of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Deep Waterway Treaty between the United States and Canada, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

H.R. 4225. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Allegheny River at or near Parkers Landing, in the county of Armstrong, Commonwealth of Pennsylvania; and

H.R. 4332. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Allegheny River at a point near the Forest-Venango county line, in Tionesta Township, and in the county of Forest, and in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. McNARY. I wish to announce the necessary absence of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of South Carolina, which was referred to the Committee on Manufactures:

A resolution to memorialize the Congress to cause to be made a study and report upon the merits of legislation regulating what is commonly known as the "stretch-out system" in textile plants

Be it resolved by the house of representatives, That the Congress of the United States is respectfully requested to cause to be made a study and report upon the merits of legislation, either by the Congress or of the several States, regulating what is commonly known as the stretch-out system in textile plants.

That copies of the resolution be forwarded to the clerks of the two branches of Congress and to the Secretary of Labor of the United States.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Columbia, S.C., April 26, 1933.

I hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of a resolution adopted by the South Carolina House of Representatives.

[SEAL]

J. WILSON GIBBS, Clerk of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Michigan, which was ordered to lie on the table:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 10

A concurrent resolution urging the United States Congress to reflate the dollar

Whereas the debts of individuals, corporations, and governmental units are a staggering sum and it is absolutely impossible to have them liquidated with the present unit of value of all commodities, including labor; and

Whereas a very high percentage of these debts were contracted at a time when this unit of value, the dollar, was very much less in its purchasing power and a great many times easier to acquire; and

Whereas the inability of our people to acquire these units of value for personal service and sale of commodities has brought about unemployment, the lowest wage on the average and the lowest prices of commodities in many cases in the history of our country, thus causing dire distress in every State in our Union; and

Whereas unrest and discouragement over loss of homes, fortunes, and factories is beginning to show itself in strikes, riots, boycotts, and even radical moves in State legislatures; and

Whereas inflation of the currency in France since the World War and in Great Britain recently has brought about increase in business; and

Whereas economic conditions in the United States have reached a point where there is need of Federal protection of bank deposits and equality in bearing the burden of taxation on the basis of ability to pay the same: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States reclaim its function under the Constitution, namely, "to coin money and regulate the value thereof"; and be it further

Resolved, That currency be issued in payment of United States bonds that are already outstanding and currency issued instead of United States bonds whenever necessary, because of deficiencies in governmental income until the price of wheat, which is a wonderful standard of values and always has been, reaches the cash price of 90 cents per bushel on the Chicago market, or until the index of all commodities, including labor, reaches the point where it has been in the past 35 years when wheat was selling at about 90 cents per bushel cash in the Chicago market; and be it further

Resolved, That the Congress is hereby requested to pass legislation that will insure and protect at all times the money deposited in any and all National and State banks in order that more money may be put into circulation and without any danger of losing such money when so deposited; and that will put all money now invested or hereafter to be invested in Federal, State, municipal, and all district bonds and securities subject to taxation for all purposes on the basis of equality with property taxes; and be it further

Resolved, That a suitable copy of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, to the Congress of the United States, to the Michigan Members in the House and Senate of the Congress, and to the Clerk of the House and Secretary of the Senate of the various legislatures in the United States.

Adopted by house of representatives April 7, 1933.

Adopted by senate April 11, 1933.

DON. W. CAMPBELL,
Secretary of the Senate.
MYLES F. GRAY,

Clerk of the House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs:

Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States of America to enact legislation to provide for the issuance of certificates of citizenship to citizens of the United States of oriental ancestry residing in the Territory of Hawaii

Whereas the present rules of the Bureau of Immigration of the United States prohibit the issuance by the director of immigration for the district of Hawaii of certificates of citizenship unless the applicants therefor are about to leave the Territory for a visit to the mainland of the United States or to some foreign state or country; and

Whereas witnesses to the establishment of such citizenship are rapidly dying or permanently leaving the Territory: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, by the House of Representatives of the Territory of Hawaii, seventeenth regular session (the Senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States of America be, and it hereby is, requested to enact legislation authorizing and directing the Immigration Service of the United States to issue, upon application, certificates of citizenship to any citizen of the United States of oriental ancestry residing in the Territory of Hawaii, and to make available to the director of immigration for the district of Hawaii sufficient money for the employment of additional personnel, consisting of 6 inspectors and 4 stenographers, to assist in the issuance of such certificates; and be it further

Resolved, That certified copies of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States of America, the Secretary of Labor, the Commissioner General of Immigration, and the Delegate to Congress from Hawaii.

THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE Territory of Hawaii,
Honolulu, Territory of Hawaii, April 11, 1933.

We hereby certify that the foregoing concurrent resolution was adopted in the House of Representatives of the Territory of Hawaii on April 14, 1933.

HERBERT N. AHUNA,
Speaker House of Representatives.
EDWARD WOODWARD,
Clerk, House of Representatives.

THE SENATE OF THE TERRITORY OF HAWAII,
Honolulu, Territory of Hawaii, April 11, 1933.

We hereby certify that the foregoing concurrent resolution was adopted in the Senate of the Territory of Hawaii on April 11, 1933.

GEO. P. COOKE,
President of the Senate.
ELLEN D. SMYTHE,
Clerk of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate two petitions and two letters in the nature of petitions from sundry citizens of the State of Louisiana, praying for a senatorial investigation of alleged acts and conduct of Hon. HUEY P. LONG, a Senator from the State of Louisiana, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a memorial and several letters in the nature of memorials from sundry citizens of the State of Louisiana, endorsing Hon. HUEY P. LONG, a Senator from the State of Louisiana, condemning attacks made upon him and remonstrating against a senatorial investigation of his alleged acts and conduct, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Common Council of the City of Milwaukee, Wis., favoring the prompt passage of the so-called "Black 30-hour week work bill", limiting the hours of labor in manufacturing industries, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. COPELAND presented a resolution adopted by the Texas Valley Branch of the Dairymen's League Cooperative Association, of Texas Valley, N.Y., favoring a change in the monetary ratio and basis so as to effect the revaluation and stabilization of the dollar, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the board of directors of the Kaumagraph Co., of New York City, protesting against the passage of legislation limiting the hours of labor in industry, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Brooklyn Knitted Outerwear Manufacturers' Association, of Brooklyn, N.Y., favoring a modification of the provisions of the so-called "Black bill", providing for a 30-hour workweek to a 40-hour workweek of not more than 8 hours per day, and the establishment of Saturday as a legal holiday, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Erie County Committee, the American Legion Auxiliary, of Buffalo, N.Y., favoring the retention of appropriations for camp training and armory drills for the National Guard, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Niagara County Committee of the American Legion, of Niagara Falls, N.Y., protesting against reductions in the personnel of the Regular Army and the elimination of National Guard and citizens' military training camps and activities, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Niagara County Committee of the American Legion, of Niagara Falls, N.Y., protesting against the proposed discontinuance of the Veterans' Administration office at Buffalo, N.Y., and favoring preference treatment of war veterans who may be affected by any governmental reduction in personnel, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Wednesday Morning Club, of Elmira, N.Y., favoring the passage of legislation providing for a tax on present tax-exempt securities and also an income tax on salaries of public officers and employees, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Niagara County Committee of the American Legion, of Niagara Falls, N.Y., opposing the recognition of the communist government of Soviet Russia, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Independent Retail Tobacconists' Association of America, at New York City, protesting against the alleged mistreatment of Jews in Germany, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Forty-second Continental Congress of the Daughters of the American Revolution, at Washington, D.C., commending the State Department for the continuance of its prompt and timely action in bringing about through administrative action under existing law the emergency exclusion of immigrants whose entry might aggravate existing unemployment conditions in this country, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the New York Board of Trade, Inc., of New York City, favoring the passage of legislation limiting the appointment of receivers and trustees of bankruptcy to natural persons, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

TRIBUTE TO HON. GARDNER COWLES, SR.

Mr. MURPHY presented resolutions adopted by the Board of Directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation upon the occasion of the resignation of Gardner Cowles, Sr., of Iowa, from the Board of Directors of that corporation, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas Gardner Cowles, Sr., took the oath of office as a member of the Board of Directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation on July 5, 1932; and

Whereas Mr. Cowles has tendered his resignation as a member of this Board, which the President of the United States has accepted, effective April 8, 1933: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the members of the Board of Directors express to Mr. Cowles their deep and genuine regret that their association with him in the work of this corporation is about to come to an end. In a fine spirit of devotion to the public interest and with characteristic sincerity of purpose Mr. Cowles has rendered service of very great value to the Nation and to this corporation in the discharge of its heavy responsibilities in one of the most critical periods of the country's history. His associates on this Board desire to record their recognition of his signal ability and their grateful appreciation of his wise counsel and helpful cooperation in meeting the many serious problems that have confronted the corporation in this difficult period. He carries with him into private life the friendship and affection, sincere and enduring, of the directors of this corporation; be it

Resolved further, That these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of this Board of this the 8th day of April 1933 and an engrossed copy thereof, signed by the members of the Board, be transmitted by the secretary, under the seal of the corporation, to Mr. Cowles, with the best wishes and affectionate regard of the members of the Board and the entire staff of the corporation.

MOTHER'S DAY

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, from the Committee on Education and Labor I report back favorably without amendment the resolution (S.Res. 16) favoring an expression on Mother's Day of our love and reverence for motherhood.

In brief the resolution authorizes and requests the President of the United States to issue a proclamation calling upon our citizens to express on Mother's Day this year our love and reverence for motherhood.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be placed on the calendar.

THE DALLES BRIDGE CO.

Mr. STEPHENS, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 1278) to amend an act (Public, No. 431, 72d Cong.) to identify The Dalles Bridge Co., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 46) thereon.

SUPERVISION OF TRAFFIC IN SECURITIES

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, I report back favorably with an amendment the bill (S. 875) to provide for the furnishing of information and the supervision of traffic in investment securities in interstate commerce.

I will ask leave to submit a full statement and report on the subject a little later (Rept. No. 47).

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar. Without objection, leave is granted to file a report later, as requested.

EXECUTIVE REPORT OF THE FINANCE COMMITTEE

As in executive session,

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the nomination of Nellie Tayloe Ross, of Wyoming, to be Director of the Mint in place of Robert J. Grant, resigned, which was ordered to be placed on the Executive Calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 1540) for the relief of the Concrete Engineering Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. COOLIDGE:

A bill (S. 1541) for the relief of Mucia Alger; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

On motion of Mr. NEELY, the Committee on Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1378) granting a pension to Luther Lane, and it was referred to the Committee on Finance.

RELIEF OF AGRICULTURE—AMENDMENTS

Mr. BULKLEY submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the so-called "Thomas amendment" to House bill 3835, the farm relief bill, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. NORBECK submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 3835, the farm relief bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

PROPOSED BANKING LEGISLATION

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter just received from H. W. Koenek, State bank commissioner of Kansas, and a copy of resolutions adopted by representatives of the banking departments and banking associations of 14 Midwestern States at a meeting held recently at Des Moines, Iowa. I consider the letter and the resolutions most illuminating and hope that Senators and the country will read both carefully.

In this connection, Mr. President, permit me to urge that when the general bank-reform measure comes into the Senate it be considered as permanent legislation and that no attempt be made to force it through as emergency legislation without due consideration. There are several Republican Senators from the Western States who have gone right through with the administration's emergency program, resolving the doubts some of us have had always in favor of the administration measure. But I desire to serve notice right now that this "going along" will not necessarily apply to any legislation which has for its purpose the destruction or the crippling of the usefulness of the smaller local banks in their own communities. It may be a wise thing to have a unified banking system, depending upon what definition of "unified" is written into the law. But it seems to me that in the long run we need a decentralization of wealth and of the control of wealth, and we are not going to get that by destroying the State banks. This presents a most serious problem.

I send the letter and the resolutions to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the letter and resolutions presented by the Senator from Kansas will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter and resolutions are as follows:

STATE OF KANSAS,
BANKING DEPARTMENT,
Topeka, April 25, 1933.

Hon. ARTHUR CAPPER,
Hon. GEORGE MCGILL,

United States Senators, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATORS: Confirming our telegram of this morning I wish to submit to you some additional information as to the sentiment of the Kansas bankers and representatives of the bankers of the Midwest agricultural States, which was so clearly expressed at a meeting of bank supervisors and officials of the bankers associations of the respective States. To clearly state my position in the matter I will have to give you a little history as to how Kansas became interested in the proposed national legislation affecting banks.

After reading press reports coming out of Washington, which were very detrimental to the State banking structure, and perhaps circulated as propaganda to build up favorable sentiment among the depositing public, I thought it advisable to call a meeting of a representative group of bankers in Kansas for the purpose of ascertaining the real sentiment of Kansas bankers in their respective communities. I issued a call for some 30 State bankers throughout Kansas to come to my office to discuss this proposed legislation. During this Kansas conference, at which time every individual present was given an opportunity to voice his sentiments, it was unanimously agreed that the proposed legislation in Congress would be very detrimental to the welfare of the individual communities in Kansas and that it was thought advisable to make an effort to obtain united action upon the part of the Middle West States in an attempt to delay consideration of bank legislation until the people and bankers in the Midwest States had an opportunity to get information as to what was proposed, and that they be granted the privilege of appearing before the congressional committees in behalf of their own interests.

As a result of this Kansas conference a committee of five were appointed to meet with the executive council of the Kansas Bankers Association, and said meeting was held a few days later.

The result of the joint meeting of the State bankers' committee and the executive council of the Kansas Bankers Association, said association being made up of both National and State banks in Kansas, it was thought advisable to call a conference of the officials of the various bankers associations in the Midwest States, together with the bank commissioners or supervisors of the various States. This meeting was held at Des Moines, Iowa, Saturday, April 22. A call to this meeting was issued to 15 States, consisting of Arkansas, Colorado, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, South Dakota, and Wisconsin, and all States, with the exception of Colorado, were represented by from 2 to 7 delegates. At this conference in Des Moines the entire day was devoted to hearing from delegates of the various States. The effect on the various States of national legislation as proposed was thoroughly discussed, and the result of said conference was the appointment of a committee consisting of seven members, who were instructed to ascertain all information possible regarding said proposed legislation and to make such contacts as they could with their Senators and Congressmen in Washington, seeking to delay hurried or emergency legislation and asking for permission to be heard by congressional committees, and bringing to said committees the effect of the various proposed changes upon their individual States.

At the Des Moines conference the matter of State rights was thoroughly discussed, and considerable uneasiness existed among the delegates present as to what the ultimate effect would be if the present proposed plan of guarantee of deposits or liquidation corporation be put into effect, which in reality would compel all nonmember banks to join the Federal Reserve System, and in the minds of most of the delegates it would result in the closing of thousands of small banks that are serving their communities well, and would eventually mean the unification of the banking systems of these United States, which would lead to branch banking and a further centralization of the money power.

Some of the additional topics discussed at the Des Moines conference were postal savings, check tax, and publicity on Reconstruction Finance Corporation loans.

According to press reports it seems that the administration has reached some understanding as to the proposed Glass bill, the amendments made thereto by the subcommittee not having as yet been made public. I cannot offer any criticisms, and therefore should appreciate your efforts in obtaining and forwarding to me definite information as to the proposed changes and as to the present status of said bill. Personally, I am not convinced that the agricultural States of the United States are ready to surrender their sovereignty to a Washington bureau and neither do I believe that our Senators are willing to admit that a bureau at Washington or a department at Washington could possibly be in a better position to judge what the respective agricultural States need in the way of banking facilities than the people of the respective States themselves.

Our experience in Kansas with a form of guarantee of deposits has been sufficient to convince us that it is impractical and could only result in a national catastrophe. Under the present proposed law, as we understand it, hundreds of community banks in Kansas would eventually be forced to liquidate, resulting in losses of tremendous amounts of money, affecting a large number of depositors.

For your information I am enclosing herewith copy of the resolution passed at the Des Moines conference.

I hope you will excuse the length of this letter, as I desired that you thoroughly understand this situation from a Kansas viewpoint.

Respectfully yours,

H. W. KOENEKE,
Bank Commissioner.

APRIL 22, 1933.

Hon. N. G. KRASCHEL,
Lieutenant Governor of Iowa,
Statehouse, Des Moines, Iowa.

MY DEAR GOVERNOR: In conformity with the request as expressed in a resolution adopted by a meeting of banking commissioners and banking-association officials of 14 Midwest States in their session here in Des Moines today (Apr. 22, 1933), we are attaching hereto a copy of said resolution, which the members of that conference respectfully request, in view of your immediate trip to Washington, that you personally lay before President Roosevelt. For your cooperation in this regard the members of the conference from those 14 Midwest States again express to you their genuine thanks.

Any acknowledgment that you may care to make following your visit with the President will be gratefully appreciated so that copies of the same, as you may direct, may be sent to those who attended today's Des Moines banking conference.

Expressing the hope that you will have a very pleasant, enjoyable, and successful trip to Washington, and with my very warm personal regards always, I am,

Yours very cordially and respectfully,

FRANK WARNER, Secretary.

APRIL 22, 1933.

Re resolution adopted by conference of banking commissioners and banking-association officials of 14 Midwest States, Des Moines, Iowa, April 22, 1933

Hon. FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT,
President of the United States,
White House, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Through the kindly interest of the Hon. N. G. Kraschel, Lieutenant Governor of Iowa, the attached copy of resolution adopted at an interstate conference held here in Des Moines today (Apr. 22, 1933) by banking commissioners and banking-association officials of 14 Midwest States (Arkansas, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, South Dakota, and Wisconsin) is delivered to you. In considering the subject matter of the attached resolution, it is our pleasure to say that the banking commissioners and banking-association officials expressed again and again throughout today's conference that they had every confidence that you, as our national leader, and the administration in general would see to it that fairness will always be given, looking toward the mutual preservation of our National and State banking systems. For your considerate attention during these busy hours that press you from all sides, we gratefully extend herewith the thanks of today's conference of the foregoing mentioned representatives from the 14 Midwest States.

Respectfully submitted.

FRANK WARNER, Secretary.

Resolutions as adopted by banking commissioners and banking associations' officials and representatives of 14 States at a conference held in Des Moines, Iowa, Saturday, April 22, 1933

(1) Be it resolved, That it is the urgent wish and hope of this conference of banking commissioners and officials and representatives of the banking associations in the 14 Middle West States (Arkansas, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, South Dakota, Wisconsin) held at Des Moines, Iowa, on Saturday, April 22, 1933, that it be commended to the consideration of the Federal administration under the outstanding leadership of President Roosevelt so ably attacking the great economic and depression problems that beset farming and all other lines of business:

(a) That full recognition be given to the right vested in each and every State and as its own legislature may prescribe, and to the right of the country as a whole as Congress may prescribe, to have and to maintain their own respective banking systems; and

(b) That it can safely be intrusted to each State legislature and to the Congress to develop and to correct as it may at any time be found necessary their respective banking systems, having in mind at all times the proper safety of funds of depositors and the sound and adequate financing of all local farming and business and community needs; and

(c) That we suggest that our respective States lend all constructive efforts to properly preserve the national banking system, and likewise do we respectively request and entreat a similar sympathetic and mutual consideration from Congress toward our State banking system in order that that Federal body may always continue its past fair attitude, namely, not at any time to enact Federal banking legislation that shall be in contravention to the will and to the wish of the people themselves of any Commonwealth as they may so express it through their own general assemblies with respect to that form of banking that they themselves prefer within their own State; and

(d) That we urge Congress, as well as the respective State legislatures, to enact any fair and sound legislation that shall strengthen banking in general everywhere throughout the Nation; but likewise do we urge those law-making bodies not to consider any legislation that would in effect strangle or destroy any class or group of sound banks in any State in our country; be it further

(2) Resolved, That we, the banking commissioners and officials and representatives of the said banking associations represented here today:

(a) Advocate with all our strength that our respective banking associations join in supporting every fair and practical reform looking toward the preservation of and the surrounding of each of the National and State banking systems with all proper safeguards; and to that end we, as we may be able in our official capacities, shall bend our best efforts; and

(b) We recommend that a commission be appointed by the President of the United States that shall hold public hearings and give careful consideration to any proposed basic changes in our present dual system of banking before that Federal legislation is considered, so that Congress may act with full information. We are fundamentally opposed to any Federal legislation which will operate to the benefit of one bank at the expense of another; and

(c) The chairman of this conference appoint at once a committee of seven, of which he shall be a member, with power to act to carry out the full purposes and intent of this meeting, this to include, among other things, the authority to attend any conferences or hearings in Washington relating hereto, to enlist the support of any and all other banking commissioners and other banking associations' officials and their members, and to counsel and advise with them, and to do all other proper things and to use all proper means at their command as and when the time may arise that shall effectuate the purposes and declarations of this banking conference; and

(d) With respect to these resolutions (1) that a copy be personally delivered by the Honorable N. G. Kraschel, Lieutenant Governor of Iowa, advisory member of the foregoing-mentioned committee, to the President of the United States; (2) that copies be sent by the conferees here today to each Senator and Representative in Congress and governor of our respective States; (3) and that copies also be sent by the committee above referred to to bank commissioners and banking-association officials throughout the United States expressing the hope to the latter that the contents of these resolutions be brought to the attention of their individual member banks and in turn their support to the same obtained.

Unanimously carried.

RELIEF OF AGRICULTURE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 3835) to relieve the existing national economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LEWIS. I merely seek to know what is the parliamentary order this morning. What is the question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment is the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Pennsylvania is entitled to the floor.

Mr. LEWIS. May I take the liberty of asking the Senator from Pennsylvania if he now proposes to address himself to his amendment?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. LEWIS. I understand the order, and thank both gentlemen for their courtesy.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, since this amendment was submitted I have discovered that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. PATTERSON] has lying upon the table a similar amendment presented several days ago, and, therefore, with the permission of the Senate, I should like to have it understood that the pending amendment is offered in behalf of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. PATTERSON] and myself. I mean to speak, Mr. President, for only 2 or 3 minutes.

The effect of this amendment, if adopted, will be to strike from the pending Thomas amendment the provision allowing the President to diminish the gold content of the dollar. It will also strike from the measure the free-silver amendment which was adopted just before the Senate recessed last night. It will have that effect because that amendment was in the nature of a perfecting amendment to the gold provision of the Thomas amendment, whereas my amendment proposes to strike out the whole paragraph.

Since this bill has been pending it has had a pronounced effect upon the financial market of this country; it has practically annihilated the market for municipal bonds. Last Monday Nassau County, N.Y., whose credit has always been very high, indeed, advertised for bids for a comparatively small issue of bonds. Not a single bid was received. Last Tuesday the city of Syracuse, N.Y., sought bids on a small issue—as I recall, it was only a couple of million dollars—but not a single bid was received, although the credit of that city has hitherto been very high. Yesterday the city of Boston sought bids on an issue of $3,000,000 of bonds and did not receive a single bid at any rate of interest. It is practically impossible, I am told by men who know, to sell a municipal bond or more than one or two municipal bonds in the city of New York today.

I would not say what I am about to say had I not seen it printed plainly in this morning's New York papers that there is no market in New York today for bonds of the United States Government save as an artificial market is provided by purchases of the Federal Reserve System.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Does the Senator think the failure to find a market for municipal bonds is due entirely to the pending of this legislation?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. WALSH. Is not the Senator aware of the fact that municipalities for some time have been experiencing serious trouble in financing themselves because of the great and extensive diminution in revenue from their taxes?

Mr. REED. Oh, I think that the credit of many municipalities is gravely impaired apart from any effect of the pending bill, but I do not believe that the city of Syracuse in New York State or that Nassau County in New York State has lost its credit because of any condition peculiar to those communities. I know that I myself would regard the bonds of either of those communities as entirely sound, and I believe that would be the judgment of the market in ordinary times. But the plain fact is that, whether it be a Federal Government bond, a State bond, or a municipal bond, no man who lends money today knows in what kind of a dollar he is going to be repaid.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. In the last 3 years every county and every municipality has had difficulty in floating its securities and refinancing itself.

Mr. REED. That is not true of my municipality. The credit of the city of Pittsburgh still stands high.

Mr. BYRNES. I can say to the Senator that the municipalities of my own State, which up to 2 years ago experienced no difficulty in refinancing, have been almost unable since to secure it. Within the past week, before a subcommittee of the Committee on Banking and Currency which was considering the Wagner bill, it was stated that there have been proposals from all over the country that we should extend the powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to enable them to finance and refinance counties, municipalities, and States. The condition is general and has not arisen within the last few days.

Mr. REED. I am quite well aware there are many municipalities which are now in default and that their condition has no relationship whatever to the pending bill.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I respectfully ask the Chair to call upon the occupants of the galleries that they may remain quiet while debate on the floor is proceeding. There is audible conversation in the galleries in a manner such that it rumbles throughout the Chamber, making it impossible to hear debate between Senators.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's point of order is well taken. Occupants of the galleries, who are guests of the Senate, will kindly refrain from audible conversation.

Mr. REED. I thank the Vice President and I thank the Senator from Illinois, but I have always felt that if I could not interest the Senate I did not deserve to be listened to.

Mr. LEWIS. If the Senator can be heard, he is always listened to. It is only when he cannot be heard that he is not listened to.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. May I supplement what was said by the Senator from South Carolina by saying that the Committee on Manufactures so long ago as January of this year had before it a leading expert on city government, who testified that municipal credit throughout the United States had been breaking down, and that loans to municipalities for unemployment relief have contributed greatly to that unfortunate condition?

Mr. REED. O Mr. President, I think that has been the tendency, but there are many outstanding exceptions. The point I want to make is that it is not any rich man who is going to suffer from the inability of those municipalities to float the new loans. Several of such loans are for the relief of destitution and the immediate suffering from the loss of credit of those cities and counties is to the man out of work who needs emergency relief from his city or county. The city, being unable to sell its bonds, cannot come to his relief.

If the bill passes in its present form, Mr. President, with powers in the President to debase the currency by lowering the gold content of the dollar or to indulge in the unlimited free coinage of silver at some ratio to be fixed by him, those powers as well as the power to issue greenbacks will hang like a cloud over the market. No man will dare to contract for future business, no one will dare to buy a bond payable in the future, no one will dare to agree to build a house or to build a locomotive or to build any machinery for future payment because he does not know in what medium his payments eventually will come.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. If the amendment should remain in the bill as written, the United States will be on the same parity as Great Britain. In Great Britain they are not on the gold basis. No one in Great Britain knows at what point they will restabilize the pound. It may be $2.50 or $3.50 or $4. If we are on the same basis as Great Britain, we will not be hurt any worse than Great Britain is being hurt, and there is no complaint that they cannot make contracts there for business, because business is better there today than it was a few years ago.

Mr. REED. The difference is very obvious. At the present time our dollars represent a certain tangible value. We are giving the President power to cut that in half. I know that I for one would not risk a good dollar of today on a moderate rate of interest where I could look forward to no possible appreciation and a possible depreciation of 50 percent or more. I say "or more" because the use of the greenback power and the use of the free silver coinage power would tend to bring the reduction far below 50 percent.

To give a practical illustration of how this is going to work, yesterday a man in my own State called me up to say, "We are very much interested in a large proposal to build some heavy machinery. It would take about 12 months to build it. What can we do to protect ourselves against the proposed changes in the currency, because if we cannot protect ourselves then we will not dare to touch the contract?" The only answer I could give to him was, "Do not make your contract for payment in money at all, but agree to build that machinery for so many ounces of gold of a particular weight and fineness. Disregard money entirely. Otherwise you have no certainty of what kind of rubber dollar you will get as a reward for your outlay of work and capital." Whether he will follow that advice or not I do not know, but I can think of no other way in which he would be safe. Of course, he could take payment in some other metal, like copper or tin or what not, but there he would be engaged in a double speculation, because the price of those commodities may change for some reason peculiar to them.

So all future business will have to cease to be expressed in terms of money, and we will have to go on the basis of so many ounces of gold of a certain standard of weight and fineness.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. If a man should take a contract for so many ounces of gold and the world should continue to go off the gold standard, he would again be dealing in a commodity, would he not?

Mr. REED. Oh, yes; that is true, and it would be a commodity. It would be a process of barter. He would have to take his chances on the value of gold a year from today; but the experience of mankind has been that in the long run gold is the most satisfactory basis for the coinage of a civilized nation. It does not corrode; it is not bulky; it meets all the requirements for a metallic base. There is nothing magical about gold. We could just as well use antimony or some other metal. But until we get stability it is not safe to contract in terms of money for future performance. Meanwhile one had better contract for barter in some article that is reasonably likely to maintain its value.

If the President should exercise the powers under the Thomas amendment, well and good, gold will be worth twice as many of these nominal dollars as it is today. If the coinage of free silver is indulged in, the gold will be worth many more dollars than it is now. If greenbacks are issued, that in itself will change the value of gold with regard to the dollar.

I want to be understood clearly not as prophesying that the issuance of $3,000,000,000 of greenbacks is going to change prices very much, either the prices of gold or the prices of commodities. By itself it is going to have a disappointing effect on the course of prices. Three billion dollars is not going to bring anything like the rise in commodity prices that the inflationists hope from it. When they find the first shot of that medicine does not accomplish the desired result, it is only human nature for them to propose another. The descent to Avernus is easy and it is always easy to come in with further suggestions of enlarging the permissible limitation of the greenback.

Nevertheless the worse feature of the bill, as I see it, is the paragraph to which the present amendment is directed. Strike it out and it may be possible for the Democrats to argue in 1936 that they kept their pledge for sound money. Leave it in and they have made a laughing stock of their own promise—a laughing stock! The Democrats pledged themselves to sound money "at all hazards." What hazards have increased since they made the pledge? Here in the bill as it stands at this moment we have every expedient of currency inflation known to history. We have every type of unsound money that man has ever invented with the single exception possibly of the wampum of the Indian and the teeth of the sperm whale which the Fiji Islanders used to use for currency before the white man came to teach them better.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Will the Senator be so good as to advise the Senator from Oklahoma and the Senate whether or not we had sound money in 1918, 1919, and 1920?

Mr. REED. In the main we did.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The dollar at that time was worth 44 to 50 cents.

Mr. REED. That is right; and nobody then proposed to come in and legislatively take property from the debtor class and give it to the creditor class.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It was not necessary under that system. As soon as the Republicans got in power they had the machinery to put the value of the dollar up from 44 cents to $2.44. If we had sound money in 1920, when the dollar was worth 44 cents, does the Senator contend that we have either sound or honest money when the dollar today buys $2.44 worth of commodities—up 200 cents on each dollar?

Mr. REED. The rise or fall of prices does not affect the soundness or unsoundness of a currency. It causes many growls from the debtor class when commodities fall, and it causes similar growls from the creditor class when prices rise. People who were living on fixed incomes suffered cruelly from the rise in prices during 1919 and 1920, and the people in the debtor class are suffering cruelly today. I am for bringing them relief by sound methods; but, Mr. President, we cannot change the weather by changing the thermometer. That is what these gentlemen are trying to do now. They are trying to change the temperature by changing the scale on the glass. That is not a real change. It is not going to help.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I will yield in a moment. It is not going to help the debtor class to tear dollars in two and pretend that each of them is $2. We are going to give temporary relief to about 15 percent of the population of the United States—temporary, all too temporary. It will be gone by the 1st of January, and the other 85 percent are going to stand a permanent injury. That is the effect of the proposal.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania further yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. REED. Yes; I yield for a question.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Is the Senator willing to have any machinery of Government placed in operation or willing to have any law passed by Congress that will reduce to the extent of even one penny the buying power of the present dollar?

Mr. REED. I am glad to see prices go up if they go up naturally. I think it is a misfortune that I cannot exaggerate in describing to see the price level fall as it has fallen; but the way to get it up is through natural causes. We are doing no kindness to the population by raising prices artificially when we do not stimulate employment. We are merely doing an injury to the people who are now employed.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. REED. Yes; I yield further.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. In 1920 we had the largest amount of real money in circulation that this Nation had ever seen. We had credits to the extent of the resources of our banks. The country at that time was prosperous. Everyone had a job. Enough cars to move the traffic could not be obtained.

In 1920 one of the great parties of the Nation, the party to which the Senator from Pennsylvania owes allegiance, decided that a good campaign issue evidently would be to go before the country and demand a reduction in the high cost of living. That meant a reduction in the cost of the things the people have to buy; and in the platform of that party's convention the program laid out was to bring down the high cost of living by two maneuvers: One, by taking money out of circulation, restricting currency; and, second, by restricting credit.

That was the program proposed by the Senator's party in 1920. In that year the party to which the Senator from Pennsylvania adheres won, and immediately that program was placed in operation. It did not take long to do it. It was done effectively, and the currency was contracted from about six and a half billions down to about four and a half billions. One third of the money was taken from circulation. Further, the Federal Reserve Board served notice upon the Federal Reserve banks, and the Federal Reserve banks in turn served notice on the member banks that they must not be so liberal in granting credits. In other words, they must commence contracting loans and collecting the loans outstanding.

Mr. REED. When did they serve that notice?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That was served in 1920.

Mr. REED. Yes; and who was President when that notice was served?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I am not defending that action.

Mr. REED. The Senator is talking about the sins of my party, and now he is blaming us for something that happened when the Democrats were in power.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President—

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I am simply stating the record.

Mr. REED. I think the Senator from Virginia wanted to interrupt me for a question.

Mr. GLASS. I desire to say that no such notice was served, and I have challenged over and over again people who make that assertion to point to the notice that was served.

Mr. REED. I think the Senator is right.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, the then Senator from Illinois, Mr. McCormick, introduced in this body a resolution calling upon the Federal Reserve Board to advise the Senate of the plan the Federal Reserve Board had in view to bring down the high cost of living.

Mr. REED. And when was that?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That was in May of 1920—the 15th of May.

Mr. REED. And who was President then?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Senator need not ask me that question. I am not defending the party in power at that time. I am condemning what was done.

On the 23d of that month the Federal Reserve Board, in answer to that resolution and in compliance with it, made their report to the Senate that is now a public document, in which the Board outlined their program for doing this particular thing. That program was to restrict currency and to restrict credits—and anyone who reads the report can come to but one conclusion, and that is that notice must have been sent out; otherwise, their recommendations would not have gotten anywhere—that credits were to be restricted; the money was to be collected by the banks; and, being in a far interior State, I know personally that that was the result of the report submitted to this body at that time by the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. REED. Very good.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President—

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. GLASS. We ought to be fair about these things. Currency is not a party issue.

Mr. REED. Of course it is not.

Mr. GLASS. Credit is not a party issue. As a matter of fact, a Democratic Senator from the State of Montana, Mr. Myers, the year before offered a resolution in the Senate which was unanimously passed, as the McCormick resolution was, calling upon the Federal Reserve Board to take some action—which it had no right to take, and never did take—to reduce commodity prices. The Congress in both branches was resonant with demands for a stoppage of profiteering in commodities; and the then Democratic Attorney General, Mr. A. Mitchell Palmer, was denounced in the most unqualified way in both branches of Congress for not putting the profiteers in jail.

So that it is not a party question at all. It never has been. There never has been any order of the Federal Reserve Board such as the Senator from Oklahoma suggests must have been issued. It never was issued, and nobody can point to any such order.

Mr. REED. I thank the Senator. I remember that a few years ago the then Senator from Alabama [Mr. Heflin] started on a crusade against the Federal Reserve Board, and he used to make that assertion rather frequently; but although he was frequently called upon to produce the order or give the date of it or describe it, somehow he never did it. I myself have never believed that such an order was issued; but I say that for the Senator from Oklahoma to blame the Republican Party, which went into power in March 1921, with the drastic decline in commodities that happened in July 1920 is getting the cart away, away before the horse.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I am going to yield the floor in a minute; but I yield now for a question.

Mr. BARKLEY. I want to get back to the part of the discussion in which, a few moments ago, the Senator expressed his great regret at the decline in commodity prices, and his desire that they should be raised, suggesting that the only way by which they can be raised is by natural causes.

Mr. REED. Yes. If we will take the paralyzing hand of Government off business—

Mr. BARKLEY. What are those natural causes?

Mr. REED. An increase in commercial activity.

Mr. BARKLEY. What would produce that?

Mr. REED. An adjournment of Congress. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask the Senator for a serious answer.

Mr. REED. I am giving the Senator a serious answer.

Mr. BARKLEY. Congress did adjourn, and the whole country demanded that it be called into session at once; and when we talked about adjourning for 6 weeks the whole country was hoping that we would not adjourn for 6 weeks and come back here and spend the summer but would finish our program and then adjourn.

Mr. REED. We passed the emergency banking bill; we passed the economy bill; and, for the thirsty, we passed the beer bill. Our program properly was finished then, and then is when we ought to have adjourned. We have kept on going, however, with all this currency tinkering, until we have scared the business people of America half to death.

Mr. BARKLEY. If they had been scared half to death, in addition to the scare that they have had for 4 years, they probably would all be dead by now; but I desire to get back to the Senator's suggestion about an increase in prices by natural causes. The adjournment of Congress is not one of the natural causes which I suppose he had in mind.

If an increase in prices can be brought about by natural causes, what is it that brought about the decrease? Was it brought about by natural causes?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. What?

Mr. REED. Uncontrolled speculation. The people of this country went crazy in 1929.

Mr. BARKLEY. Uncontrolled speculation—

Mr. REED. Wait a minute. The Senator asks questions, but he does not give me a chance to answer.

This is part of a world-wide condition. It all goes back to the loss of life and of capital in the World War. It is very sweet and pretty for orators like the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] to get up and blame Mellon and Mills for causing it; but Mellon and Mills had nothing to do with similar conditions existing in Australia, and New Zealand, and Japan, and all of Asia, and all the other countries of the world. It is world-wide, and if we are going to be honest, we say so. If we are going to be partisan, then we pretend that it is "Mellon and Mills."

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not talking about Mellon or Mills or Reed. I will say, however, that I have much greater admiration for the Senator from Pennsylvania than I have for his co-citizens.

Mr. REED. Let us leave out the personalities.

Mr. BARKLEY. But, aside from all that, I am undertaking to get the Senator's real, serious opinion about this situation, and I am willing to admit that it is world-wide. I am willing to admit that wild speculation has played its part in bringing on this condition, although I do not think it is entirely to blame; and I am willing to admit that the causes following the World War have played their part. The population of the world, however, has increased since the World War at a normal rate. Production has increased at a normal rate. There has been no real overproduction of world goods.

Mr. REED. There has been a great overproduction in this country.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator is referring to a world-wide condition and is describing and discussing a world-wide condition, so we must take the world at large into consideration.

Mr. REED. Yes; but we are the principal manufacturing country, and we have overproduced for the demands of the entire world.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not agree that that is true, because it could not be said truly that one half of the world is hungry because the other half has produced too much food or that one half of the world is naked because the other half has produced too much clothing. Taking the world at large, with all its interchange of trade and its interchange of finance and its interchange of currency, there has been no more than a normal increase in the production of commodities since the World War.

Mr. REED. I do not agree with the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think I can demonstrate it, but I do not want to do it here on the floor at this time by taking the Senator's time. Admitting the part played by speculation, however, admitting the part played by the World War, admitting the part that has been played by the overproduction of some commodities like sugar and coffee and copper and other things that have been overproduced, not only here but in the world, and admitting, as we must, that the production of gold, which is the basis of world-wide currency, has not kept pace with the increase in the normal demands of the people and their production—

Mr. REED. That is not the trouble.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is the Senator contending that the disproportion between the amount of money available and the amount of demand of the people for products which they need has had no part in bringing about the decline in prices of which we are talking, and which we hope to remedy?

Mr. REED. I do not think that the slow increase in the production of gold has anything whatever to do with today's slump. We have plenty of gold to sustain a far greater currency than is now outstanding. We had plenty of gold to sustain a far greater currency than was outstanding in 1929. It was not due to any deficiency in gold that we went into this slump—not at all.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, we may sustain a larger volume of currency on a gradually narrowing gold basis as compared with world population and world production, but it can only be done by thinning out that basis.

Mr. REED. I do not agree with the Senator at all.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield the floor, unless the Senator wants to ask me a question.

Mr. COUZENS. I want to ask the Senator a question. I am, perhaps, as much interested as anybody in finding a way for a recovery. The Senator said that the way to recovery was for Congress to adjourn, and that the recovery would take place naturally. Yet at the same time he said that we got into this condition as a result of an orgy of speculation, which was not a natural cause.

Mr. REED. That is right.

Mr. COUZENS. It seems to me that if we got into our present condition through unnatural causes, we must get out of it through artificial means, at least in part. One of the causes the Senator described was the orgy of speculation in 1928 and 1929.

Mr. REED. That was the cause of the immediate slump at that time. It is not the cause of the world-wide depression.

Mr. COUZENS. How does the Senator account for the fact that from 1921 to 1929 we did not suffer any of this world deflation and world catastrophe in the United States? It was brought to the United States, the Senator said, by a wild orgy of speculation, and he certainly does not call that a natural cause, does he?

Mr. REED. Oh, no. The Senator from Oklahoma had spoken about the great drop in prices, and that is why my mind was on the 1929 period. Of course, the war was the fundamental cause of the world prostration. We were especially lucky in not being touched physically by the war, except as we lost a relatively small number of men. The United States was given a feverish flush of activity industrially, and while the rest of the world went on sinking down into the present abyss the United States was fortunate enough to stay out of it, and a good many of us were foolish enough to think that we never would get into it. That was the state of affairs in 1929. They were not having any boom in Great Britain. They were not having any boom in Germany.

Mr. COUZENS. Will the Senator describe the cause of the great boom in 1928 and 1929? What caused that boom, if we were influenced by the world depression to the extent the Senator indicates?

Mr. REED. It was accumulated prosperity, which was localized here, and we speculated very wildly. It was a speculative boom and not a sound boom. We were headed for overproduction; we all seemed to realize it at the same moment, and we all tried to get out of the same door, but the result was that a good many of us got bruised.

Mr. COUZENS. The Senator's contention, then, is that, having gotten into this mess partly through world conditions and partly through our own imbecility—

Mr. REED. I did not use that word.

Mr. COUZENS. I want to use it, because I think we were imbeciles in what we did in the way of living beyond our means, and buying on the installment plan, and speculating in the markets. Having done that, does the Senator believe there is no remedy except what he would call "natural remedies"?

Mr. REED. I sincerely do believe it. It is just like the human body; it has wonderful recuperative power. We have a nation which is healthy at the core, and it will get itself out of this sickness if we do not keep on giving it bad medicine which slows it up. That is what we are doing.

Mr. COUZENS. The Senator is quite right about giving it bad medicine, but the Senator seems to have used the wrong analogy when he said we were like the human body. Certainly when the human body falls down, and is crushed, we do administer some relief, do we not?

Mr. REED. Yes; but nature gives the best relief.

Mr. COUZENS. That is true, and I am for nature giving the best relief at this time, but I do think that it will have to be augmented by some medicine. As to whether this proposal is the proper medicine or not, I do not believe anybody is smart enough to say.

Mr. LOGAN and Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. REED. I will proceed myself for a moment. The Senator points out the fundamental difference between his political philosophy and mine. I do not believe that prosperity can be created by legislation. I do believe that prosperity can be destroyed by legislation, but that it cannot be created by legislation. We cannot supply for the people the energy, the inventiveness, the persistence, the industry, which go to make up prosperity. It is not a product of legislation, and a legislature ought not to be called on to provide prosperity. I believe that that government is best which governs least, and I have faith in our people that, if we will let them alone, and will not grind them down by too much government interference with their private affairs, they will pull out of this depression. The Senator does not agree with that, and so we have to agree to disagree.

Mr. COUZENS. I know; but the Senator and I sat here all summer, in 1930, considering the tariff.

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. COUZENS. There was no more urgent pleader for artificial stimulation of industry than the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. REED. I would not call that artificial stimulation of industry.

Mr. COUZENS. Certainly it was, and I went along with the Senator. I voted for the tariff bill, and I voted for the artificial stimulation which the industries of Pennsylvania and Michigan and other States got as the result of our tariff. It all depends, with the Senator, on the degree and the place of the artificial stimulation. I believe that if we are going to use it in one direction, such as through a tariff, we are justified in using it in any other direction which seems wise. That does not mean I would approve any world-wide scheme, but it does mean that if we are justified in stimulating business and inspiring the energies and the efforts of the American people in one direction, that that is not the exclusive and only direction in which we can inspire and help the American people.

Mr. REED. I think that if we can protect the American people so as to enable them to keep their own markets for their own workmen they will take care of the balance of it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I have finished what I had to say. I am glad to answer any question, but otherwise I will yield the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. REED. The Senator from Kentucky asked me to yield first.

Mr. LOGAN. I want to ask the Senator a question. I might say that I have listened to his argument, and, in the main, I agree with it. However, it seems to me that the argument advanced that a contract could not be entered into having for its purpose the payment of money, or that the purchase of bonds could not be effected, because the value of the money might change is not as sound as the other part of the argument. If a farmer has a large farm and raises wheat, naturally he does not know what he is going to get for his wheat. He may get 25 cents a bushel, or a dollar a bushel. If a manufacturer of steel engages in business and invests millions in it, steel may be a certain price when he starts in business, but he does not know what his product is going to be worth when he gets ready to sell it.

Mr. REED. Just a moment. I would like to get the Senator's hypothesis straight. They always know, when they manufacture steel, what it is going to sell for. They practically never make it to go into large stocks. Steel is always manufactured after it has been sold.

Mr. LOGAN. That is very true; but when a man goes into the business, and puts up a steel plant, he does not know, or, if he is going to manufacture a machine, he does not know what he will get for it. The point I mean to suggest is this, that if the farmer has no idea what he is going to get for his labor, or if the manufacturer does not know what he is going to get for the product he manufactures, why should the man who is making a transaction which will result in the payment of money be any more protected in the value of the money he is going to receive than the farmer is as to what he is to get for his wheat? I wondered whether the Senator had any satisfactory answer for that, because I am trying to think along with him on these things.

Mr. REED. I will answer that. Agriculture, of course, is susceptible to great uncertainty, not only in the fluctuation of the price for the cash crop but in the fluctuations of the yield, which are due to matters of rainfall or drouth, so that no farmer ever knows, when he plants his crop, what his yield is going to be or what it is going to sell for. That is not true of most other occupations. It is a pity that it is inevitably true of farming. How are we going to help by bringing down every other business activity by subjecting it to that same uncertainty? I do not see how it would help.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma subsequently said: Mr. President, a moment ago in the controversy between the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], and myself, I spoke from memory. In order that the record may speak, I ask unanimous consent that immediately following the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Pennsylvania there may be printed in the RECORD a copy of the report submitted by the Federal Reserve Board to the Senate in obedience to the resolution which had been submitted by the late Senator McCormick, of Illinois.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The report referred to is as follows:

[Senate Document No. 280, Sixty-sixth Congress, second session]

INFLATION OF CURRENCY AND MOBILIZATION OF CREDITS

LETTER FROM THE GOVERNOR OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD TRANSMITTING IN RESPONSE TO A SENATE RESOLUTION OF MAY 17, 1920, CERTAIN INFORMATION CONCERNING THE EXPANSION OF CURRENCY AND THE MOBILIZATION OF CREDITS TO MOVE CROPS OF THE YEAR 1920

FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD,
Washington, May 25, 1920.

SIR: On May 17, 1920, the Senate adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the Federal Reserve Board be directed to advise the Senate what steps it purposes to take or to recommend to the member banks of the Federal Reserve System to meet the existing inflation of currency and credits and consequent high prices, and what further steps it purposes to take or recommend to mobilize credits in order to move the 1920 crop."

In response the Board desires to say that it has recognized for many months past that the expansion of bank credits in this country was proceeding at a rate not warranted by the production and consumption of goods. It has repeatedly admonished the Federal Reserve banks that influence should be exerted upon the member banks to induce them to avoid undue expansion of loans and to keep their volume of outstanding credits within moderate bounds.

Beginning 6 months ago, the rates of discount on various classes of paper at the Federal Reserve banks were advanced. During the latter part of January the present rates were put into effect. These advances, while undoubtedly checking credit transactions which otherwise would have been made, have not been entirely effective in bringing about the reduction in loans desired and which might normally have been expected during the early months of the year. Liquidation during these months is entirely natural and healthy, and is necessary in order that the banks may be prepared to meet the demands made upon them during the crop making and harvesting seasons, but there has been no such liquidation and, on the contrary, commercial loans have steadily increased. Thus it appears that the public has anticipated demands for banking credit which are usually made later on in the year. The average reserves of the Federal Reserve banks are now a little over 42½ percent, as against 45 percent at the beginning of the year, and about 51 percent 12 months ago.

The Federal advisory council, which is composed of one member from each Federal Reserve district, elected annually by the board of directors of the Federal Reserve bank, is required by section 12 of the Federal Reserve Act to meet in Washington at least four times each year. The council is authorized "to confer directly with the Federal Reserve Board on general business conditions; to make oral or written representations concerning matters within the jurisdiction of said Board; to call for information and to make recommendations in regard to discount rates, rediscount business, note issues, reserve conditions in the various districts, the purchase and sale of gold or securities by Reserve banks, open-market operations by said banks, and the general affairs of the Reserve Banking System."

Upon receipt of a notice that the council would hold its regular meeting on May 17, the Board extended an invitation to the three class A directors of each Federal Reserve bank, who are the representatives of the stockholding banks, to come to Washington at the same time for conference with the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal advisory council. This conference was held on the 18th instant, and it was developed at the meeting that the present credit expansion is due in great part to the abnormally high prices of goods and commodities now prevailing throughout the country and to the congestion of foodstuffs and essential raw materials at or near points of production because of lack of transportation facilities.

The Board is convinced that if the unsold portions of last year's crops can be brought to market before the new crop matures, the liquidation of credits which are now tied up in carrying the old crops will be sufficient to offset to a considerable degree the credit demands which will be made upon the banks in moving the crop of 1920.

At the conference above referred to the Board's views were outlined by its governor substantially, as follows: The member banks should lean less heavily upon the Federal Reserve banks and rely more upon their own resources, unnecessary and habitual borrowings should be discouraged, and the liquidation of long-standing, nonessential loans should proceed. Banks were cautioned, however, that drastic steps should be avoided and that the methods adopted should be orderly, for gradual liquidation will result in permanent improvement while too rapid deflation would be injurious and should be avoided. The Board pointed out the necessity for extending such credits as may be necessary to promote essential production, especially of foodstuffs, and that if for any reason it should prove impracticable to increase essential production, there should be greater economy in consumption and more moderation in the use of credit. The problem of the banking system of the country is to check further expansion and to bring about a normal and healthy liquidation without curtailing essential production and without shock to industry, and, as far as possible, without disturbance of legitimate commerce and business. In order to effect this it seems necessary to distinguish between essential and nonessential loans, but the Federal Reserve Board feels it would be a most difficult task, which it should not undertake, to attempt by general rule of country-wide application to make this distinction. During the war there was a broad underlying principle that essentials must be "necessary or contributory to the conduct of the war", but notwithstanding the sharp outline of this principle much difficulty was experienced by the various war boards in defining essentials and nonessentials. All the more difficult would it be for the Federal Reserve Board to make such a general definition in the present circumstances.

Section 13 of the Federal Reserve Act defines the eligibility of paper for discount by the Federal Reserve banks and lays down a general rule that any paper maturing within the time prescribed and "issued or drawn for agricultural, industrial, or commercial purposes, or the proceeds of which have been used, or are to be used, for such purposes" is eligible. No expressed condition is made regarding the essential or nonessential character of the transactions giving rise to notes which may be offered for discount and the Federal Reserve Board is not required, and properly could not be expected, generally to adopt such a criterion of eligibility. It is too much a matter of local conditions and local knowledge to justify at this time any general country-wide ruling by the Board even if such a ruling were deemed helpful.

On the other hand, there is nothing in the Federal Reserve Act which requires a Federal Reserve bank to make any investment or to rediscount any particular paper or class of paper. The language of both sections 13 and 14 is permissive only. Section 4 of the Federal Reserve Act, however, requires the directors of a Federal Reserve bank to administer its affairs "fairly and impartially and without discrimination in favor of or against any member bank", and subject to the provisions of law and the orders of the Federal Reserve Board to extend "to each member bank such discounts, advancements, and accommodations as may be safely and reasonably made with due regard for the claims and demands of other member banks." Thus the directors of a Federal Reserve bank have the power to limit the volume and character of loans which in their judgment may be safely and reasonably made to any member bank.

The recent amendment to paragraph (d) of section 14 distinctly authorizes each Federal Reserve bank on its own account, without reference to action taken by any other Federal Reserve bank, to establish a normal discount or credit line for each member bank, and permits the imposition of graduated rates on discount lines in excess of the normal line. This amendment, however, does not repeal or modify sections 4 and 13, and a Federal Reserve bank is still free to decline to discount any paper which in its judgment does not constitute a desirable investment for it or which in its opinion would not constitute a safe and reasonable investment within the meaning of section 4.

It is the view of the Board, however, that while Federal Reserve banks may properly undertake in their transactions with member banks to discriminate between essential and nonessential loans, nevertheless that discrimination might much better be made at the source by the member banks themselves. The individual banker comes in direct contact with his customers; he is better qualified than anyone else to advise the customer because of his familiarity, not only with the customer's business but with the general business conditions and needs in his immediate locality. In making loans he is bound by no general rule of law as to the character of the purpose for which a loan is being asked. He is entirely free to exercise discretion and can make one loan and decline another as his judgment may dictate. He can estimate with a fair degree of accuracy the legitimate demands for credit which are liable to be made upon him, as well as the fluctuations in the volume of his deposits. He knows what industries sustain his community, and is thus qualified to pass upon the essential or nonessential character of loans offered him. He knows, or should know, what rediscount line he may reasonably expect of his Federal Reserve bank, and he ought not to regard this line as a permanent addition to his capital. With knowledge of the limitations or penalties put upon his borrowings from the Federal Reserve bank the banker may be depended upon to use a more discriminating judgment in granting credit accommodations to his customers, and that judgment he must exercise if the present situation is to be remedied fundamentally.

It is true that under existing conditions the volume of credit required in any transaction is much greater than was the case in pre-war times; but it is also true that the resources of the member and nonmember banks would be ample to take care of the essential business of the country and to a large extent of nonessentials as well if there were a freer flow of goods and credit. If "frozen loans" were liquefied, and if commodities which are held back either for speculative purposes or because of lack of transportation facilities should go to the markets, and if large stocks of merchandise should be reduced, the resultant release of credit would have a most beneficial effect upon the general situation. In the meantime everything must be done to expedite the release of these credits and to restrict nonessential credits in future.

While the problem of credit regulation and control is national and even international in its scope, yet in the last analysis it is merely an aggregation of individual problems, and the proper working out of the situation must depend upon the public and upon the banks which deal with the public. The public must be made to realize the necessity of economy in expenditures and in consequent demands for banking credit. The banks themselves are best able to impress the importance of this policy upon the public.

For the further information of the Senate the Board quotes from the report of the Federal advisory council made to it on May 18, signed by James B. Forgan, president:

"The council has given consideration to the matters included in your communication of April 17 and begs to reply thereto in the following manner, following the order set out by you:

"(a) Causes of continued expansion of credits and of Federal note issues."

"There are many contributing causes, of which the following may be regarded as paramount:

"1. We recognize, of course, that the first cause is the Great War.

"2. Great extravagance—national, municipal, and individual.

"3. Inefficiency and indifference of labor, resulting in lessening production.

"4. A shortage of transportation facilities, thus preventing the normal movement of commodities.

"5. The vicious circle of increasing wages and prices.

"(b) How can the reserve position of the Federal Reserve banks be materially strengthened before the seasonal demand sets in next fall without undue disturbance of the processes of production and distribution?"

"By urging upon member banks through the Federal Reserve banks the wisdom of showing borrowers the necessity of the curtailment of general credits, and especially for nonessential uses, as well as continuing to discourage loans for capital and speculative purposes; by checking excessive borrowings through the application of higher rates.

"(c) If steps cannot be taken at this time leading to a more normal proportion between the volume of credits and the volume of goods, when can they be taken?"

"In our opinion, steps should be taken now, as outlined in answer to the last question.

"(d) What is the effect upon the general situation of the increased Treasury borrowings and what should be the policy of the Federal Reserve banks in establishing rates of discount on paper secured by certificates of indebtedness?"

"It is obvious that the borrowings of the Treasury have the same effect upon the general credit situation as those of other borrowers. The council would suggest the wisdom of congressional relief from the burden of Government financing by a policy of rigid economy; the revision of the tax laws for the sake of a more equitable distribution of the burden without reducing the revenue; the enactment of the budget system, the budget to include provision for the gradual payment of the short-time obligations of the Treasury. These would of necessity preclude unwise appropriations such as the proposed soldiers' bonus.

"In view of the large volume of Treasury certificates of indebtedness carried by member banks at the instance of the Treasury Department, we believe that rates established by the Federal Reserve banks on paper secured by them should not be materially greater than the rates borne by the certificates."

The Board feels assured that the banks of the country now realize the necessity of more conservatism in extending credits and of a reasonable reduction in the volume of credits now outstanding. The Board will not hesitate, so far as it may be necessary, to bring to bear all its statutory powers in regulating the volume of credit, but wishes to point out that the more vital problems relating to the movement of the 1920 crop are physical rather than financial.

This was the unanimous view of those present at the conference on the 18th instant, at which the following resolution was adopted:

"The whole country is suffering from inflation of prices with the consequent inflation of credit. From reports made by the members of this conference, representing every section of the country, it is obvious that great sums are tied up in products which if marketed would relieve necessity, tend to reduce the price level, and relieve the strain on our credit system.

"This congestion of freight is found in practically all of the large railroad centers and shipping ports. It arises chiefly from inadequate transportation facilities available at this time and is seriously crippling business. We are informed that the per-ton mile of freight increased in 3 years—1916, 1917, and 1918—47 percent, while the freight cars in service during the same period increased 1.9 percent.

"A striking necessity exists which can only be relieved through the upbuilding of the credit of the railroads. This must come through adequate and prompt increase in freight rates. Any delay means the paying of greater cost directly and indirectly and places a burden on the credit system which in the approaching time for season expansion may cause abnormal strain. Even under the load of war inflation, high-price level, and extravagances the bank reserves would probably be sufficient if quick transportation could be assured during the time of the greatest strain: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That this conference urge as the most important remedies that the Interstate Commerce Commission and the United States Shipping Board give increased rates and adequate facilities such immediate effect as may be warranted under their authority and that a committee of five, representing the various sections of the country, be appointed by the chairman to present this resolution to the Interstate Commerce Commission and the United States Shipping Board with such verbal presentation as may seem appropriate to the committee."

Much will depend upon the restoration of the normal efficiency of railroad and steamship lines. If adequate transportation facilities can be provided, the Board sees no occasion for apprehension in connection with the movement of crops now being grown.

Respectfully,

W. P. G. HARDING, Governor.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

Mr. BARKLEY subsequently said: Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield to me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. FESS. For what purpose?

Mr. BARKLEY. For the purpose of letting me read one paragraph in connection with the remarks made by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], to be printed immediately after his remarks.

Mr. FESS. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky for that purpose.

Mr. BARKLEY. With reference to the statement of the Senator from Pennsylvania as to the lack of a market for municipal bonds, I wish to read one paragraph from the Philadelphia Inquirer of today, carrying a report from New York of yesterday which is signed by Frank J. Webb, local correspondent of the Philadelphia Inquirer:

New York, April 26.—While no important changes took place in quotations on first-class municipal and State bonds today, an improved undertone was apparent, and for the first time in a week active competition developed among investment banking groups for an award of new securities. The issue amounted to only $1,000,000, consisting of serial bonds of the State of Maine, but five syndicates submitted tenders, and the subsequent re-offering to the public disclosed an active demand.

I think that will throw some light upon the statement of the Senator from Pennsylvania that there is now no demand for municipal bonds.

Mr. FESS obtained the floor.

REMOVAL OF LIMITATIONS ON NATIONAL BANKS

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, will my colleague yield to me to submit a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. BULKLEY. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate bill 1415, to amend sections 5200 and 5202 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, to remove the limitations on national banks in certain cases.

Mr. President, this bill has been reported unanimously from the Committee on Banking and Currency, and there is a strong recommendation of it from the Treasury Department.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate bill 1415, which the clerk will report.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Ohio whether this is an emergency measure?

Mr. BULKLEY. It is.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not want to interfere, if it is an emergency measure, and if it will take no time; but unless it is an emergency measure, and unless there is a unanimous consent so far as the committee and those familiar with the legislation are concerned, it is rather an inopportune time now, when we are going to be under a 15-minute rule within an hour, to bring up additional legislation. I do not want to interfere with the Senator, and I ask him first, is it an emergency measure?

Mr. BULKLEY. It is.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is the Committee on Banking and Currency unanimous?

Mr. BULKLEY. They are unanimous, and there is a strong recommendation from the Treasury Department.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the bill.

The legislative clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5200 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(9) Obligations representing loans to any national banking association or to any banking institution organized under the laws of any State, or to any receiver, conservator, or superintendent of banks, or to any other agent, in charge of the business and property of any such association or banking institution, when such loans are approved by the Comptroller of the Currency, shall not be subject under this section to any limitation based upon such capital and surplus."

SEC. 2. Section 5202 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"Ninth. Liabilities incurred on account of loans made with the express approval of the Comptroller of the Currency under paragraph (9) of section 5200 of the Revised Statutes, as amended."

Mr. BORAH. Do I understand that this bill has a unanimous report?

Mr. BULKLEY. There is a unanimous report of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. BORAH. Then will not the Senator tell us what the bill provides?

Mr. BULKLEY. It would remove, under certain circumstances, the limitation to 10 percent on loans which may be made by a national bank to any one borrower, with the approval, in each case, of the Comptroller of the Currency. It is intended to take care of the case where a new bank is being organized to take over the business of a closed bank which is about to be liquidated. It has been found necessary in many cases, under the formula developed by the Treasury Department, for such new bank to make a loan to the old bank in process of liquidation in excess of the limitation provided by section 5200, which limits a loan to any one borrower to 10 percent of the capital and surplus of the lending bank. It is strongly recommended by the Treasury Department.

Mr. BORAH. I care a good deal more about the committee.

Mr. BULKLEY. The committee is unanimous.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, let me request the Senator not to insist on the proposal at this particular moment, as one or two members of the Committee on Banking and Currency desire to be here when the bill is taken up, if the Senator will defer it for a while, at least.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is heard.

RELIEF OF AGRICULTURE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 3835) to relieve the existing national economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, on the 21st of February, this year, I addressed the Senate at some length on the question which is now before us, though at that time it was presented in a different form. Then we were discussing the quantity of money, the amount of currency, and it was asserted in the debate several times that what we suffered from was a lack of circulating medium; that we would have to have more money and could secure it in two ways. The first was by reducing the gold content of the dollar. It was asserted that if we would make the gold dollar, which now has 23.22 grains, into a dollar with just half that number of grains, we would by that act double the amount of money in circulation in this country without any change of volume at all. Secondly, it was asserted that if we could not reach the objective by a reduction of the amount of gold in the dollar, then it could be reached by increasing the supply of paper money, and that an increase in the supply of paper money might be brought about through the Federal Reserve System operating normally; through a fiat issue by the Government without any redemption feature back of it; or by a rejuvenation of the old national bank issue idea, permitting the national banks to increase their circulation under the National Banking Act, as provided by the Borah amendment to the home loan bank bill.

On that occasion I discussed what I regarded as the fallacy of the contention that we did not have sufficient money in circulation. I pointed out that fallacy by the statement and figures, which I now read:

The truth about the matter is that we have more gold in stock now than we had in 1929, at the peak of our business activity. Not only that, but we mined more gold last year than ever before in any one year in the history of the world. We mined $475,000,000 worth of gold last year, and never before in the history of the world has so much gold as that been mined in a year. In other words, we added to the monetary value of the gold stock in the last year the enormous sum of $475,000,000, and from 1922 to 1932 we lifted the gold stock from $5,000,000,000 to $12,000,000,000; so that there is more monetary gold in the country today than there ever has been before.

So from a statement of these figures the argument that we did not have gold enough would seem to fall.

I also asserted that there was no need of additional currency, because of the simple fact that we had more currency than ever before, but the difficulty was that the currency was idle. It is not a question of a lack of money, but of the lack of the use of money. The money is in the country, but it is not at work, and it will not be at work until business shall resume and labor shall be employed.

I said at that time that we could start the pumps running and we could pump as much currency from the Bureau of Engraving and Printing as could be made, and yet it would not get to the people in a legitimate way unless business resumed and gave employment to people so that whatever money was issued would get to work. I repeat it is not a question of there not being enough money. It is true that under the stress of certain propaganda—a propaganda which always seems to be popular—that is going over the country urging that we need more money, without reference to whether or not the money can be put to work, we added an amendment to the home loan bill to permit the issuance of new bank notes upon the basis of 3½-percent interest-bearing bonds. Under that particular provision of that act there could be issued $1,600,000,000 of additional bank notes. How many million dollars of such notes have been issued? Despite the perfect freedom granted to issue them, there have been issued, according to the report this morning, only about $257,000,000 of that new money. In other words, that provision of law afforded possibility for the issuance of currency, and yet, because of the lack of business, only 25 percent or less of the amount authorized has been issued. Why is that? It is because there is no demand for it, and there is no demand for it because business is not active, and there will be no demand for it until business shall become active.

We passed the Emergency Banking Act, which I think was a good measure. In that act we revived the obsolete Federal Reserve bank note which was issued during the war, but the issuance of which was discontinued soon thereafter. We wrote into the Emergency Banking Act the authority to issue $3,000,000,000 of additional currency in the form of Federal Reserve national-bank notes. How many have been issued under that act during this emergency? Not quite $40,000,000 have been issued, although $3,000,000,000 can be issued. Why are those notes not issued? It is because there is no use for them. What is the sense of the Government's permitting the issuance of large amounts of bank notes, either Federal Reserve notes or Federal Reserve bank notes or old national-bank notes, if there is no demand for them? They cannot be merely pumped out. Business must be the avenue through which they go out into circulation, and without business they will not seek circulation.

So, if it is more currency we need, we have authority to issue additional currency under the present Federal Reserve System, which is an elastic banking system, the establishment of which constituted one of the great reforms in the banking history of the world. I am of the opinion that the Federal Reserve System as it is now in operation is one of the achievements of the last 100 years. I thought so when the measure was being considered in the House of Representatives under the management of the now distinguished senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS].

I was 1 of 37 Republicans who not only spoke for it but voted for it in the House of Representatives, believing that it was a real achievement. It embodied the idea of enlarging the basis for the issuance of necessary currency so as to put it beyond the mere limitation of gold. That law did provide that there must be 40 percent of gold reserve, but it permitted 60 percent of other property as a basis for the issuance of currency. Under that law as written, Mr. President, if there was a demand for new money, new money would flow automatically; and when there was a lessening of the demand for money, automatically the new money would retire. We have had a splendid example of the operation of that act during the last 2 or 3 months.

During the period from 1924 to 1929 the actual employment of Federal Reserve notes averaged from $2,000,000,000 during the first 6 months of the year to $2,200,000,000 during the crop-harvesting season. If the demands of business were such as to call for the employment of $2,000,000,000, that amount of currency readily responded; and if, in connection with the movement of crops, there was a demand for $200,000,000 more, that amount was readily issued; and when the demand ceased the increased notes which had been issued would flow back into retirement and be discontinued. That is an elastic system, to fluctuate in volume as the needs of business required. That is as it was intended to be.

This elasticity is further disclosed by what took place in 1930 and 1931, when we got into this serious emergency. There was a large increase of Federal Reserve note issues, amounting to about $3,000,000,000 on the average. That $3,000,000,000 on the average for that period was increased in the acute emergency period to $4,750,000,000. When the acuteness of the crisis seemed to have eased for the moment the amount of those notes thus issued was again reduced from 4¾ billion dollars to something like 3¾ billion dollars, so that we have today $1,000,000,000 of Federal Reserve notes less than we had at the height of the crisis. Under the Federal Reserve Act with its provisions as to the values upon which we can base the issuance of currency, including our present stock of gold, we could increase the issue today at least $4,000,000,000 of Federal Reserve notes, a sufficient amount to answer any call which the business of the country might make. This can be done without a line of new law, if further currency is our need.

I am saying nothing about the gold coin; I have not mentioned the gold certificates; I have not referred to silver or silver certificates; I am speaking only of the elastic currency which under the legislation we have heretofore enacted can be increased or decreased in accordance with the demands of business. So the idea that it is necessary for us to increase the volume of currency by the enactment of new and additional legislation is perfectly absurd, for there is no basis whatever for such a claim.

The complaint has been made of the emergency legislation enacted at the beginning of this administration that no good has come out of it because it has not been largely used. Out of the $3,000,000,000 possible issuance only $37,000,000 have been issued. I differ from that view. It was the mere fact that it could be used that gave value to it. If the patrons of an institution know that it can secure the necessary funds in case a run is about to start, the mere announcement to that institution that under the law it can receive from the Federal Reserve System sufficient funds to take care of its deposits will prevent the run. It does not mean that they actually have to get the funds, but the mere fact that they can do it will prevent the run. Consequently, I assert that while there has not been much use made of the new currency known as Federal Reserve bank notes, which, of course, could not be done except as a response from business demands, the possibility of their issuance and use has had a salutary effect upon the credit system and has avoided or prevented runs that otherwise might have occurred.

My contention is that we have been proceeding on the wrong basis. We have been proceeding on the basis that we do not have money enough, and it is here proposed that we must either double the amount by reducing the gold content 50 percent, a proposal included in this amendment, or we must add to the paper currency by the National Banking Act which was authorized by the Borah amendment or by the Emergency Banking Act, which authorized $3,000,000,000 Federal Reserve bank notes. Imagine what we could issue under the law if there were any need for additional currency, $4,000,000,000 additional Federal Reserve notes, $1,600,000,000 national bank notes, $3,000,000,000 Federal Reserve bank notes, or a total of $8,600,000,000, or eight billion beyond what we now have.

As I stated on the 21st of last February, the need is not for more currency. If we should issue it, it will not be used, because business must resume before it can be used. What I stated at that time is now conceded, whether it is openly admitted or not. These efforts on more currency having hopelessly failed now comes the proposal long expected, a dangerous one, the one I have feared from the beginning, the fiat remedy. The fact known by all that we cannot get money into the hands of the people who are needing employment until business is able to employ and therefore, since it has been made obvious that we cannot do it that way, it is now proposed that the Government itself shall issue directly these notes and employ the issue to pay them out directly to the owners of bonds, the creditors of the Government. To say nothing about this injustice we might just as well say we will issue notes to pay our taxes. It is exactly the same. In the last analysis this proposal would operate to take care of the Budget by discontinuing the collection of taxes. This principle would justify us in issuing notes of the Government, and with those notes paying the running expenses of the Government. That is fiat running wild.

What is the exact proposal here? Nothing in the way of adding new money as in previous efforts heretofore mentioned, because those efforts do not get the money into circulation for lack of business. In the absence of business necessary to employ money we now propose to issue this money as fiat and pay it out without reference to business, without employing a single unemployed man. What does the pending amendment propose to do? It proposes "to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to cause to be issued, in such amount or amounts as he may from time to time order, United States notes." That is the greenback. That is the mere promise. That rests not on gold, it rests not on bonds, it rests not on wealth. It rests on nothing.

It is said that it rests on the promise of the Government. What does the promise of the Government mean if, when that promise is made, as in the issuance of Government securities, it is immediately broken as herein proposed? What did we promise when we sold our bonds during the war? I listened then to the plea of the distinguished Secretary of the Treasury [Mr. McAdoo], now a distinguished Member of this body. What was his slogan? "Borrow and buy." That is the slogan we used in the first Liberty bond campaign when we made the first issue. Almost every Member of this body, I believe, was active, and properly so, in trying to induce the American people to purchase these bonds. I know I traveled to the capital of my own State at my own expense, believing that I ought to make that much contribution at least, and I spoke in the capital and other places in my State, urging the people to buy until it hurt. Why? I argued that it was an investment, that it was a good thing for the borrower.

We ultimately reached the point where we had to argue from the patriotic standpoint. It was very difficult to sell the victory bonds, which were issued after the war ended, when patriotism did not have the strong appeal that it had before. We asked the American people, the school teacher, the clerk, the farmer, every citizen of our State to buy those bonds which represented a mere loan to the Government when we had our backs against the wall. They took the bonds. Every issue was subscribed. We even put pressure upon our citizens, in some cases hardly justified even in war times. Most of those bonds are still outstanding, many in the hands of the original purchasers, and now comes the proposition that, instead of those obligations being paid, in accordance with the terms of the Government pledges, they are to be redeemed by the issue of a credit that is a mere duebill, nothing but a promise, no redemption, not convertible, unconvertible. The holders of those bonds are expected to take this duebill in exchange for the bonds which we induced them to buy when it hurt them to buy. I cannot believe that men can be so short-sighted as to want this Government to commit an act of such dishonor, such discredit, such a breach of faith.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] said yesterday that the holder does not need to sell the bonds if he does not want to do so. That does not answer it. Why are bonds going down and stocks going up? Because we cheapen the money, Government bonds that are equal to money go down. If the Government's credit is worth anything, then those bonds ought to be worth what the money of the Government is worth. If money goes down by cheapening it as it is proposed here to do, then bonds go down. It does not answer for a man to say that we do not need to sell them if we do not want to do so. If we do not sell them, we are retaining what becomes a drug to the degree that we inflate the currency. We cheapen it, and therefore this Government, the greatest government on God's earth, is proposing, like a highway robber, to go out in the open and take from the people, to which it made its solemn pledge, a certain amount of their wealth by a legislative act. That is dishonest. That is discreditable. That is writing the word "perfidy" over the brow of this great Government.

It is said the value of currency is not going down. If it is not going down, what becomes of the argument that we must increase the prices of commodities? The prices of commodities cannot go up if the price of money does not go down. The purpose of the bill is to make it go down. The argument is that it will make the price of commodities go up. If the commodities go up as a philosophy of inflating the currency, then we inflate the value of the bonds just the same, which amounts to cheapening them to that degree. There is no way to get around it. If we are ready to do that sort of thing, let us make it known to the world.

Mr. President, I know that it is claimed that this money will not lose its value. It is argued very largely on the basis of the greenback. A colleague of mine who does me the honor of listening reminded me yesterday of the debate on the greenback issue back in 1862. I regret that under the exigencies of getting final action quickly on the measure I shall not be able to read all that I should like to read from that debate. I want to compliment the Democratic leadership on the very fine attitude they have taken in giving ample time for discussion to all who desire to talk. I do not mean that we are rushing the measure through. We are not. But the limitation of time prevents my reading into the RECORD some of the startling prophecies made in 1862 in this and the other body when the progenitor of the bill that is now before us was considered for the first time.

Here is a statement on that issue in 1862 by Justin Morrill, one of the great minds of that day:

It is pretended that as the whole United States are holden for the redemption of these notes they must be good, and will, therefore, pass at par, especially if made a legal tender. Never was a greater fallacy.

And the immediate future proved it:

The United States are abundantly able to meet all the vast exigencies of this war, to pay all liabilities, only put them into the proper form. It cannot be done on demand, and it is a fiction to pretend to do so. They must be funded until the means can be accumulated for their redemption. As a mere currency no more of them can be used than enough to fill the demands of commerce. That measure is the extent they will go, and it is clear and well defined. Even when they were redeemed in specie, and stood at par all over the country—

And so on. The great statesman denounced that argument made in this body and the other body in 1862. This particular speech was made in the other body. The argument he denounced was the same that we are hearing made in both Chambers today on this child of the greenback that is now before us.

Justin Morrill further said:

No historian has heretofore ventured to eulogize this mottled-faced villain—

Referring to Henry VIII, who was the progenitor of this sort of legislation—for contracting prodigious debts and then for swindling his creditors by paying them off in base metal, and, if he could speak from across the great gulf, I think he would tender thanks for the few drops of water poured upon his parched tongue by the gentleman from Massachusetts, though it comes late and through a Puritanic ally.

Another very eloquent Member of the House from my own State, Mr. Horton, made very prophetic remarks in connection with the issuance of irredeemable paper:

During this discussion we have been told that old rules will not answer. I have read, and I presume all have, the saying of the wise man, that "the thing that has been done, it is that which shall be done"; and that "there is no new thing under the sun." I do not believe there is any new thing in the laws of finance. I do not believe all the legislative wisdom we could get together could, if concentrated in one man, discover any new thing in the doctrine of business. Experience, practical knowledge, are the only safe guides in this matter. But there is one great interest which you will appreciate, and which, I think, I know something of, and that is the interest of labor. Of all classes of community to be injured by this great act of oppression—and that is the true name for it—it is that vast multitude that get their bread by the sweat of their brow. You render the standard of payments uncertain, and they never will know what their wages are for a day's work or a month's work. The capitalist of New York, the millionaire here and there, will take care of himself, and the first thing he will do will be to send his means out of the country. Every man that has foreign relations in any shape will send his coin out of the country. Why?

That is a statement made in 1862 by a great statesman opposing the issuance of greenbacks; and yet there seemed to be such an exigency, with the Civil War aflame, that this bill passed, and was signed by the President of the United States.

What followed? First, there was only $50,000,000 issued; but that was redeemable in gold upon demand, and the value did not go down. In fact, that was not a greenback at all. Under the law known as the "Greenback Act" there was issued, first, $150,000,000, and it was thought that that was all that would be necessary. That was in February of 1862. By July, only 4 months later, another $150,000,000 was issued. Having alleged previously that $150,000,000 was all that would be necessary, in 4 months there was a total issue of $300,000,000. Then, in January of 1863, the issuance of another $150,000,000 was attempted, which was cut down $50,000,000, so that only $100,000,000 additional was issued. So the sum total amounted to $400,000,000 of these greenback promises to pay, not convertible into anything, but relying on a mere promise, the assertion being made all along that at once after the war was over they would be redeemed.

The present Presiding Officer [Mr. COPELAND], very familiar with the history of our country, knows that they were not redeemed immediately following the war; but, on the other hand, when the crisis of 1873 settled down upon us, another effort was made not only to renew but to increase the issuance of greenbacks. It passed, as the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], who gives me the honor of his presence, well remembers, both the House and the Senate, and was defeated only by the veto of President Grant. That was as late as 1874. That was 12 years after the original issuance, with the allegation on the part of all interested parties that the greenback was merely an emergency measure, to be discontinued when the emergency was over. It was the natural course ever pursued by the advocates of fiat money.

Anything like inflation, such as the Greenback Act and such as the present measure is, feeds upon itself. It is natural to do it. The more we issue the more is demanded. We propose here to issue $3,000,000,000 of these notes. They are intended to be issued to increase the commodity price to lift the price level. Suppose the price level is not increased. Suppose $3,000,000,000 of issuance does not effect a change in the price level, or at least to the degree demanded by the debtor in whose interest this bill is urged. Does not every man here admit that the moment it is determined that it is not sufficient to increase the price level there will be a demand to increase the issuance, and to increase it to the amount that will be assumed to be sufficient to make the desired change in the price level?

Mr. President, that is as inevitable as that the sun will rise tomorrow morning, and the President knows that that is what will happen. If the first issuance for any reason will not produce the effect that it is now alleged that it will produce, the argument will be, "We did not issue enough of them; and why, after starting upon this policy, should we defeat ourselves by refusing to do the obviously necessary thing in order to effect what we want done?"—and we shall be in the midst of an indeterminate amount of issuance of this kind of currency that is purely fiat. It has been the history of all fiat periods and will continue to be. Just as inflation is demanded after the failure of the expanded currency to increase the level so will more inflation be demanded.

Some Senator said yesterday that the present greenback has been based on gold since March 14, 1900, when the Gold Standard Act became a law, and argued that this issue is virtually based on gold. No, Mr. President; the price of our money fluctuated since the Civil War up to 1879. The greenback dollar went down as low as 35 cents. When we resumed specie payment, after a terrific fight in 1875, to take effect on the 1st of January 1879, making the greenback payable in gold, then, of course, it reached the 100-cent value; but there was a desire all along among Treasury officials that the greenback be retired. That was largely because it was claimed that the greenback issue, although in the amount of only $400,000,000, cost the Government $589,000,000.

I want Senators to give attention to that statement. We issued a Government note without any redemption feature on behalf of the people, and we issued it in the amount of only $400,000,000, and yet economists and historians tell us that that issuance cost the people of the United States, in addition to the $400,000,000, $589,000,000, or a greater amount than the purchasing power of the original issue. That is what always will happen; and here we propose to make this issuance of $3,000,000,000 that may be reopened at any time Congress sees fit!

Mr. President, on March 14, 1900, we did decide to make all of our money equal to gold; and in order to give that stamp to the greenback, which was the only item that was not covered with gold, we declared that there should be kept in the Treasury $150,000,000 in gold for its redemption. That $150,000,000, of course, is not set apart in the vaults as a separate sum. It is in the general fund; but the main thing that sustained the gold standard under that act was that in the same law we provided that when a greenback is taken in, it cannot again be paid out except for gold. That was done so that the Government would not be in the vicious circle of paying out the greenback, then the holder coming to the Treasury and demanding gold for it, the Government again having to pay it out, and then the holder coming back to redeem it in gold. That was stopped by the act of March 14, 1900; and that is the only feature that gives the greenback the stability that it now has.

So that when we talk about this particular issue being under the same law of 1862, with the amendments thereto, under which the greenback originally was issued, we are in error, because the amendment that is referred to in the supplemental items of the bill refers to an amount of gold without speaking of a ratio. So that when we make this issuance, that does not necessitate any degree of gold to be deposited to support it. Therefore, Mr. President, the contention on the part of the advocates of this measure that it is on the same basis as the present greenback, and is supported by gold, is not carried out in the terms of the bill and in the laws to which we refer. It is a pure example of fiat money.

Mr. President, the first serious objection that I have to any policy of inflation, and especially to this particular item, is that I claim it is a dishonorable proposal for us to make.

It is a discreditable course for the American Government to pursue. It is a sovereign power repudiating a solemn obligation to its citizens.

It is breaking its plighted faith to the American people, and whenever a government repudiates its own good faith, repudiates its honor, it has little left. A promise that is made hereafter will not be worth the paper it is written upon if this practice is to be used as a precedent to point the future course of the Nation in its relations to its own people.

Mr. President, the principle of inflation as here proposed is that the Government will create a circulating medium in the form of a measure of value without creating any wealth. We cannot get away from the sound principle of wealth—that there is not a dollar in the country which does not represent wealth, and that wealth represents so much labor. There is no such thing as purchasing power that is not based upon wealth, which in turn is based upon labor. When we say that we will create these notes by mere issuance, we do not mean that we will add a dollar of wealth to the Government.

Now comes a proposal that we add to this amendment a sufficient amount to pay the adjusted-service certificates. That would be getting the money directly into circulation without adding any business at all. It would differ from the proposals to increase the currency, which could only be done by revival of business. Of course, I am opposed to that. I objected to it when proposed in the last Congress. It is true that if we go into this field, there is no reason why we should not extend the benefit to the veteran. But aside from this issue I want it understood that when I vote to pay the veteran the amount of the certificate that was issued to him in good faith, it will be paid, not in a depreciated dollar, but in a sound dollar. As I have said, I am not in favor of that amendment, because of the principle that is involved; but there is no reason why, if this proposal is sound, it should not be applied to the veteran as well as to the mere bondholder, who has to have his bond taken up by this sort of transaction.

Mr. President, inflation is merely creating price without value. It is attempting to pump into circulation money without any foundation, without convertibility, without any redemption element. For that reason if it operates—that is, if it cheapens the dollar as the proponents here say it will—it is going to be hardest upon the man who sells service, whether he be a laborer selling by wage, or a clerk selling his services for salary, or a teacher, or what not. It will be favorable, it is true, to the borrower, because he will be permitted to pay off a debt in a depreciated dollar. It will be hurtful not only to the lender, but it will be hurtful to every man who is dealing in the money of the country, whether he is a clerk, a teacher, a pensioner, an annuitant, a policyholder of an insurance company, it matters not what, any man who sells his services will have his money cheapened in the interest of increasing the prices of the things it buys and in that degree he is going to be hurt. It is designed by Government action to increase the cost of living. That is its admitted purpose and at a time when for millions of our people it is difficult to live.

Germany did not hesitate to issue money without provision for redemption, and the result was that it destroyed absolutely the entire middle class of that great country. The teachers, the annuitants, the pensioners, who had retired to live upon their savings, found themselves absolutely in want because the mark in which their savings had been invested and were paid was absolutely worthless. By one stroke of the pen the high command destroyed totally all the savings of a class of the German people, especially of the middle class, who could not take care of themselves; and while the German Government could not operate on the foreigner, it left him holding securities which were almost worthless to be collected if possible.

Mr. President, the proponents of this measure do not intend to do that, of course. Nobody in the Senate who is advocating the theory of this measure believes that he is heading to destroy all the middle-class people, but if this amendment will do what the proponents intend it shall do—lift the price level of commodities—the only way to do that is to cheapen the dollar, and in the degree that the dollar is cheapened the pensioner is harmed if not ruined; in fact, 85 percent of our people are injured, that large portion of our people being the salesmen of services rather than the salesmen of commodities.

Mr. President, take the case of any store in this city or of any great industry of the country employing labor. The store is owned, we may say, by half a dozen people. They sell commodities and will get an advantage from this measure. But the hundred laborers, the hundred girls whom the half dozen men in that store employ, do not sell commodities—they sell service—and what effect will it have on them? It will cheapen their dollar, and their labor is the only thing they sell. We would increase the price of the commodity which they sell for the half dozen men, but we would decrease the purchasing power to the degree we increase the price of the commodity to the people who are working. Those girls represent, perhaps, 85 percent of the American population. Not over 15 percent, outside of the farming element, sell commodities. They will be selling commodities through the agency of the people who sell them services. This bill favors the half dozen at the expense of the hundred.

Mr. President, the very great danger of an inflationary movement is always worse upon the laborer than upon anyone else. That is because everyone knows that as we increase the prices of commodities by cheapening the dollar we do not increase either wages or salaries, and it is the wage earner and the salary earner who represent the vast majority of our people, probably 85 percent. This reduction of purchasing power among the masses must effect disastrously in the end the farmer, whose product is largely consumed by this portion of our people.

Mr. President, it is on the question of the effect upon the wage earner that I want to read a statement of a great Democrat. I know how useless it is to quote anybody these days. Congress and the Presidency are under the control, in a tremendous majority, sufficient to pass anything they want to pass, of a party that was founded by Jefferson. The classic statement of Thomas Jefferson, which we have all so often quoted, is that that government is best which governs least. I think that is true. There are Senators here who believe that to be true. Yet here is a sweep in the opposite direction, a step the length of which no people in America ever dreamed of taking before, and it is taken under the command of a leader of the party of Thomas Jefferson.

I know that it is futile for me to speak of Thomas H. Benton, the famous author of the celebrated work, Thirty Years in Congress, who, because of his strong advocacy of sound money, was known in history as "Old Bullion." It is useless for me to speak of great leaders like Samuel J. Randall and others—and I mention only great Democrats—who stood, like stone walls, against any such movement as is here proposed. Especially would it be of interest for members of the party in the majority to read the Democratic utterances in 1862, as recorded in the volume I have here before me, against the greenback issue, which was the progenitor of the measure we now have before us. I think it is perfectly futile for one to quote anything these great leaders in the past stated. It would not even make a dent in one's thinking.

I shall, however, refer to one for whom I had wonderful admiration, because I watched his career as the Presiding Officer of the House of Representatives long before I ever came to Washington. He later on became a famous Secretary of the Treasury under Grover Cleveland. When the question of inflation came up, John G. Carlisle, of Kentucky, used these words in opposition to the proposal:

The evils of a fluctuating and depreciated currency must always fall most heavily upon the poor, who do not produce for themselves but for others, and who are, therefore, compelled to purchase with their wages everything they eat, drink, and wear. Their wages will remain stationary, or at best they will rise slowly and at long intervals, while the price of the necessities of life are liable to rise suddenly from day to day as the value of the currency changes, and consequently, what would appear to be a fair rate of compensation at the time a labor contract is made may prove to be grossly inadequate long before the labor is performed. The laborer cannot protect himself against fluctuation in the prices of commodities, for he cannot purchase at wholesale when prices are low and keep out of the market when prices are high. He must buy day by day, and he must pay out of earnings, whether their purchasing power will be great or small. The employer cannot afford to promise higher wages in advance, because with a depreciated and fluctuating currency he could not possibly foretell what the price of his product will be at any time in the future. Thus the laborer is the victim of two influences, neither of which can be successfully resisted by him. He must accept whatever wages are offered by employers or go without work and he must pay whatever prices are demanded in the market or go without food.

I do not believe any statement could be stronger than that one as to the effect of such a movement upon labor. I do not forget that the proponents of the pending amendment insist that the money is not going to be inflated to the point of losing its purchasing power. If it is not, then the purpose of the amendment falls, because the only purpose of the amendment, and admittedly the only purpose, is to increase the prices of commodities, which can only be done by decreasing the purchasing power of the dollar.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COPELAND in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. FESS. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. I should like it to go into the RECORD at this place that Daniel Webster said in the Senate that "paper money is the most effective machine ever devised by the wit of man to fertilize the rich man's field with the sweat of the poor man's brow." That statement of Daniel Webster corresponds with what the Senator from Ohio has quoted from Carlisle.

Mr. FESS. I thank the Senator from Oklahoma; and since he mentions Daniel Webster, I want to read a statement from another famous Webster, Pelatiah Webster, who was regarded in the Revolutionary days as one of the advanced thinkers in America, and a greater leader in the formative period of government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Ohio permit the Chair to announce that the hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Senator will now be under the limitation provided in the unanimous-consent agreement of 15 minutes on the bill or on any amendment?

Mr. FESS. I thank the Chair. I shall finish within that time.

Pelatiah Webster, commenting upon the dangers of inflation in the colonial days, made a pregnant statement. When someone said that paper money had saved the country, as some Senator said here the other day that greenbacks saved us in the war, this is what Pelatiah Webster said:

If it saved the State, it also polluted the equity of our laws; it turned them into engines of oppression and wrong; corrupted the justice of our public administration; destroyed the fortunes of the thousands who most confided in it; enervated the trade, husbandry, and manufactures of the country, and went far to destroy the morality of our people.

The famous Andrew D. White, a notable educator, historian, and diplomat, said, speaking of inflation:

As values became more and more uncertain there was no longer any motive for care or economy, but every motive for immediate expenditure and present enjoyment. So came upon the Nation the obliteration of thrift. Luxury, senseless and extravagant, set in. To feed it there came cheating in the Nation at large and corruption among officials and persons holding trusts. . . . Faith in moral considerations, or even in good impulses, yielded to general distrust. National honor was thought a fiction, cherished only by enthusiasts.

That is strong language as applied to legislation.

Mr. President, inflation, in its natural result, is disastrous morally, socially, and economically. I know of nothing which has such disastrous economic effect as an unstable currency. I know of no worse business calamity that could befall our country than the inability of any man to know in what he is to be paid after his contract is made. I know of no more unwise venture than to create a situation where those who think of launching into any enterprise which they cannot execute at once but which is to be executed in the future cannot know upon what basis their contracts are to be fulfilled.

Only last week a business man saw me at my home and said that he was about to undertake a venture in the Adirondacks, in the State of the distinguished Senator who now presides over this body, and he said, "I do not know how to make my contract." All I could do was advise him to put an additional clause in his contract, if it is to be made now, protecting him from any inflationary effect of this proposed legislation. I do not know of any other way in which he might protect himself. I had not thought of the suggestion made by the Senator from Pennsylvania a while ago, but any legislation that unstabilizes the currency by substituting the element of uncertainty for that of certainty, ever a characteristic of our monetary system, makes it impossible for a contractor who looks to the future for the execution of his contract to know what the terms are going to be; and who is going to enter business and make a contract with that situation hanging over his head? If we were looking for a way to prevent a revival of business, we could find no surer method than the unstabilizing of our money.

Mr. President, I have tried to emphasize the fact that the one thing essential for us to get back on our feet is to give opportunity for business to resume. This administration started on that course. I think that its effort along the line of reducing expenditures, looking to the balancing of the Budget, is a wise course, and the whole country must commend the administration for its effort in that direction. It took courage to do it; courage was essential, and fortunately we had it.

Mr. President, so long as business has no chance to employ labor there will be no return to normal conditions. No matter what we do with the currency, we will only do harm. The thing we have got to do, without which there will be no satisfactory outcome, is to make it possible for the unemployed to be employed; and we must look to business for that result. What we should do is to live within our income by reducing expenses as much as we can, and then, if we must enlarge our scheme of taxation, be careful not to launch upon a plan of taxation that will destroy all opportunity for business resumption. Until we open the way for the re-establishment of confidence in the mind of the business man—and that can only come through a rational balancing of the Budget, by living within our income—I do not care what we do in the way of tampering with the currency, we are not going to secure employment for labor. And so long as labor is not employed we are not going to remedy the terrific depression under which we are now struggling.

I am willing to go a long way with the administration along that line, but they are asking me too much when they ask me to tamper with the stability of our dollar, which would make it further impossible for business to do what it must do; and in that event there can be no favorable outcome.

Mr. President, I cannot vote for this amendment. I regret I cannot vote for the bill to which the amendment is attached. I should like to vote for that particular portion of it which looks to the relief of the mortgage situation. I think there is a legitimate field for relief in that direction and that it is more or less fundamental. The provision has some dangers in it, but they are, I think, not very great. I cannot, however, Mr. President, go to the extent of placing agriculture under the control of one man; and certainly I cannot go to the extent of inflating the currency, with all the disastrous results to follow, if there shall ensue the effects for which the proponents of the bill are looking. I regard this particular movement, if it shall succeed as is now contemplated, as the greatest and most unnecessary gamble with the future of our people ever engaged in in all history. If enacted, this bill will cause the rich to become richer and the poor to become poorer, for it is the rich who are the common-stock holders and the poor who are the bondholders. I cannot vote for such a proposal as this in the face of the fact that you are starting something that you cannot stop. The talk of controlled inflation is mere nonsense in a government where politics controls.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] on behalf of himself and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. PATTERSON] to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, at the conclusion of my remarks I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a statement by the president of the American Federation of Labor dealing with the subject of currency inflation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit A.)

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I shall be brief in what I have to say by way of explanation of my vote upon this measure, which could well be termed an omnibus bill.

As I have heretofore discussed the farm-relief and farm-mortgage sections of the measure, previous to the amendment that has been offered by the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] upon the subject of inflation of our monetary system, I shall confine my remarks to his amendment.

Mr. President, there is little doubt in my mind but that we should have an expansion of our monetary system. If not this, then there should certainly be a liberalization of the Federal Reserve System that will end this deflation and restore credit and protection to the debtor class so that they may be saved from complete loss of their investments, and in many instances of their homes.

The character of expansion that I favor, if it is practicable, and I believe it to be, is one that should be made upon a sound basis without in any way reducing the metal base that has served us so well from the beginning of our Government down to the present time.

The first method of extending credit is through the Federal Reserve banks, but it has one objection, namely, that it deprives of the credit facilities private and public enterprises and also the individual citizen who is sorely in need of such credit at the present time. If the obligation is assumed by the Federal Reserve System through its member banks to the extent of $3,000,000,000 of Government securities, I am impressed with the thought that possibly these banking institutions will limit the necessary credit the public desires if the method proposed shall be adopted.

The second method, which provides for the issue of $3,000,000,000 of fiat money, to be used by the Federal Government to meet maturing obligations and to purchase bonds, is not my idea of properly safeguarding a sound financial system, such as the United States has enjoyed since the return to specie payments and the redemption of the greenbacks in 1879.

In the past, when the opportunity afforded, I have voted against this idea of inflation.

I am so impressed, Mr. President, with the importance of providing some relief, which does not seem to be forthcoming through the Federal Reserve System, that, out of necessity, and due to my confidence in the never-failing response of the taxpayers of this country in support of their Government from the beginning down to the present time, I feel I would be justified in giving my vote, under the circumstances, in favor of the first two methods of providing additional credit. Especially is that true, Mr. President, when there is a limitation as to the amount of the issue of this fiat money, not unlike that provided in the case of the fiat money which was issued during the direful period of the Civil War, which saved for us the Union which we enjoy at the present time.

To the third method I am unalterably opposed, and I trust that this paragraph may be eliminated from the amendment as a tribute to the development of our Nation, to its progress, and to its welfare, in that we have never in the history of 150 years in any way depreciated our currency except in one period, and that was during the period of the issuance of greenbacks, which finally were redeemed at par.

The one outstanding achievement of the American people in the conduct of their Government through the succeeding Presidents and legislative bodies, from its foundation to the present time, has been their fundamental conviction favoring a monetary basis that was indestructible and never failing in its value as a redeemer for all mediums of circulation that might flow in the stream of commerce and trade, and that the recipient or owner of one of the certificates of indebtedness represented by our paper currency could find an element, basic in its character, that would redeem and keep it upon a parity with the gold standard which was adopted on April 2, 1792, and which has continued down to the present time, its value not being reflected because of its adornment by being minted, but represented in the basic element, the value of which has not varied for a period of 100 years.

The ruinous prices the distinguished senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] speaks of in his masterful address on April 24, 1933, are going on not only in the sale of farm products but in the factory and the mine as well.

The buying power of one third of the people has long been dissipated, and it has been reduced by 50 percent for the other two thirds. There has been no effort made to create work opportunities for the industrial worker. There could be a greater amount of employment made possible, but the Congress has failed to provide these opportunities.

Can these opportunities be reclaimed through international conference, where money values are to be discussed and agreed to, if possible? I admit that it is an important phase to stabilize the entire economic condition that exists in the world. This conference, however, is far away and does not hold any immediate hope to the hungry.

In the month of June the parley takes place, and in all probability it will be many weeks or months beyond the ending of the parley before any real relief comes. In the meantime we are doing nothing in the way of an effort to relieve our own people in a permanent way. This attitude has been continued for the past 1½ years, while other nations have acted, and that, too, with telling results, where idleness has been ameliorated and many industrial workers have found employment in these countries. Much of this employment, which is enjoyed by the workers of Europe and Asia who were formerly idle, has been to the great disadvantage of our own workers.

What we need in America is business—a demand for industrial products, which means work for the unemployed. This accomplishment would bring about purchasing power. What the industrial owner and industrial worker need today is credit, which is more and more denied to them for the reason of their lack of earning power, first, on the part of the owner, and, secondly, on the part of the worker.

This element of credit is the very lifeblood of individual and industrial existence and is being denied at the present time by the banking institutions for the lack of demand for the products of these industries which deprives them of earning power.

The query that I make, Mr. President, is whether credit will come, even should inflation be voted by Congress, with the present set-up in the way of facilities through the Federal Reserve System. I am sure this will not be the case if it is left to them to liberalize credit unless business is assured to those in need of financial credit. Indeed, it would be an injustice to inflate our currency if we are not at the same time going to provide work opportunities for the unemployed.

In keeping with the facts that have been presented in the able discussion by the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] a campaign for contraction and deflation instead of liberalization must be uppermost in mind of those responsible and who represent the controlling power of the Federal Reserve Banking System. In my judgment, they justify this attitude upon the continuous and ever-failing business condition in the way of a lack of demand for the products of the average manufacturing industry of the country.

This fact was well proven by the distinguished senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] in his able argument when he pointed out that there were only two industries in America at the present time entitled to credit. The one is the brewery and the other the bottling industry of America.

It may be argued that the brewery and bottling business is not pertinent to the question I raise. The support that I wish to offer to this contention is that both the representatives of industry and labor are in accord; and if there is anyone who doubts, I would respectfully refer him to the hearings that were held before the Ways and Means Committee of the House on the subject of depreciated currency in January and February 1933.

If American industry was placed on a competitive parity with the European and Asiatic countries in the American trade, I have not the slightest doubt, Mr. President, that millions and millions of our unemployed would be put to work. The steel mills would increase their production. This would call from the mines, the forests, and the furnaces the products necessary to the operation of this basic industry.

I have had sufficient proof in the study of unemployment from the time Europe and Asia went off the gold standard to convince me that if the opportunity were afforded it would have my enthusiastic support, as I am thoroughly convinced that it would do more to relieve the distress which exists today than any other legislation we can enact.

Mr. President, labor is the basis of all wealth. Sound money is the lifeblood of any nation of people. Without it they fail and decay. I am in agreement with President Roosevelt when he stated "that it is imperative that we have sound money."

I can follow enthusiastically and patriotically the admonitions given by that great American, Thomas Jefferson, whose name we so often hear extolled on this floor. In 1792 Jefferson wrote Hamilton as follows:

With respect to the dollar, it must be admitted by all the world that there is great uncertainty in the meaning of the term, and therefore all the world have justified Congress for their first act of removing the uncertainty by declaring what they understand by the term, but the uncertainty, once removed, exists no longer, and I very much doubt a right now to change the value, and especially to lessen it. It will lead to so easy a mode of paying off their debts. Besides, the parties injured by this reduction of the value would have so much matter to urge in support of the first point of fixation.

Do we wish to bring back the doubt eliminated by Jefferson when the value of the gold dollar was agreed on? I think we should continue in the future, as we have in the past, to maintain the standard of our basic money at a value of 23.22 grains of pure gold to the dollar.

Again, Mr. President, I have been aided in my arrival at a conclusion as to the course I shall take in dealing with the third clause in the bill by the expressions of that great statesman, Daniel Webster, who graced this Senate body 90 years ago in the trying hours of our Nation's future destiny. At that time, referring to cheap money, he said:

He who tampers with the currency robs labor of its bread. He panders, indeed, to greedy capital, which is keen-sighted and may shift for itself, but he beggars labor, which is unsuspecting and too busy with the present to calculate for the future. The prosperity of the work people lives, moves, and has its being in established credit and steady medium of payment.

Mr. President, I am convinced that there is something wrong with the banking institutions of this country and those who are responsible for the direction of this important and essential necessity to the American people.

We are told they have something in liquid reserve ranging between 60 and 70 percent. There must be some reason for the masters of these banks continuing to grind down upon those who owe them obligations, destroying individuals and industries without reason or justification in an apparently unsympathetic and heartless manner regardless of the security that may underwrite the obligations. In other words, Mr. President, deflation with an average banking institution is being carried on now with a more relentless hand than ever before in the progress of this depression. The explanation given by the patriotic senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] in justification for the attitude he takes in advocating this radical legislation, which he says is epochal and not in keeping with any principle submitted to a parliament in the last 6,000 years, is clearly disclosed when he points out the course adopted by the Federal Reserve System.

Mr. President, it is within my personal knowledge that in their examinations the bank examiners treat any loan as doubtful, and in many instances as bad, if the maker cannot liquidate it on demand, regardless of the worth of his collateral. Pray tell me, Mr. President, why any man living under the American flag would wish to borrow money when he could liquidate any obligation that he places with the bank? It is beyond my understanding and it is not in keeping with sound business. If this attitude of those who control the Department of the Comptroller of the Currency, as exhibited through the examiner, reflects the attitude of the banker toward his customer in this merciless campaign of deflation against the citizen who finds himself unfortunately a debtor in this direful period, this practice should be stopped and should have the first consideration of the President. Or is it the policy adopted by the Federal Reserve System? If so, it should be remedied. Any additional assurance of relief in the way of money will not improve the situation until the practice has been changed.

If it is the policy to place the additional liberal credit which the second section of this bill gives through the same channels, with the same set-up and the same policy that now controls, it will not bring relief. Indeed, it will be a failure.

In many instances we find moneys invested in stocks which are frozen, for the reason that the industry is not operating; and if that is so only to the extent of 15 percent of the time, these stocks are worthless today, according to the average national-bank examiner. They are held to be of no value; and the same thing is true of any local stock the value of which is not reflected or expressed in some way or other on the stock market of this country. This has been the attitude of the bank examiners, even in prosperous times.

In other words, Mr. President, instead of that the Federal system of banking encourages local and individual and independent enterprise, which would tend to build up a community, the reverse is the attitude of the gentlemen with almost plenary power representing the Comptroller of the Currency in the examinations of the local banking institutions of this country. These examiners are governed by the quotations of stocks and bonds on the stock exchange, which vary from day to day, and do not truly represent the book value or the values at maturity of the stocks and bonds and other securities held by the bank. The fictitious value of stocks represented on the stock exchanges do not represent the true assets of stocks held by the bank. Nevertheless these bank examiners insist upon marking down the assets of the bank in accordance with quoted prices on various exchanges.

For that reason, Mr. President, many, many a bank is closed today because the examiner, supported by the Comptroller of the Currency and the chief examiner here in Washington, required securities to be charged off as worthless or at their market price, although when they matured they were in fact redeemed at par by those who issued them. I know of instances of that kind that have taken place since the adoption of this policy by the Treasury Department.

Statistics show that there is more money in circulation now than ever before in the history of the country.

The following table shows the amount of money in circulation at certain periods of our history:

Jan. 1, 1879	$816,266,721
June 30, 1914	3,450,434,174
Mar. 31, 1917	5,126,267,436
Oct. 31, 1920	6,761,430,672
June 30, 1924	5,226,242,000
June 30, 1926	6,358,384,000
June 30, 1927	6,604,431,000

June 30, 1928	$6,379,202,000
June 30, 1929	6,603,283,000
June 30, 1930	6,263,075,000
June 30, 1931	7,047,992,000
Mar. 31, 1932	7,365,012,747
Feb. 28, 1933	8,177,608,183
Mar. 31, 1933	8,639,786,602

In addition, the Glass-Steagall Act gave the Federal Reserve System additional power to issue Federal Reserve notes partially based on United States Government obligations.

Mr. President, in support of the contentions that I have so frequently expounded I wish to quote from an article entitled "National Ideals and Internationalist Idols", which appeared in the Harvard Business Review of April 1933. It is by Wallace B. Donham, dean of the Harvard Business School. I quote as follows:

I am aware that I am accused of narrow nationalism, of advocating even cultural isolation. Neither criticism is one to which I can assent. I agree with an eminent Englishman who recently said to me, "The best service you can do for Europe is to work out your own problems."

Continuing, Mr. Donham said:

Speaking specifically about the greatest curse of modern civilization, unemployment, he went on, "It is too late for us to originate solutions in England; it is too late on the Continent. It is not yet too late, but soon will be, in America. It may not yet be too late for us in Europe to learn from your experience." Still speaking specifically of unemployment, but for myself, I have no hope we can work out this problem except by isolating it at our national border beyond which understanding and control cease.

This course seems to me to be logical, safe, and sound. This policy, if adopted, deals with something we control. The fact that history establishes beyond dispute that the American people purchase more imports when they are in full control of their home market is most confirmatory as to the safe course that should be taken, without experimenting with new theories at this hour of our peril, and, if adopted, would bring a greater amount of happiness and the greatest assurance of speedy relief that is within our power.

Debts can be contracted by law, but they must be redeemed by toil.

Is it possible that those who bought Government bonds during the World War to enable the Federal Government to procure credit under a Democratic administration to assist in the financing of Europe must now be compelled to take fiat money in payment, although these obligations bore the guaranty that they would be redeemed in gold?

For years before and after our entry into the World War we enjoyed the comforts of going into debt. The facility of credit was developed by the increased circulation of money issues, amounting to $5,000,000,000, and by the execution of notes, letters of credit, and trade acceptances to the amount of many more billions of dollars.

While it will be admitted that our country and our people may be in financial difficulties, it is my belief that the history of America warrants the statement that it is unnecessary for us to repudiate any of our solemn obligations at this time.

The devaluation of the gold dollar, I forecast, will be referred to by future historians as the epochal period of the economic and commercial history of this country wherein the Congress of the United States, at the dictation of a President, deliberately voted power to the President which would enable him to repudiate solemn obligations to our people.

There is only one way for us to escape from the morass we are in, and that is by giving our own industrial workers employment. The best way to do this is to give them the market we control, which has been lost to them by the onslaught of foreign goods from depreciated-currency nations because Congress has failed to protect our own market.

Charity and the dole deprive their recipients of individualism. The constructive thing which accomplishes real good is to help others to help themselves, to give them the opportunity to transmute intelligence and muscle into wealth by the production of useful products that go to make up our commerce and trade.

Mr. President, no Member of this body who is guided by those policies which have made America great, those policies which have made the United States the leading nation of the world, those policies which have made residence in the United States the desire of the peoples of the world, those policies which have made it possible for the American in any part of the world to be proud of his heritage, those policies through which America can honestly say that we stand for the soundness of contracts and the soundness of money, can vote for this legislation, which devaluates the gold dollar, and transfers this responsibility, in violation of the Constitution, to another branch of the Government.

Mr. President, for the information of the Senate I should like to offer for the RECORD, and ask unanimous consent to do so, a statement of the production of gold in the world beginning in 1910 and coming down to the present time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Production of gold in the world

	Fine ounces
1910.....	22,022,180
1911.....	22,397,136
1912.....	22,605,068
1913.....	22,254,983
1914.....	21,301,836
1915.....	22,737,520
1916.....	22,031,094
1917.....	20,345,528
1918.....	18,614,039
1919.....	17,698,184
1920.....	16,130,110
1921.....	15,974,962
1922.....	15,451,945
1923.....	17,790,597
1924.....	19,631,001
1925.....	19,025,942
1926.....	19,349,118
1927.....	19,431,194
1928.....	19,755,622
1929.....	19,496,721
1930.....	20,836,318
1931.....	22,818,701

Mr. HATFIELD. This table shows that for the period 1910 to 1931 the yearly average production of gold in the world amounted to approximately 20,000,000 fine ounces, valued at $413,000,000. From this table the percentage of increase or decrease in the production of gold from year to year during this period can be easily computed.

I desire also to offer for the RECORD a similar table dealing with the production of gold in the United States from 1906 down to 1931.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Production of gold in the United States

	Fine ounces
1906-10.....	22,993,218
1911.....	4,687,053
1912.....	4,520,719
1913.....	4,299,784
1914.....	4,572,976
1915.....	4,887,604
1916.....	4,479,057
1917.....	4,051,440
1918.....	3,320,784
1919.....	2,918,628
1920.....	2,476,166
1921.....	2,422,006
1922.....	2,363,075
1923.....	2,502,632
1924.....	2,528,900
1925.....	2,411,987
1926.....	2,335,042
1927.....	2,197,125
1928.....	2,233,251
1929.....	2,208,386
1930.....	2,285,603
1931.....	2,395,878

Mr. HATFIELD. This table shows that during the past quarter of a century the United States produced a yearly average of approximately 3,500,000 fine ounces of gold valued at $72,340,000.

EXHIBIT A

[From the American Federation of Labor Official Information and Publicity Service, released for publication Saturday, Apr. 22, 1933]

William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, issued the following statement by authority of the executive council regarding the new policy of currency inflation just announced by the administration:

"The executive council of the American Federation of Labor is fully appreciative of the fact that the new policy of currency inflation just announced by the administration is a matter of moment and of grave importance to labor. In operation it will seriously affect the economic and social welfare of the masses of the people. An increase in the price of articles which enter into living costs is bound to follow the inauguration of currency inflation. In fact, the primary purpose of inflation is to elevate price levels and to increase commodity prices.

"Obviously, labor will be at a decided disadvantage if commodity prices increase and wages remain stationary at the depressed level to which they have been forced through the pursuit of a wage-deflation policy. The buying power of the masses of the people has been greatly reduced through the imposition of reductions in wages. It has already reached the point where the workers are unable to buy either in quantity or in frequency. If prices are to be driven upward through currency inflation, the very limited buying power of the masses of the people will be further curtailed. This is especially true because it is reasonable to conclude that the price of the necessities of life will increase under the inspiration and influence of currency inflation.

"When there is added to this plan the further proposal to increase the price of agricultural products through the imposition of a tax to be collected by processors of farm products, which will add very greatly to an increase in the cost of living of the masses of the people, we have a full realization of the plight of labor under the operation of currency inflation and the enactment of the agricultural bill.

"Labor realizes that an acute situation is being developed as a result of these economic, financial, and legislative proposals. Government workers, who are passing through a period of wage deflation and of increasing unemployment, through dismissals from the service and impending dismissals, have had no opportunity to readjust themselves to their changed financial and economic status.

"The effect of these proposed changes upon the millions of part-time workers will be most injurious. Part-time work means part-time pay. They have already suffered a double reduction, part of which is reflected in reduced wages and the other part in reduced working time. An increase in commodity prices will add very greatly to the economic and financial difficulties of this group of working men and women.

"The millions who are unemployed will also be seriously affected.

"Unless the relief allowance now being made by relief agencies is increased proportionate with the increase in commodity prices, the relief agencies will be compelled to substantially reduce, and in many instances withhold, the very small amount of relief now being distributed among those who are dependent and suffering. The problem of supplying relief to the millions who are in dire need has become one of the most serious problems facing our people.

"As a matter of sound public policy, as well as of justice, an increase in wages should precede an increase in commodity prices. Unless this is done the consuming power of the people will be lowered, rather than increased, through the adoption of a policy of currency inflation.

"The members of the executive council are determined to safeguard the interests of the wage earners by insisting upon increases in wages immediately. The deleterious effect of currency inflation upon the social and economic life of working people can only be offset through increases in wages and through an increase in mass purchasing power throughout the Nation.

"We propose to call upon labor to begin the fight immediately for wage increases and to use such legitimate influence and power as may be at their command to bring about the restoration of the buying power of the masses of the people."

Mr. COUZENS obtained the floor.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Brown	Costigan	Goldsborough
Ashurst	Bulkley	Couzens	Gore
Austin	Bulow	Cutting	Hale
Bachman	Byrd	Dickinson	Harrison
Bailey	Byrnes	Dieterich	Hastings
Bankhead	Capper	Dill	Hatfield
Barbour	Caraway	Duffy	Hayden
Barkley	Carey	Erickson	Hebert
Black	Clark	Fess	Johnson
Bone	Connally	Fletcher	Kean
Borah	Coolidge	Frazier	Kendrick
Bratton	Copeland	George	Keyes

King	Murphy	Robinson, Ark.	Trammell
La Follette	Neely	Robinson, Ind.	Tydings
Lewis	Norbeck	Russell	Vandenberg
Logan	Norris	Sheppard	Van Nuys
Loneragan	Nye	Shipstead	Wagner
Long	Overton	Smith	Walcott
McAdoo	Patterson	Steiwer	Walsh
McCarran	Pittman	Stephens	Wheeler
McGill	Pope	Thomas, Okla.	White
McNary	Reed	Thomas, Utah
Metcalf	Reynolds	Townsend

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). Ninety Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. REED. I desire to offer a modification of the amendment which I have heretofore offered to the pending amendment. I have moved to strike out the first 18 lines on page 5. I modify that suggestion now, as follows: I move to strike out the first 18 lines of page 5, and to insert in lieu thereof the matter which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The Senator from Pennsylvania offers the following modification of his amendment, on page 5 of the amendment of Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma to strike out lines 1 to 18, inclusive, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

By proclamation to fix the weight of the silver dollar in grains nine tenths fine at a definite fixed ratio in relation to the gold dollar at such amounts as he finds necessary from his investigation to stabilize domestic prices or to protect the foreign commerce against the adverse effect of depreciated foreign currencies, and to provide for the unlimited coinage of such gold and silver at the ratio so fixed.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment is to narrow the question down to the debasing of the gold dollar. If my amendment as modified shall be agreed to, it will not affect the action of the Senate taken last night in adopting the Wheeler amendment, relating to the coinage of silver. I present this amendment for the purpose of bringing the question squarely upon the matter of the modification of the gold dollar, as it is called.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, does not this mean the constitutional question with reference to the delegation of power just the same as it would be with reference to the gold dollar?

Mr. REED. It does.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I would not be in favor of the pending amendment if I thought we would not have any more legislation with respect to currency inflation and deflation. I am convinced that within a year or less we will be again legislating with respect to these matters.

We have been following the road of deflation now for over 3 years, and the climax of this ruthless deflation is now here. We have thousands of banks closed and practically no yardstick for measuring values. The life's savings and accumulations of millions and millions of our citizens are being wiped out. Much has been said during the debate regarding the effect of inflation upon the holders of insurance policies, the savings in savings banks, and the savings of our people being affected by this inflationary proposal. However, let me point out that under the ruthless deflationary policy now going on the savings of our people are in greater jeopardy than ever before, and are in greater jeopardy than if we passed the pending amendment. My understanding is that the effort of the administration is to stabilize the value of money, because they are aware that inflation, if permitted to run too fast, would be a calamity. They know that when deflation occurs, as it is now, industry stalls, exchange of goods is stopped, unemployment occurs, and there is starvation in the midst of plenty. Everyone knows that when the medium of exchange fails to function the organization of society that depends on this medium is attacked. They know if we cannot have a stable measure of value there is danger of forcing some kind of socialistic state that will attempt to regulate distribution of the production and the earnings of the people.

The word "inflation" is an anathema to some people, the same as the word "dole" is an anathema to others, but in neither case is a reasonable consideration given to these movements. The country has been deflated to such a point that there must be some inflation to reflate the deflation. Almost everyone will agree with this, but the differences will arise as to the method. There is, however, a group of our people who believe we should go through with deflation and proceed with bankruptcy, foreclosures, public defaults, and repudiation of every kind. They recognize that the lending of money is merely postponing the end, and, believing that, they have found fault with the loans made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation almost from the beginning.

Shortly after the operations of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation were begun I recognized that this would not accomplish what we contemplated at the time the act was adopted. Shortly I realized that we were pouring into the railroad structure millions of dollars that were not justified. I realized that we were doing that with many banks and some insurance companies. The deflationists also recognized that their interest was in a complete deflation, while my objection was based on the preservation of the Government's credit and the weeding out of false values and false capital structure.

Mr. President, to carry on this deflationary movement will take perhaps a decade. It will mean bankrupt homes, farms, and industries. It will mean sales at less than new costs of construction, regardless of how low these costs may fall. There will be no revival of basic or heavy industries. There will be more severe unemployment than now exists. There will be vigorous efforts to reduce taxes, but these reductions will not even meet the requirements for feeding the unemployed. The ruthless cutting of wages and taxes will simply mean more taxes to feed the unemployed. Public debts will increase, and many Government units will default in their obligations. The strain on the public for taxes to feed the unemployed and the social confusion from such general bankruptcies may make it impossible to complete the deflationary program. So far as I know no such violent deflation has been carried in any modern nation.

CREDIT EXPANSION

There has been justifiable criticism of the Federal Reserve System. Weak and inadequate steps were taken during the orgy of credit and speculation in 1928 and 1929. They could have properly managed credit at that time and prevented the crash which every thinking person knew would occur. The future could not be capitalized for years in advance, and so the inevitable crash.

To be fair, however, it might be said that the Federal Reserve System could not have prevented all of the stock-market boom, but had they started early enough they could have curbed it sufficiently to have prevented the almost entire collapse that we have suffered. Some say that credit management could not have prevented a decline in commodity prices, but I submit that all of the evidence clearly indicates that the crash in commodity prices came immediately after the financial or credit collapse.

Causes cannot always be defined, but there is sufficient evidence to indicate some of the causes which brought about the collapse. Not only was there excessive speculation but there were millions of our citizens living beyond their incomes, capitalizing the future through installment buying, and always having in mind the idea of getting something for nothing. Now, when we come to consider ways and means of bringing about an equality between debtor and creditor the gold interests consider it sacrilegious. The mere suggestion of taking anything from gold is called "the urge of pronounced left-wing radicalism." Even on the floor of the Senate yesterday it was said that this left-wing radicalism, with which the administration is charged, means socialism or communism. It was even said with great vehemence and force by my colleague that he was not sure but that the trend was "in the direction of the edge of pronounced right-wing radicalism, which bespeaks its power and its efforts and its authority in the terms of Hitler-ism and Mussolini-ism."

Mr. President, no such force and energy and no such language were used when there was put in the hands of the President, in the passage of the Economy Act, the power to affect the lives and the living conditions of millions of our citizens. In fact, the Economy Act was passed with considerable enthusiasm. There were many in the Senate who were delighted at the opportunity of taking $400,000,000 away from the war veterans and $100,000,000 more from underpaid Federal employees. They were enthusiastic in the victory of the National Economy League. There was no left-wing radicalism in that vote. The most vigorous opponents of the pending amendment are the ones who most gleefully voted for the Economy Act.

A distinguished Member of the House of Representatives, in a speech at Philadelphia the other night, said that the measures already passed and proposed by the Roosevelt administration would reduce the country to economic slavery. Well, Mr. President, what have we now? We have perhaps everything else but the name. Do the workers of the Nation have any voice in their destinies? They do not. They accept what their masters dictate. They take hand-outs from the States and municipalities, containing the vitamins that the authorities say they should have.

Mr. President, the colored people when in slavery in the South were better cared for than millions and millions of our workers today are. Oh, it is one thing to take something from gold; that is reprehensible and in violation of a sacred contract. Everything with respect to property is sacred; but it is the highest degree of statesmanship to take billions out of the veterans and the workers of the Nation. That takes courage. It is said that is the highest degree of administrative ability; but when you tread on the sacred rights of property, then that is sacrilegious; it must not be.

Mr. President, I am no more in favor of an autocracy or a dictatorship than any other Member of this body, but I recognize a crisis and I am willing to give an opportunity to the people's leader to develop ways and means of relieving these intolerable conditions.

The Senator from Pennsylvania, only a few months ago, stated on the floor of the Senate that what this country needed was a Mussolini. There was no criticism when the four M's—Morgan, Mellon, Mills, and Meyer—had complete authority to rule the volume and the value of our money. There was no complaint about that absolute autocracy. Now we are proposing to set up an autocrat to deal with our currency, but one who has been selected by the people themselves. What is there so terrible about selecting our own autocrat, rather than letting the self-appointed ones do the job?

My colleague, the able and intelligent Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], said yesterday, "We cannot rebuild American commerce and American economics on a basis of uncertainty." What does he mean by that? Does he mean that in the last 3 or 4 years we have proceeded with certainty? Does he mean that American commerce and American economics have been proceeding with certainty? The only certainty my colleague seems to be assured of is the certainty that the thousands of banks are not going to be permitted to be opened and that the ruthless deflation will continue.

I am convinced that there is no salvation in title I of this bill, which puts such an autocratic power as to prices and taxes in the Secretary of Agriculture. I have no confidence in the mortgage-relief section of the bill; not any more than I had in the infamous home-loan bank bill, which was passed at the last session of Congress for purely political reasons. Neither have I any faith in any of this patchwork legislation relating to our economic system. The only exact justice that can be done, as I see it, is to raise prices, and have the rise affect all alike.

Finally, I do not anticipate that the President will use the section permitting the revaluation of the gold content of the dollar unless it be for the purpose of creating international parity in exchange. Should that be accomplished under this authority, the welfare of even the bondholders who hold bonds requiring payment in gold will be better off; but, whether they are or not, there has certainly been no justice done to the farmers and the workers of the Nation through the maintenance of the gold standard; and if they have been required all these years to make sacrifices for its maintenance, then those who have profited by its maintenance should be willing to make some sacrifices.

Mr. President, the problem today is not whether creditors will be paid any particular brand of a dollar, but whether they will get anything at all. Sometimes they get less than nothing, for they get a non-income-bearing property with delinquent and future taxes to care for.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Michigan has expired on the amendment.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I will reserve what time I may have on the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, falling prices have been the outstanding phenomenon of the depression, which is now in its fourth year.

We have had deflation on a scale unprecedented in history. For months and years we have tried to stem the tide of steadily falling prices, which have wiped out the equities of home owners, shut down plants, paralyzed industries, prostrated agriculture, and thrown millions out of employment, and have doubled and trebled the debt burden.

We have tried one expedient after another in an attempt to stay the downward sweep of prices. There is little dispute that most of the economic troubles from which our country and the world are now suffering root in the inability of man to sell either his labor or his goods for an adequate price.

Economic recovery, if and when it comes, must bring higher prices. We all believe that higher prices will bring about the revival of trade and industry, which is the only cure for unemployment. Our common objective, then, is higher prices.

Inflation, by whatever method employed, is admittedly a short cut to higher prices. When prices rise the purchasing power of the dollar is diminished. The dollar, in terms of what it will buy, is cheaper. Now we are contemplating the same thing in "reverse English"—cheapening the dollar by expansion of the currency, which diminishes its purchasing power and increases prices.

A cheaper dollar is not necessarily an unsound dollar. A cheap dollar may be just as sound as a dear dollar. We have heard much talk about a stable dollar, but what has been stable about our dollar during the past 3 years—a dollar which has soared in value while all else has fallen in value? Is a dollar which buys more tomorrow than it does today any more stable than a dollar which buys less tomorrow than it does today?

The Democratic Party during the last campaign pledged the American people sound currency. Our President renewed this pledge when he took his oath of office.

Those who oppose granting to the President the power and authority contained in the measure now before us to expand our currency or to devalue our gold dollar or to remonetize silver contend that this is destructive of sound money. Quite obviously the measure lodges with the President a power which could be exercised to destroy our money, but no fair-minded person can believe that the power will be so exercised.

The grant of authority is tremendously broad. It is virtually unrestricted. It is without precedent. But the grant of authority does not in and of itself debase or inflate. It is but a permission.

I am mindful that our course is fraught with danger, but in our present situation the perils of standing still and doing nothing are just as great as the perils of moving forward.

So far as our currency is concerned, so far as our money is concerned, there are but three courses open to us:

First, we can do nothing. We can stand still; we can let nature take its course.

Second, Congress can, in theory at least, deal explicitly and specifically with our currency. We can, by an act of Congress, change the gold dollar or coin silver or issue bank notes. But if we face the realities of our situation we must recognize that Congress in the present emergency cannot do this, for the reason that it is impossible to secure a concurrence of opinion of the Congress as to which of any one of a half dozen plans is the best one to meet our situation. This disagreement is no reflection upon Congress, because no group in Congress may with assurance at the present moment say positively how much inflation or what kind of inflation may best meet the needs of our own condition and the requirements of the world situation.

The third alternative, and the one which we are now proposing to follow, is to vest in the President a broad authority over our currency. As a practical matter, unless we do this we do nothing. It is contended that this course leads to uncertainty, because we do not know definitely what steps he may take. But is that uncertainty any greater than our present uncertainties? Is it any greater than the uncertainty implicit in impending corporate and individual bankruptcies, in the threatened collapse of our mortgage banks and insurance companies and in the bankruptcies of our municipalities, in wholesale defaults and debt repudiations? Is it any greater than the uncertainties implicit in what action Congress would take in the months to come if there be no betterment in conditions? There is only one certainty about the situation, and that is the certainty that something must be done and will be done to halt deflation and to lift the price level, with the confidence that rising prices will bring a revival of trade and industry and a reemployment of the millions now idle.

The threat of lower and still lower prices has paralyzed trade. The threat of higher prices, if "threat", be the word to apply to it, has the opposite effect. It stimulates buying, and buying promotes trade and trade promotes employment.

We all agree that inflation must be controlled. We all recognize that an uncontrolled inflation is the road, the certain road, to destruction. But how are we to control it?

We must lodge the power and authority over our currency somewhere. It is said that we are engaged in a great war on depression. We are fighting the battle on many fronts. The American people, by an overwhelming vote, have named their Commander in Chief.

Where else in the present crisis should that power and authority be lodged than with him?

I am mindful that we are told that inflation once embarked upon is impossible to control. We are told what happened in Germany and Russia when the printing presses were employed to utterly destroy the value of the currencies in those countries. The destruction was deliberate; their objective was to extinguish all debts. They employed inflation to commit financial suicide. Does anyone seriously contend that we intend to do likewise? Of course not.

France resorted to inflation; France depreciated her currency approximately 80 percent, and then halted it and stabilized at a 20-percent level. Inflation in France was tremendous, but it never got out of control. Those who point to Europe's experience with inflation, those who talk about inflation being a dynamite and explosive, indirectly assume that the control granted in this legislation will not be exercised intelligently, courageously, and without flinching; they assume that those who administer this power will not set a reasonable level and attain it steadily, methodically, and skillfully.

It is contended that any kind of inflation is a scheme for the relief of debtors at the expense of their creditors; that it subtracts from the value of bank deposit; that it is, in effect, a cut in wages. Such contentions entirely fail to take account of what has happened during the past 3 years, and what is happening today. During the past 3 years idle dollars in the banks, measured in terms of purchasing power, have been constantly increasing in value. That increase has gone on and on through the medium of low and still lower prices, to an accompaniment of bankruptcy, ruin, want, and destitution. We are going to stop that if we can. It is self-evident that to whatever extent our currency is inflated to that extent the purchasing power of bank deposits is diminished. We are subtracting something from them, but we are only subtracting from them part of the unearned increment, which has accrued to the dollars while millions have suffered.

With respect to the effect of higher prices on wages this ought to be said: If higher prices bring increased employment, then, though the individual dollars in the pay envelope be less, there are many more dollars in the total pay envelope of the wage earners of the country. Will the mill-worker, now on part time, be heard to complain if, because, though inflation depreciates the purchasing power of his daily wage, he now has a wage every day in the week rather than 2 days of the week? Will the man with a job now complain at a course which seeks to give a job to his brother next door who is now without a job?

What about debtors and creditors? We are proposing a course calculated to help the debtor pay his debts; but it is said we are helping the debtor at the expense of his creditor, and by that is meant that we are requiring the creditor to accept a cheap dollar instead of a dear dollar. But is the creditor worse off to collect his debts 100 cents on the dollar in cheap dollars than to be obliged to compromise his debt for 50 cents on the dollar in dear dollars, or to collect nothing at all, through the bankruptcy of his debtor? And that is what has been facing the creditors of the country for the past 2 years and continues to face them.

Mr. President, I believe the country commands the course which we are now taking. There has been a profound reversal of public sentiment on this question. My own attitude on this question has been one first of fear, then of doubt and uncertainty, and finally of confidence and conviction that we may safely embark on this course, and that only through the means of an expansion of credit and currency can we stem the tide of deflation which is submerging our country.

The change in public opinion does not mean that the country 6 months ago favored sound money and today favors unsound money. It is not that the country desires an orgy of depreciated currency, but it is because the country has finally reached the conviction that we must at all costs force prices upward, because the country understands that a cheaper dollar will mean higher prices, because the country has an unparalleled degree of confidence in our President—a confidence in both his courage and his capacity, a confidence that he will not misuse or abuse the powers which we are now to confer upon him.

The President has declared that he intends to use this power sparingly, that he intends to maintain his promise of sound currency, that he intends to do nothing revolutionary and nothing destructive with respect to our money. I am content, and I fully believe that the country is content, to rest upon that pledge. I support the pending amendment with the firm faith that it is for our country's welfare.

Mr. President, I ask to have read at the desk in my time an editorial from one of the leading Republican papers of Massachusetts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

[From the Worcester Sunday Telegram, Apr. 23, 1933]

THE COUNTRY MUST HAVE INFLATION

The question may be raised legitimately whether those four Republican Members of Congress—Senator REED, of Pennsylvania, Senator WALCOTT, of Connecticut, Representative SNELL, of New York, and Representative LUCE, of Massachusetts—who have issued a counterblast to the Roosevelt inflation plan, really represent the dominant sentiment of the Republican Party. True, the Republican Party since 1896 has regarded itself as the defender of "sound money"; but there has arisen of late doubt as to what constitutes "sound money." Today it would appear that some of the swans of the "sound money" men were nothing more than ducks.

The contentions in the counterblast suffer grievously from a curious detachment from reality. They might just as well have been penned in 1896, 1908, 1921, or 1925, for they take no cognizance of current conditions. The radical inflationist spirit rampant in Congress, the temper of the public which observers are watching anxiously in many parts of the country, the pressing need that the drastic deflationary process be sharply reversed, the general situation at home and abroad—all these matters are ignored. Surely the great mass of Republicans cannot share this extraordinary aloofness from what is happening in the world.

Another serious weakness in the statement of the four gentlemen is that it contains no plan of its own. Thus it becomes neither more nor less than a plea to the Nation to resume standing pat. Now, nothing is deader than standpatism—not even Scrooge, who, it may be recalled, was deader than a doornail. President Roosevelt's present popularity, which no observant person can fail to note, is due not to the wisdom of his action, for that must be left to the future for determination, but rather to the fact that he has taken some action. The country had become thoroughly impatient with the do-nothing policy which Mr. Hoover maintained almost unbroken and in which Mr. Mills, his Treasury Secretary, who is mentioned as a sort of godfather to the counterblast, apparently acquiesced.

The American people today have put aside partisanship. They are not interested in the prospects of either the Republican or the Democratic Party. They are not interested in the ultimate political fate of Mr. Roosevelt or Mr. Hoover or Mr. Mills or Mr. Whoozis. What they are interested in, first, last, and all the time, is to get out of this depression. And they are convinced that they can't get out of it by sitting idle and listening to the pious mouthings of inert preachers of salvation through inaction.

Of course, the powers which the President asks for are awe-inspiring in scope. Of course, there is a chance that he will misuse those powers. But it is a chance we must take. If deflation is permitted to do its worst, we are bound to suffer, and to suffer more, in all probability, than we would from some degree of even unwise inflation. The problem boils down to the question whether we would prefer to have Franklin D. Roosevelt, as President, at the controls of the inflation machinery or to have Congress there. For nothing is more likely than that Congress, sooner or later, would go in headlong for inflation, perhaps grand-scale inflation, if it is not forestalled by the proposed grant of powers to the President. We think that, confronted with this choice, the considered opinion of the Nation favors the President.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I realize, as most of us here do, how impossible it is to shed very much light upon the age-old question of money and its relationship to human welfare, in the short space of 15 or even 30 minutes. Nevertheless, I desire to give voice to some observations which I wish to submit on the subject as the result of whatever study I have been able to give to it during my spare time in the performance of other duties since the question has been before the Senate.

I dare say that outside of the spoken language of the nations of the world nothing else has had a greater influence over civilization than the question of money, its kind, its origin, its stability, its contraction, and its expansion. There are all sorts of theories about money, about the fluctuation of its value, about its standard and its soundness. The different theories about money are probably as extensive and as various as the theories or explanations or excuses which are given for the present economic condition, not only in the United States, but in the world.

In looking into the question with a view to seeking its solution, we cannot restrain ourselves merely by national boundaries. We must consider international conditions. We must consider the interrelationship of nations, of the exchange of products of the human hand and the human brain. We must consider the value of exchange among the markets of the world. We must consider how any given financial condition or standard in any country may be affected by world conditions, and in turn how that standard may affect world conditions.

We need not delude ourselves into the belief that we know all there is to be known about money. Four hundred years before the Christian era there was a definition of money by a great philosopher. Aristotle said something on the subject of money, and what he said about it is as true today as it was when he spoke the words.

After discussing its various relationships somewhat generally, he said:

Money, then, has been made by agreement, as it were, a substitute for demand, and is so called because it exists not by nature but by law. It is within the power of the people or of governments to change it and to make it useless for the purpose for which it was coined or created. But money itself is not always of the same value. Money makes all things commensurable, for all things are measured by money.

Mr. President, there are two kinds of money recognized in the world, one being primary money and the other secondary money. Primary money is a money that is coined of metal, whichever may be the standard, and in our case gold is the primary money of the United States. It is the primary money of most of the nations of the world. Secondary money may be said to consist of subsidiary coins, of paper money issued by the Government, of bank deposits, and of checks and credits which are just as much money in the transaction of the business of the world as if they were gold or silver coin stamped with the imprimatur of the Government.

There has been developed in the world a sort of religious veneration for gold, and there are many who contend that gold is more valuable as money, not because it has been declared to be so by a government, not because it has been used for generations as the most convenient and most valuable medium of the coinage of money, but because of its intrinsic value. Mr. President, gold, outside of its quality as money, has no greater intrinsic value than any other commodity, depending upon the circumstances and the relationships and the desire for it anywhere in the world.

If I should be cast up tomorrow on a desert island and had to make my choice between a ton of gold and a barrel of apples, I would take the apples, because they would have an intrinsic value to me as food, whereas a ton of gold would be worth nothing and would have no intrinsic value. Gold money does not get its preference or value because of its intrinsic worth but because it has been recognized by the nations of the world as the most convenient form of metallic money. That is what has given it its value. If that were taken away from it, gold would have no more intrinsic value than it would be worth as a commodity in the arts and sciences of the world.

I think everybody, those who are for and those who are opposed to this amendment, recognize the fact that the world today is suffering from a fall in the level of commodity prices which has assumed the proportions of a catastrophe. Whether it be in the United States, or in England, or in France, or in Belgium, or in Australia, or in South Africa, we all recognize that the distress of the people, whether they be merchants or bankers or laboring men or farmers, is due to the catastrophic decline in the level of prices of products.

What has caused the decline of which we speak, and which we are seeking in some measure to remedy? Has it been an overproduction of the commodities that human necessity requires? Have the agencies of men been overworked in order that greater quantities of products may be turned out?

It may be true that in the case of some commodities there has been an overproduction. There probably has been too much sugar produced, too much coffee raised, too much copper produced; but, on the whole, throughout the world, as an average, there has been no such thing as overproduction. Because one half of the world may be hungry, we cannot ascribe that hunger to the fact that the other half has produced too much food. Because one half of the world may be naked today, it cannot be charged to the fact that the other half has made too much clothing. As a matter of fact, if we take the period from 1922 to 1928 as a fair average of the normal advance of an economic world, we find that there has been no overproduction, because the increase in the average production of the human race has been only about 3 percent per annum, which I think most economists will agree is not an abnormal increase in the productivity of the human family, based upon a growing civilization, based upon the desire of men and women everywhere in the world to improve their condition, based upon a desire to enjoy more of the necessities of life and more of the luxuries likewise as they are able to increase the consumption of necessities.

So, Mr. President, we need not delude ourselves into the belief that the distressful situation which we are seeking to remedy has been brought about by overproduction; but there has been an underconsumption, not only among the people of Asia, of Africa, of Russia, of England, or of Europe, but on the part of the people of the United States, and that underconsumption has been brought about by their inability to buy the necessities of life. In other words, demand has not kept pace with production; and by "demand" I mean desire plus the ability to purchase—for that, after all, is what demand is.

It makes no difference how much I may desire a suit of clothes, or a new house, or a new automobile; unless I possess the purchasing power, there is no demand in the real sense of the word. So that when we speak about supply and demand, we may speak on the one hand of the amount of goods available to be purchased, which may be controlled in its price by the demand of the people; but when we speak of "demand" we speak not of desire, not of wishes, not of longings, but we speak of desire in its relationship to our ability to translate that desire into the possession of the thing we want, which cannot be done unless we possess the purchasing power, which, in these modern days, is money.

I can recall, as a schoolboy in knee trousers, the campaign of 1896, when the great Presidential election between Bryan and McKinley revolved around the question of money. I recall how, upon any street corner in any village, any man of any information who stopped to talk about anything was immediately surrounded by an eager crowd of men and women seeking to obtain some information upon the intricate problem of civilization which we call money. It was contended then that there was not enough money in circulation; that there was not enough money in the hands of the people, or doing the work of commerce, to keep pace with the growing demands of the American people or of the world.

It may be interesting to note, Mr. President, that from 1824 to 1849 production decreased in the United States, prices decreased in the United States, and money decreased in the United States. Then from 1849 to about 1870 or 1872 there was a continued increase because there was more money in circulation, due to the discovery of gold in California and Australia. Then from 1872 to 1894 there was a falling off in production, there was a falling off in prices, and there was a consequential falling off in the circulation of money. Then following the discovery of gold in Alaska and elsewhere, production increased, prices increased, and money increased. It may be said that production and prices increased because money increased.

Take any period in the history of the United States in the last 100 years, and we will find that as money has increased in circulation, production has increased, and the prosperity of the people likewise has increased as these three elements have gone hand in hand.

There was an increase in the productivity of the nations of the world from 1923 to 1929 of about 3 percent. There was an increase in the available supply of gold for monetary purposes during the same period of about 1.2 percent. In other words, while production—not in America alone, but in the entire world—from 1923 to 1929 increased by a normal percentage of about 3 percent, the amount of gold produced in the world for monetary purposes increased only 1.2 percent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Kentucky on the amendment has expired.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will consume my time on the bill.

The question may be asked, "What difference does that make over a period of 6 years?" It may not make much difference in a period of 6 years, but if we may assume that in the normal development of human society, in the acquirement of the things necessary to supply that desire, in the constantly growing demand of people to improve their condition, to enjoy the necessities of life and to branch out in the endeavors that make civilization worth while and worthy of a boast, a 3-percent normal increase in production and in the enjoyment of production may continue in this country, or in the world at large, then if we are to assume that an increase of only 1.2 percent in the gold supply of the world is to be available along with that 3 percent in increasing the productivity of the human hand and the human brain, how long will it be until the available supply of gold for money falls so far behind the procession, as I believe it already has fallen, that we shall be required to take some remedial steps, either by reducing the amount of gold in the dollar, or by thinning the base of gold used as a foundation for currency, or by the remonetization of silver, or by the other resort to pure, unadulterated paper money upon which the imprimatur of the Government has been stamped that gives it its legality in the payment of debts? We cannot hitch ourselves to a post.

As I understand the object of this amendment to the bill, it is based upon a fair and frank recognition of our conditions, recognizing the fact that throughout the history of civilization, as money has gone out of circulation, prosperity has declined; and as money has increased in circulation in reasonable bounds, production has likewise increased, and human welfare has increased. We must not ignore these three equations in determining what importance is to be attached to the kind and quality and quantity of money that is to be circulated among our people.

The Roman Empire fell because Rome could no longer obtain gold and silver from Greece and Spain; and her farmers, who were no longer able to produce farm products at a profit, moved into the cities to become a part of the rabble; and when the enemy invaded the territory of Rome, no armies could be put in the field, because they had no money with which to equip them.

Following the fall of the Roman Empire came that period in history known as "the Dark Ages", when all the arts and sciences disappeared from the earth, and when money itself ceased to be a circulating medium among the people. Along about the twelfth or thirteenth century the replenishment of the supply of gold and silver, brought to the nations of the Old World by discoveries in the East and the Western World, allowed civilization again to blossom, and allowed all the things that had been destroyed in the Dark Ages to reappear upon the face of the earth. Since that time, however, in periods of fluctuation and decline, somewhat like an inverted rail fence, we have seen the welfare of mankind fluctuate with the supply of money, as I indicated a moment ago.

Now we are at the very bottom of one of those fluctuations. Not only here but around the world prices have declined, and by reason of the decline of the prices of products purchasing power has declined, and laboring men have been thrown out of employment. We need not debate here the legal technicalities of whether 23 grains of gold or 18 grains of gold will make a better dollar; whether we ought to authorize the printing of 3 billion or 6 billion dollars of money by the Treasury of the United States. We are confronted with a problem that requires immediate solution. We need not be afraid to step out on untrod territory. We need not be afraid to be bold, if necessary, in our efforts to find a solution, because it was as the result of boldness that America was discovered 4 centuries ago. It was boldness that made Thomas A. Edison the greatest inventor of all time. It was incredible boldness that took Charlie Lindbergh across 3,000 miles of water and made him an international hero in 32 hours.

We need not be afraid to step out on untrod territory. If we find that we have made a mistake—and we may make one, because all of us are groping our way blindly in the darkness; none of us knows how any experiment that we may undertake here will work out—if we find that we have made a mistake, we can retract our steps; but let us consider the situation which we are seeking to remedy. Today there are $8,000,000,000 in money and in credit frozen up in the closed banks of the United States.

The banks of our country today hold 51 percent of the short-term obligations of the United States, thereby freezing up again more than $3,000,000,000 of money. We passed the Emergency Banking Act, and while we were passing it and while the banks were closed the Bureau of Engraving and Printing here in Washington printed $2,000,000,000 of money against the reopening of the banks and the resumption of normal business; and yet, because of the lack of confidence, because the bankers will not loan that money to the people, or because the people cannot borrow it, and therefore they have no need to take it out and use it, only $23,000,000 of that $2,000,000,000 has been called for and used by the banking institutions of the United States.

In addition to that under our Federal Reserve System we could have issued over $4,000,000,000 in new currency if the confidence of the people and the willingness of the banks to use their institutions as agencies of commerce had been possible or available.

I am not criticizing the banks. They have other people's money to look after and protect, and undoubtedly they considered that it was safer in their vaults than loaned out to equivocal or unsuccessful financial operations or enterprises.

Mr. President, if the entire $6,000,000,000 of so-called "inflation" should be printed and put into circulation, as provided in the amendment, it would not absorb all of the money already tied up and frozen up in the banks of the United States, which cannot be unlocked and unfrozen until there shall be some way of breaking the economic ice floe in the United States and in the world. If by the injection of $3,000,000,000 into the veins of the commercial body of our country, whether it be temporarily or permanently, if by a rekindling of confidence, a reestablishment of the hopes of the people, we may start the wheels of industry to rolling, if we may start the smoke to curling above the smokestacks, we can afford to take the chance and to make the leap, in the belief that even if it does not accomplish all we hope for and expect it is at least a demonstration to the American people and to the world that the people of the United States have the confidence to start out upon a new highway, which may in the reverberations in the economic and commercial and social life of the world be worth a million times more than the chance of some loss which may be sustained by taking this step.

I do not know what the President will do with the authority which is to be given to him to revalue the gold dollar. I have that amount of confidence and faith in his integrity and in his wisdom to believe that if, in our dealings with the commercial situation here and abroad, with a survey of world conditions, he finds it necessary to devalue the gold dollar, he has the courage and the boldness to do that; but if he does not find it necessary, as a last resort, in behalf of some stimulation in the prices, in the profits, in the labor of the American people, he will not exercise the power merely because the authority has been conferred upon him.

Mr. President, I should like to see it tried out. It has been a hundred years since Congress revalued the dollar. How many more hundred years will it be, in spite of all the revolutionary changes which have come over the human race since 1842, before Congress will undertake to adjust the value of the dollar somewhat in proportion to the values of other things for which it is a substitute? It may never be necessary to exercise this authority herein conferred on the President. I hope conditions may so adjust themselves as to make its exercise unnecessary. But I feel that the best interests require that the authority be granted.

I am willing to take chances on President Roosevelt, and I believe his exercise of this power will be wise and cautious and actuated only by a profound conviction that it is his duty, not only to inaugurate such policies as may lift the American people out of the ditch into which they are today floundering, but, by our example, we may give courage and hope to the world that a new deal—a new era—has been ushered into the history of mankind.

Mr. President, for the reasons I have stated I shall vote against the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] and for the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], and I sincerely hope it may be adopted.

SOLDIERS' PAYMENT ADVOCATED

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I have before me an editorial appearing in this morning's Washington Post, dealing with the bonus question, which I send to the desk and ask to have read in my time. It is the editorial headed "Inflation and the Bonus." It is a very short editorial.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

INFLATION AND THE BONUS

Revival of the bonus issue is a natural result of the inflation measure with which Congress is struggling. The bonusites were the original inflationists, so far as the present emergency is concerned. A year ago they were demanding that the Government print money to pay the bonus, expand the currency, and start the Nation on the way to prosperity. The House of Representatives accepted their program, but it was emphatically defeated in the Senate. Now, when the Senate is rushing headlong into depreciation of the currency, the bonusites think they see a great opportunity to win their case.

If the Government is going to raise billions of dollars to aid the farmer, the home owner, the unemployed, and the railroads, and if Congress is going to cheapen the dollar in a frantic effort to create more money and send commodity prices upward, why shouldn't it raise a few billions more and pay the bonus? That is the reasoning behind the present drive. The bonus advocates also count upon an appeal to Congress to help the veterans who are to suffer from reductions in the Economy Act.

If Congress is going to issue greenbacks to enable corporations to pay their debts, why should it not issue greenbacks to pay the veterans their bonus? It is difficult to refuse the bonus if there is to be an ocean of cheap money for everybody.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, this editorial in the Washington Post is a radical departure from the position taken by this and other newspapers last year. There is only one error in the editorial. We would not have to issue any additional currency under the inflation program in order to pay the bonus. Paying the bonus would not call for the issuance of another dollar of money. We would issue only the same amount of money, but instead of it being locked up in the Federal Reserve vaults it would be paid out to the soldiers of the United States, and thereby spread among the people.

The amendment which has been offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] simply provides for taking the first $3,000,000,000 the Federal Reserve Board is authorized to issue, and provides that it shall issue whatever is necessary to pay off the debt we owe to the soldiers. That will probably be around two and a quarter or two and a half billion dollars, as I understand. That would leave a half billion dollars or three quarters of a billion more to be issued, and we would not have inflated a dime more. We would have spread the inflation to 120,000,000 people, in effect, and we would have paid off a debt which we will have to pay anyway within the next 10 or 11 years.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Except that if we pay the debt now we pay it to the veterans. If we pay it in 10 or 12 years we will pay it to the money lenders, who will by that time have all the certificates.

Mr. LONG. If we want to get any benefit whatever into the hands of the veterans, into the hands of the people, we are going to have to pay the bonus now, because in the present stringent circumstances the soldiers are gradually taking whatever advances they can get on their certificates, and the certificates will be worth very little to them unless we make a rather immediate settlement.

Mr. President, there is another reason why we ought to do this, which I hope Senators will bear in mind. We have recently cut the compensation of the disabled veterans. After cutting the compensation of some of them as much as 50 percent, and of some of them more than that, we are probably going to reduce the value of the dollar 50 percent. I am sure that had we taken into consideration the fact that we were going to cheapen the dollar we are paying the soldier we would never have thought of cutting his compensation down by 50 to 75 percent, then cutting it down 50 percent more, because by doing that some soldiers who have been cut down to as low as $12 a month may be getting $6 a month by the time we devalue the dollar and otherwise inflate the currency.

If we are to spread the money to be issued among 120,000,000 people, if we want to get the money out so that it will not be locked up in the vaults of the banks; if we want to discharge a debt which the United States owes, which it has to pay anyway; if we want to inflate in the manner that will do the most to relieve destitution and suffering; if we want the people to get the greatest and the most wide-spread benefit; if we want to keep faith with the boys of the United States who went to the front; if America wants to pay its debts and relieve suffering; if America wants to do the right thing, inasmuch as we have already put the ax on the neck of the soldier before we got to inflation, instead of giving him a double dose let us include him in the benefits and pay off the bonus debt which the United States has already agreed to pay anyway.

Mr. President, that is a sound thing to do, and when big newspapers, conservative as they are supposed to be, which opposed this movement last year in every way they could, are coming out today and announcing themselves in favor of paying the bonus, the least thing we here, with progressive ideals, could think about doing today would be to include the veterans in the program, because we would not have to issue one more dollar in money, it would not cost the Government another cent; we would pay off a debt which we will have to pay anyway; we would spread the currency throughout the country; we would give hope and happiness to the people, and provide circulation for the establishment of a purchasing power among the masses, which they otherwise would not have, and we would do what, in a measure, would be a corrective for a mistake we have made.

Mr. President, it may have been that we had to make the mistake of enacting the economy law, but all know it was a mistake. Now, however, that we have made the soldier the first man to feel the weight of the deflation, now that we have taken away promises and pledges of the country made over a period of 10 or 15 years, and now that we have made him stand the first shrinkage, it is not a fair thing to come today and devalue the dollar, and not include the soldier in the benefits which this program of inflation is to bring about.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Let me give the exact figures to the Senator in reference to the regulations which have been issued as to the cuts of veterans, showing the difference between rates being paid now under the Economy Act and the rates paid under the laws repealed by the so-called "economy legislation", speaking now of disabilities incurred in action, at the battle front:

Leg and thigh amputations at various levels: 9 classes were reduced, on the average, by 30 percent.

Amputations, ankylosis, stiffness, and complete loss of motion in joints, and injuries producing limitation of motion in extremities: 73 classes are reduced 35.5 percent, on the average.

Those figures relate to injuries which were received in action, at the front.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, those veterans were reduced, as I understand it, around 35 percent. Let me make a calculation. That means that the Government is today giving them 65 percent of what they were getting. If we come along now and cut the value of the gold dollar 50 cents, or inflate the currency 100 percent, when we finally complete the job they will be getting 32½ percent of what they were getting.

In other words, do not forget that we are inflicting a penalty upon the soldiers in the pending amendment. It is necessary for the country, but do not forget that the man who is disabled, who was getting, we will say, $60, has already been cut down to something like $40 or $38, and when we come along and double the currency we cut him down $19 more, and that man's compensation will have gone from $60 to $19, or a net reduction of $41.

Mr. President, I am for the inflation program; it is absolutely, positively necessary, vital, and essential for the country, but in our advocacy of it here now we are running a risk of doing the soldiers an injury.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield for a question.

Mr. TYDINGS. My mind is not clear about this matter, and I want to ask the Senator if it is not a fact that, under the economy law, the reductions were made in part due to a decrease in the cost of living, and is it not a fact that the President, under that law, would have the authority, without additional action of Congress, to increase the amount of compensation should the cost of living, under an inflation policy, increase?

Mr. LONG. I do not understand that to be the law, I will say to the Senator. I understand that relates only to Federal employees.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; I believe that does relate to Federal employees alone.

Mr. LONG. That is true.

Mr. TYDINGS. I was not certain as to whether or not that same provision applied to the veterans. If it does not apply to the veterans, of course what the Senator says would be pertinent. However, what he is saying would not apply to the Government employees, because the President could, without any action by Congress, raise their compensation; but I am not sufficiently familiar with the law to say whether or not that is so as to the veterans.

Mr. LONG. I will say to the Senator from Maryland that I am informed by Senators around me who have given it perhaps better study than either one of us that it does not affect the veterans. I am not urging, I will say to the Senator from Maryland, that we include Government employees, because the President can adjust their compensation, but, as the Senator from Maryland so pointedly says, the reason for the economy bill reducing the compensation of veterans was that the cost of commodities had fallen to such an extent that a dollar was worth a great deal more than formerly. Now we are undoing that, Mr. President. We have already cut the veterans' compensation because of the fact that the dollar would buy more, and now we are coming back, we are bringing up commodity prices so that now the veteran who has had his compensation cut 35 or 40 percent finds that he is going to receive a cut of 50 percent more. That is absolutely the effect. The purpose of the pending bill is to raise prices. That is why I am advocating it. Long before the pending bill was introduced I contended that we had to cheapen the value of the dollar in order to bring up commodity prices. Now that we have taken the veteran and cut his compensation 35 percent, we are going to cut his compensation 30 percent more, that is, 50 percent of what he is now getting, unless we include him in the bill by providing that the bonus shall be paid.

It is the best thing we could do, Mr. President. How are we going to get money in circulation if we do not know whether the Federal Reserve Board is going to put it out so that it will ever get to the people or not? I said to one of the Senators across the aisle today that I presumed they strained the milk in the section of country from which he comes, but I have never seen a milk strainer that was anything like as restricted as the straining process that has been used by the Federal Reserve System to let money get out to the people. I hope to see a more liberal management of the Federal Reserve System, but whether there shall be or not, by giving the veterans this money we inflate, anyway. I have not the exact number, and I will ask the Senator from Indiana what is the total number of veterans in the United States who would receive the bonus if we should now provide for the payment of the money that we have obligated ourselves to pay?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The total number is approximately three and a half million.

Mr. LONG. Three and a half million veterans will spend around two and a half billion dollars. That will mean, Mr. President, that there will hardly be a family in the United States who will not receive an immediate direct benefit; it will mean instead of trying to inflate from the big man at the top until it reaches the little man at the bottom, we will begin our inflation with the little man at the bottom and let it work up to the top. Inflation, Mr. President, is good either way you take it, but it is better by one process than it is by another. It is a great deal more safe to depend upon the big man sucking up what the little man has than to depend upon the little man getting what the big man loses. It does not work that way always, nor does it work nearly so fast. We know that as time goes on the big eat up the little; that is a rule of economy which we cannot change.

The pending farm bill, Mr. President, proposes a very fine economy. I have read the provisions to restrict the output of hogs. I have wondered just how that is going to be enforced, what is going to be the rule, because we are going to have to reduce the size of litters in order to make the law work; but that will probably be figured out.

What I am advocating is a sound, economic, workable proposal that will not increase the money the Government is going to put out by one copper cent. It will reduce a debt that the Government owes amounting to $2,500,000,000, a debt which the Government has got to pay, and it will guarantee a circulation of currency. It is a sound, feasible, workable, understandable corrective for what we are aiming to correct here in the way of an injustice to the men who fought the war, whose compensation we have already cut, by restoring them to their previous status by giving them the benefit of this inflation.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. As a matter of fact, it would save the Government money annually, because we are now placing in the reserve fund that is set aside to take up these certificates in 1945 approximately $112,000,000 annually. Four percent on $2,288,000,000, the amount required for the payment of the adjusted-service certificates, would only be about $89,000,000 to go into a sinking fund, while at present we are placing in the reserve fund approximately $112,000,000 annually against the final payment in 1945.

Mr. LONG. I think I get the Senator's point.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. If we adopt this so-called "bonus amendment" we will only be required to place in the sinking fund 4 percent, or $89,120,000, representing a saving to the Government annually of something like $22,000,000.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I was going to make a calculation on that basis, and I have written down what the Senator has said. It will actually mean that we will save from twenty to thirty million dollars a year, and the debt will be retired at the end of the 11 years. The United States Government is setting aside today $112,000,000 a year to pay the bonus when it shall become due. We can now issue this currency; we can retire it at the rate of 4 percent a year; by the time the certificates come due we will have been out only $89,000,000 a year; we will have paid the bonus; and in the meantime we will have a net saving of from $20,000,000 to $30,000,000 every year.

It will actually save the Treasury from $20,000,000 to $30,000,000; it will pay off the debt; it will help balance the Budget; it will spread currency; it will relieve destitution; it will correct the injury that we have already done the veterans, because we have reduced their compensation on the ground that they can live cheaper, but now when we are going to cheapen the dollar we are going to cut their compensation in two again unless we include the veterans in this inflation program. Nothing could be sounder or more practicable or more just than this proposal. Mr. President, there is not a scintilla of argument nor is there any reason on the face of the globe why we should not adopt this sound, safe idea in discharge of this debt.

There is not anybody who needs this money any more than do the veterans. There is nobody on earth who needs the money as badly as do the disabled veterans of the war, and there is nobody who is more entitled to it than the men who went to the war. If we were to try to pick out a class of people, whether we owed them or not—and bear in mind I did not participate in the decision regarding the bonus; the Congress long before I became a Member of it went on record that the Government owed the veterans this money; that was done before I ever came here. So it is not a matter of policy; Congress has already determined that the veterans are a preferred set of creditors against the resources of the United States. They need this money today; they need it badly; their families need it; their people need it.

It will mean, Mr. President, that we are doing for them something that is to a reasonable extent a measure of compensation to which they are entitled in these distressed times. If there is a person on earth that we do not want to punish by inflation, it is the soldier, and yet we have passed the economy bill and cut his compensation and now we are going to take his compensation and reduce its value in half again unless we include him in this inflation program by the adoption of the bonus amendment.

Mr. President, I do not know how the administration stands on this question. I have always undertaken to talk in the Senate to the leaders on this side and on the other side.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir; I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Without wishing to oppose what the Senator says, has it occurred to him that, according to the pending proposal, we will be paying off an obligation in money that may be worth half the value of the obligation?

Mr. LONG. That is another thing to be thought of; I thank the Senator; that is something else; that is a fact. [Laughter in the galleries.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The galleries will refrain from any demonstration of approval or disapproval.

Mr. LONG. What the Senator from Maryland has said is well said.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Even so, many of these lads are now hungry, and they will get some bread, some food and shelter and clothing, while in 1945 it will all go to the money lenders. They will by that time have received the certificates.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield?

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir; I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course, to be absolutely logical, if we are going to devalue the dollar to 50 percent of its present worth we ought to pay the total amount of the face value of the bonus certificate.

Mr. LONG. I think I can say that the veterans would rather have the face value now even in depreciated or devalued money, because they are in a fix where they cannot be choosers.

I suggested a little argument to the Senator from Arkansas last night which the Senator from Maryland has answered for me today. It occurred to me that, inasmuch as this money did not become due for a few years, perhaps we might be able to depreciate somewhat the total amount which the Government should pay, but I well see the justice of the suggestion of the Senator from Maryland, for we are paying them less money, in effect, and therefore we are deducting a certain amount by making it a lump-sum payment now instead of in 1945. If we pay them in a dollar of the present value in 1933 we pay them in a dollar of 50 percent of its previous value, and thereby we are actually deducting 50 percent from the face of the certificates in order to pay them in cash today, assuming we inflate.

What could be better and fairer and more proper than the adoption of this amendment? It would help the country discharge its debt; it would help balance the Budget—do not forget that. I want to make a plea to the Senate to help us balance the Budget in this way. [Laughter in the galleries.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Louisiana will suspend. It is the duty of the occupants of the galleries to remain silent, and, unless the rule of the Senate is observed by visitors in the galleries, it is the duty of the Chair to order the galleries cleared. The Senator from Louisiana will proceed.

Mr. LONG. There are a number of us here who have urged, above everything else, the necessity of balancing the Budget. It has worried the leaders on the Republican side as it has worried the leaders on the Democratic side, and the would-be leaders—all of them. How are we going to balance the Budget? We find that we will save by adopting this amendment a net $23,000,000 a year to the United States Treasury; we will pay off the bonus; we will spread the currency throughout the country; we will pay a debt the Government owes; we will correct an injury that has been done by the passage of the economy bill; and we will save inflicting upon the veterans an additional burden by cutting in half what we are yet giving them.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President—

Mr. LONG. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. BAILEY. I wish to make a suggestion to my friend with regard to his very simple and impressive calculation. If we can save all this money by paying the soldiers in the manner suggested, we might pay off all the bonded indebtedness of the United States Government in the same way and declare a dividend.

Mr. LONG. I am not so certain but that the Senator from North Carolina will develop that point at a later date so that even I may understand it better. I am not opposed to something of that kind, within limits. If I had time enough—and my time has only a few minutes more to run—I might discuss that question. I have never been able to understand the argument that it is safer to issue a bond of the Government and pay 4 percent a year on it and owe the whole principal when the bonds have run for 25 years than it is to issue currency and retire it at the rate of 4 percent a year. Such currency would be a sound currency; it would be a much sounder Government obligation, or whatever it might be called, than bonds. If the Government is going to pay off in 25 years and can issue a circulating medium and retire it at 4 percent a year, then it would not pay the 4 percent but once, whereas if it issues a bond it pays 4 percent a year for 25 years and then has to pay 100 percent at the end of that period, and so the debt is paid twice. I think the Senator from North Carolina and I are very much in harmony on this question.

On the bonus question I am going to give some political advice. I have discussed the matter only from the viewpoint of the economics involved.

Some Senators who have seen no merit in any advice I have given them on any other question have to some limited extent considered my political advice sound, occasionally, at election time—not many, but a few of them have. I want to say to my fellow Senators that it is going to be a bad lot for us all if we do not vote for the bonus amendment, not because of the number of veterans—not solely on that account; not because of the wives and children, some of whom vote also; not because of their fathers and mothers, their uncles, aunts, and cousins, some of whom also vote—not solely because of that, but because of the fact that we are inflating the currency and we have already made the soldier pay his one third. Now we are going to come along and inflate and reduce the two thirds to half its value, when we have already reduced it to two thirds. Then we are not going to give him the benefit of an inflation that will be world-wide, but we are going to provide for an inflation manifestly that is supposed to do justice, but which does not do justice to the soldier and which does not accomplish the easy means of the ready inflation that the bonus would.

I advise my fellow Senators and Members of the body at the other end of the Capitol, politically, not to vote against this just amendment. I advise them to advise the President to be in favor of it himself. That is my advice to the President. I am not offering this advice directly. I am undertaking to secure direction by indirection. I am hoping that this will permeate to him. I believe if our great President had the time and were presented with the philosophy and the facts, he himself would be in favor of the amendment. I am confident he would be.

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] very properly answered the Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] yesterday. The Senator from Oklahoma is sponsoring the administration measure and cannot at this time commit the administration; but I know the Senator from Oklahoma well enough to know that he is going to vote for the bonus amendment. He cannot accept it for the administration, but he is going to vote for the amendment, I am confident, knowing him as I do and without asking him just how he is going to vote. It is the time to do it. It is the only thing to do. It is the fair thing to do, the right thing to do, the sound thing to do.

Mr. President, I hope, having taken these few moments, that we will include the soldier, wipe out this debt, and help our fiscal affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] in behalf of himself and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. PATTERSON] to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. REED. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Copeland	Johnson	Reed
Ashurst	Costigan	Kean	Reynolds
Austin	Couzens	Kendrick	Robinson, Ark.
Bachman	Cutting	Keyes	Robinson, Ind.
Bailey	Dale	King	Russell

Clark	Hatfield	Overton	White
Connally	Hayden	Patterson
Coolidge	Hebert	Pope

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, it has been my desire to make a somewhat complete exposition of the pending bill in order that I might indicate to the Senate and to the country precisely why I feel compelled to vote against it. I find myself physically unable to do that, however; but I cannot refrain from briefly indicating my objection to the measure.

The newspapers of yesterday and today have stated that the senior Senator from Virginia has created a sensation by disagreeing with the President. The implication is, of course, that any Senator who now preserves his intellectual integrity and consistently maintains the views which he has privately and publicly expressed for many years is creating a sensation. I have not deserted my party. I wrote with my own hand that provision of the national Democratic platform which declared for "a sound currency to be preserved at all hazards."

I was unable because of illness to make more than one speech during the entire Presidential campaign. In that one speech, with all the righteous indignation that I could summon and in terms, perhaps, of some bitterness, I reproached the then President of the United States and the Secretary of the Treasury for saying that this country was within 2 weeks of going off the gold standard. The reaction to that speech—and I do not say it in any boastful way—was that I now have bound in excess of 5,000 telegrams and letters, from people mostly strangers to me, commending that utterance. The first telegram in the first bound volume is one from Franklin D. Roosevelt, now President of the United States, who said the speech was to him an inspiration. In his public utterances at Brooklyn and at other places he textually commenced that part of the speech which so bitterly criticized his political adversary and competitor for suggesting that this country was in imminent danger of going off the gold standard.

This simple recital will indicate that I have not deserted anybody or any party in opposing the bill. I am simply consistently maintaining an attitude of earnest conviction on public questions, which is more important to me than the favor of party or potentate.

I object to the first section of the bill because, as I said yesterday, it degrades the Federal Reserve Bank System into a servile agency of the Treasury Department. It was not instituted for that purpose. By law we took the reserve funds of the national banking associations of the United States out of the money centers, rescued them from the hands of the stock gamblers, and impounded them in regional Federal Reserve banks for the avowed use of commerce and industry and agriculture. Giving the Federal Reserve Board the right to define eligible paper, within certain limitations, we expressly denied to it the right to comprehend in its definition those who were engaged in stock gambling and speculation; and we set up this system, not as an adjunct to the Treasury Department—which has used it as a doormat—not to finance the public indebtedness of the United States, but to respond to the requirements of the tradesmen and of the industry and of the agricultural interest of this country, the agricultural interest being given precedence in the maturity of its paper. The first section of this amendment transforms it from a system of that kind into a mere agency of the Treasury Department, to be dominated by the Secretary of the Treasury, and to be used, not for business purposes but to enable the Government to float its term and time indebtedness.

Today, the Federal Reserve System has a gold supply on the 40-percent reserve basis that would enable it to expand its credits nearly $4,000,000,000. It has chocked its portfolios with nearly $2,000,000,000 of Government bonds, practically by direction of the Secretary of the Treasury and the board here, not a dollar of which it required in its business. It did that in a financial adventure upon the principle of the bill introduced by Representative GOLDSBOROUGH, which assumed that by an inflation of the currency the commodity prices of this country would be increased. It has today every dollar of those bonds, without any use. It cannot dispose of them without utterly demoralizing the entire bond market of the United States; and yet here we have a proposition to accentuate that disastrous condition and further to imperil the Reserve System, by adding $3,000,000,000 more of United States bonds to its portfolios!

What does that mean to the business interests of the country? It means that just in that measure the Federal Reserve banks of the United States will be unable to accommodate their member banks, and just in that measure their member banks will be unable to accommodate trade. That is what it means. It does not mean inflation; it means deflation of business; and all that was accomplished in that transaction, I may say to the limited credit of the Federal Reserve Board and banks, was to release nearly $2,000,000,000 of reserve indebtedness of the member banks to the Federal Reserve banks, with the main idea that the member banks thereupon would release credits to business, which they did not do and they are not doing; and there is nothing in this bill that compels them to do it, and there is nothing in any law that can compel member banks to loan the deposits of their depositors to anybody, for any purpose.

I think the first section of the amendment is vicious. The authors and proponents of it thought it was ineffective. They did not dare make it imperative, because it would have been confiscation and unconstitutional. They made it permissive; and the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] thinks that that means impairment. If he could know as I know the influences at work that have applied themselves to the activities of the Federal Reserve Board and banks, he would know that it means $3,000,000,000 more of United States securities in the portfolios of the Federal Reserve banks, and an almost literal paralysis of the facilities of those institutions to accommodate trade.

Very likely I shall surprise some of my colleagues by the statement that the least objectionable feature of the amendment is the so-called "greenback feature." It is the most defensible feature of the amendment. It is, perhaps, the only feature of the amendment that will get any so-called "money" in circulation above that now in circulation. It means simply to transform time obligations of the United States, bearing interest, into demand obligations of the United States bearing no interest; and those who hold to the gold standard have said to us that it would wipe out every dollar of the reserve gold in the United States Treasury over night—and it would if people would demand redemption. Experience over a long period of years, however, has determined that even less than 4 percent is required to meet the redemption demands in ordinary times, unless people should be unpatriotic enough to raid their own Treasury; and this feature of the amendment provides a 4-percent redemption fund for the retirement of these greenbacks.

While I do not advocate that section of the amendment, I again say it is the most defensible provision of the amendment. I do not advocate it primarily because the Federal Reserve System is now, with its gold reserve, prepared to expand to the extent of a billion dollars more than the proposed $3,000,000,000 of greenbacks. Because business is not being transacted, it does not expand; and because confidence has not yet been restored, it does not expand; and are we here doing anything to restore confidence?

Why, we have literally destroyed the mortgage-bond market of this country. The Federal land banks, with all the millions of assistance the Government has given them, cannot sell their tax-exempt bonds today—not to save their lives. There is no market for them. We have destroyed the mortgage-bond market.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time on the amendment has expired.

Mr. GLASS. I will take the balance of my time on the bill.

We are proceeding upon the assumption that nobody hereafter will desire credit; that farmers hereafter will not want credit, or need it, because we are destroying credit, and largely have done so. No man outside of a lunatic asylum will loan his money today on farm mortgages, because we have destroyed the market for farm mortgages, and for almost all types of mortgages.

I cannot in any circumstances, painful as it is to me to differ from the occupant of the White House and from my party colleagues, support the second section of this amendment, relating to the devaluation of the gold dollar.

England went off the gold standard because she was compelled to do so, and not from choice. She had less than a million dollars in gold left after paying her indebtedness to the United States. Of course she went off the gold standard; and her going off has not resulted in increasing the prices of commodities. There was a temporary flurry then, as there has been in this country now; but the inevitable reaction came.

Why are we going off the gold standard? With nearly 40 percent of the entire gold supply of the world, why are we going off the gold standard? With all the earmarked gold, with all the securities of ours that they hold, foreign governments could withdraw in total less than $700,000,000 of our gold, which would leave us an ample fund of gold in the extremest case to maintain gold payments both abroad and at home.

To me, the suggestion that we may devalue the gold dollar 50 percent means national repudiation. To me, it means dishonor. In my conception of it, it is immoral. All the legalistic arguments which the lawyers of the Senate, men of eminent ability and refinement, may make here or have made here have not dislodged from my mind the irrevocable conviction that it is immoral, and that it means not only a contravention of my party's platform in that respect but of the promises of party spokesmen during the campaign.

Mr. President, there was never any necessity for a gold embargo. There is no necessity for making statutory criminals of citizens of the United States who may please to take their property in the shape of gold or currency out of banks and use it for their own purposes as they may please.

As I remarked to the Senator from Pennsylvania the other day, we have gone beyond the cruel extremities of the French when they made it a capital crime, punishable at the guillotine, for any tradesman or individual citizen of the realm to discriminate in favor of gold and against their printing-press currency. We have gone beyond that. We have said that no man may have his gold, under penalty of 10 years in the penitentiary or $10,000 fine.

An expansion of the currency? Federal Reserve notes outstanding today exceed by nearly $3,000,000,000 the outstanding Federal Reserve notes in 1929, in those days of prosperity on paper, prosperity in the orgies of the stock gamblers who have ruined this country. Yet we have not been willing to pass a bank bill in the Congress of the United States designed and effectively framed to avert a repetition of that sort of thing. If there were need to go off the gold standard, very well, I would say let us go off the gold standard; but there has been no need for that. If there were need for currency expansion, I would say let us expand, though I fail to comprehend how much better off one is with $2 which will purchase no more than the dollar which he had yesterday.

The history of inflation has been recited. Bacon, the wisest philosopher since Christ, the author of the inductive system, from which we have drawn all of our inventions, valued experience. Edmund Burke, the greatest rhetorician of all times, was logician enough to magnify experience. Patrick Henry, the greatest advocate of human liberty, said that his feet were lighted by the lamp of experience. Yet here today we are flying right in the face of human experience, rejecting it all.

My colleagues talk about serving the public. What public? The men who work for a wage, the neediest of all classes of the public, the clerks and the stenographers and the professional men, constituting, in the aggregate, half, yea, more than half, of our laboring population, will be the people to suffer under this unbridled expansion. That is what it is, because the rein is so loose that the steed will never stop until he goes over the precipice, killing his rider.

Mr. President, I find that I must desist. I regret to disagree with my colleagues. It is painful to disagree with the occupant of the White House, whom I love and respect, and who has exhibited unparalleled courage in trying to bring the Government within its budgetary requirements. But whether it be a commonplace or whether it be sensational, I am one Democrat who is going to vote against this inflation amendment even if every one of the 94 other Senators vote for it. I may have regrets, but shall never make apologies for acting upon my own convictions and conscience.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I desire to ask unanimous consent at this point, if the Senator from Virginia does not object, that there be printed in the RECORD the speech which he delivered during the campaign last autumn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the speech was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE FACTS ABOUT THE FISCAL POLICY OF OUR GOVERNMENT DURING THE PAST FEW YEARS

[Radio speech by Senator CARTER GLASS, former Secretary of the Treasury, delivered Nov. 1, 1932]

No person of sensibility could welcome the task of directly assaulting the record of persons in high places with whom he has associated in the business of Government at Washington. Especially is it repugnant to an accepted sense of propriety, except in imperative circumstances, to contravene statements made by the President of the United States or his more responsible Cabinet ministers. It is because these imperative circumstances have arisen that I am venturing now to examine certain assertions made from public rostrums by President Hoover and disseminated throughout the country on the eve of a vitally important national election.

AMAZING DEGREE OF RANK INGRATITUDE

I do this with less hesitation because the action of the President in making these statements involves an amazing degree of rank ingratitude toward those in the legislative branch of the Government at Washington whose nonpartisan cooperation he constantly implored during the entire last session of Congress and even for weeks before the Congress convened. Moreover, the statements made, as well as the conclusions deduced, are flagrantly contrary to the facts, thus presenting a picture to the American people which is far away from the truth and which, in a vital sense, exaggerates conditions only that the President might magnify his own alleged achievements in correcting situations and saving the country.

To speak with suitable restraint, I may say that neither Hans Christian Andersen nor Karl Grimm, in appealing to the fancies of children, ever overtaxed his imagination as President Hoover repeatedly has done in his endeavor to regain the lost favor of the American people. Contrasted with his speech of acceptance and his addresses at Des Moines, Cleveland, and elsewhere, Aesop's Fables deserve to rank as an accurate history of things that actually occurred.

That I have delayed, to this late moment, drawing these fabulous statements into question is due only to the fact that I have been precluded from platform participation in the pending political campaign by reason of illness, due to excessive physical and mental strain at the past session of Congress, for which reason I have lain on my bed racked with resentment at shocking perversions of fact concerning problems of which I have some degree of intimate knowledge and amazed at a priori conclusions based on these false statements.

PREDOMINANT CAUSES OF DISTRESS

It is not too late to make a searching review of economic events with a view of determining the predominant causes of the prevailing depression, nor to examine the nature of the legislative and administrative expedients which were devised for recovery. Bad as were the expedients adopted, they are not as vicious as originally proposed by the administration. Nevertheless, at the expense of the taxpayers, President Hoover has converted the Treasury at Washington into a national pawnshop and infected the Central Government with the fatal germ of financial socialism. All semblance of state initiative and community pride has been extinguished and the minions of Federal bureaucracy are given full sway to distribute huge sums of money picked from the pockets of the American people. Instead of being the servant and instrument of the people, with certain delegated powers, the Washington Government has been made the creditor and overlord of the States, with power to coerce and subjugate these subdivisions of the Nation at the will of the party in power whenever pay day approaches or an election needs to be won.

The President and his Cabinet ministers insist that the collapse in the United States "was superinduced by economic convulsions abroad", and that this country was the unavoidable victim of European disturbances. This is a strange doctrine from those who have persisted in a policy of isolation of the United States so severe as that we must not participate with all other nations in promoting the peace of the world, but must pursue a detached and independent course in all things.

I insist that the very reverse of the President's contention is largely true. I assert that the improvidence, if not the direct profligacy, of incompetent Republican administrations at Washington is measurably, if not predominantly, responsible for the deplorable situation in which we find ourselves today.

With the advent of the Harding administration in 1921 (not to speak of its shameless disorder and corruption, which every sensitive citizen would like to forget) we were started forth on a prolonged era of cheap money and unrestrained speculation in every conceivable pursuit of business. President Coolidge actually boasted of the cheap-credit policy of the Republican Party at a time when caution was essential. Those in authority manifested their impatience and discontent with existing institutions by setting up bureau upon bureau to expand expensive Federal activities and agency after agency to enable groups of people readily to increase the measure of their indebtedness, and, not satisfied with the almost incredible domestic expansion, they induced our people to engage in an orgy of foreign speculation.

I judge from one of President Hoover's speeches that he himself made a considerable purchase of the utterly debased currency of Germany, and exhibited at Cleveland his holding of depreciated German marks as a warning against the monetary "printing press." Thousands of others were induced to speculate in the depraved currencies of foreign nations. With insatiable avarice, great banking institutions in the United States, through their lawless affiliates with their high-pressure salesmanship, brought over and unloaded on the investing public of America billions of dollars of foreign securities, now practically worthless. The total amount has been computed as high as $16,000,000,000, equal to the total national indebtedness of the United States up to 1929, and twice as great as the credit facilities of our Federal Reserve Banking System. Witnesses before the Senate Finance Committee estimated the volume of these foreign securities at a minimum of $10,000,000,000, equal to two thirds of the entire bonded indebtedness of the United States. The record warrants the assertion that the Republican administration at Washington, through its Department of State, was consequentially responsible for the flotation of these worthless foreign securities.

PASSED ON LOANS WITHOUT SANCTION

The State Department, without sanction of law constitutional or statutory, and in utter disregard of all precedent, assumed the function of passing on these loans. It required the great international bankers and their affiliates to submit to the Government every one of these projected foreign flotations for objection or approval. The State Department, when called to task for this usurpation of authority, set up the childish, technical distinction between the term "approval" and the term "unobjected." The administration's ablest spokesman on the floor of the United States Senate frankly admitted that, in the circumstances, the State Department's failure to object to these foreign loans was tantamount to approval. Individual investors and bankers imputed moral responsibility to the Government; and expert salesmen, not too scrupulous to invoke the moral obligation thus incurred by the State Department, were enabled to sell these high-interest-bearing, but now worthless, foreign securities in competition with our own State, municipal, industrial, and commercial securities. Undeniably, they filled the portfolios of interior banks, sometime by coercion, with this immobile junk, so that when the crash came, these banks were in a state of paralysis, utterly unable to respond to the legitimate requirements of their respective communities. There resulted an era of bank failures unprecedented since the foundation of the Republic, unapproached by financial collapse in any other nation on the globe. The State Department at Washington may deny its culpability until its spokesmen are black in the face, but the record explicitly condemns them.

WARNINGS DISREGARDED

The official explanation given to the Senate of the United States was so manifestly puerile and untrue that by unanimous vote regardless of party division, that body rejected it and warned the State Department to desist from this dangerous and ruinous usurpation of authority. Secretary Stimson treated the unanimously expressed sense of the United States Senate with a contempt that entitled him to impeachment. He persisted in his denial that the State Department was doing the very things which the record shows it was doing.

As I speak, I have before me a written communication from the late J. P. Cotton, transmitting a list of foreign loans passed on by the State Department within 14 months theretofore, aggregating $1,193,000,000. More than a year previously I had, as a responsible member of the Banking and Currency Committee of the United States Senate, textually warned the State Department that—

"The supply of American funds for investment purposes is not inexhaustible; and when the overload of those prodigious foreign flotations begins to sour or default in the hands of those attracted by the will-o'-the-wisp of Government approval, the authorities at Washington may then realize that my criticism is neither partisan nor unfriendly, but is a reasonable protest against transferring financial transactions from the realm of sound economy to the bogs and pitfalls of evil politics."

This and similar protests and warnings were contemptuously treated by President Coolidge and the Secretary of State. They evidently expected the Congress and the public to accept the silly and insufficient excuses offered by them.

In the earliest centuries, when that Florentine spendthrift called "Lorenzo the Magnificent" held sway over continental Europe, the average diplomat thought there was nothing better in life than a successful lie. The State Department at Washington had not yet learned that there are few things worse in life than a stupid lie.

Aside from the prodigious amount of these foreign securities crowded in our bank portfolios and exhausting the investment capabilities of the people, our Federal Reserve Banking System for 5 years or more gave more attention to stabilizing the finances of Europe than it gave to the requirements of American commerce and industry. Under the chairmanship and dominance of "the greatest Secretary of the Treasury since Alexander Hamilton", the 12 great Federal Reserve banks themselves loaned hundreds of millions of dollars abroad. It is asserted upon reliable authority that our Reserve banks endorsed millions of dollars of acceptances for foreign banks—a thing unprecedented, I am advised, in the whole history of central banking.

The very spirit and text of the Federal Reserve Act indicate that the system was set up solely for the purpose of rendering assistance to our own commerce and industry. Its credits and currency were intended to rest upon business transactions in the United States; but under the chairmanship and predominant influence of "the greatest Secretary of the Treasury since Alexander Hamilton" the rediscount operations of the system were submerged in the open-market transactions in an unwise, if not actually lawless, attempt to cure the financial maladies of European nations. Our Reserve banks dealt in alleged "acceptances" to the extent of millions of dollars that represented no more of a domestic business transaction than stored goods abroad shipped from one foreign country to another.

Worse than these things, in utter defiance to the text and shameless disregard of the spirit of the Federal Reserve Act, the facilities of the Federal Reserve banks were further misused. With Mr. Andrew W. Mellon as chairman of the Board and the predominant figure, in a single 6-month period in 1929 ten of the largest banks in New York alone were given access to $750,000,000 of Federal Reserve credits under the 15-day provision of the act. Plainly interpreted, this means that a large, if not a greater, part of this sum was being loaned to brokers for stock-gambling purposes.

An official communication inserted recently in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD by the Republican Chairman of the House Banking and Currency Committee showed that, in 2 recent years, the enormous sum of $118,000,000,000 was loaned to member banks of the Federal Reserve System under the 15-day provision of the act, which means that, at the very peak of speculative orgies, when stocks were quoted at 75 times their earning capacity, incredible reserve sums were utilized for stock-gambling purposes. The open-market provision of the act was put in for emergency purposes, with no particle of expectation that it would ever be put to stock-gambling uses; but under the benign chairmanship and influential administration of Secretary Mellon the system was largely driven away from its commercial and industrial purposes and made a medium for speculative investment activities.

PROTESTS AND WARNINGS DISREGARDED

Protest after protest was uttered by those who had vital responsibility in the enactment of Federal Reserve legislation. Warning after warning was given that the foreign-security loans floated with the assistance of the State Department at Washington and the speculative use of the Federal Reserve facilities and the riot of gambling in real-estate mortgages and commodities of all kinds, especially in stocks and bonds on the exchanges, were heading this country toward the brink of ruin. President Hoover in his Cleveland address contemptuously asserted that he "did not notice any Democratic Jeremiahs" during this period. It was not certain that he or his predecessor wanted to be bothered with the warnings of prophets.

We have seen that Mr. Coolidge approved the lawless foreign activities of his State Department. The country was literally shocked when this President of the United States figuratively jumped into the stock pit and cheered on the gamblers when brokers' loans had reached the stupendous figure of $3,810,023,000! He said there was no cause for concern; and that these loans were far from excessive. He said this when Paul M. Warburg, among the foremost international bankers in the world, was earnestly warning the country against the inevitable consequences of this insane riot of speculation. Said Mr. Warburg:

"If a stock exchange debauch is quickly arrested by prompt and determined actions, it is not too much to hope that a shrinkage of inflated stock prices may be brought about without seriously affecting the wider circles of general business. If orgies of unrestrained speculation are permitted to spread too far, however, the ultimate collapse is certain not only to affect the speculators themselves, but also to bring about a general depression involving the whole country."

There was a Jeremiah for Mr. Coolidge and Mr. Hoover to heed. But they heeded not. Mr. Coolidge's response to the warning was to declare that he could see nothing except "a natural expansion of business in the securities market, and nothing unfavorable in it." And the wildest of the gamblers agreed with him. One of them told Federal Reserve authorities to go to hell, and another immediately sought to have me disciplined in Virginia for seeking to curb wicked speculation with the trust funds of the Federal Reserve System.

Dr. Ralph W. Robey, lecturer in banking at Columbia University and a financial writer of distinction, ascribed to President Coolidge tremendous responsibility for the continued upswing of the market; and so the "debauch" spoken of by Mr. Warburg continued at a rapid pace. A little later, President Hoover and Secretary Mellon followed Mr. Coolidge into the stock pit as cheerleaders for the speculators, until these brokers' loans reached the stupendous total of $8,000,000,000. Thus, credits and currency were sucked into this financial maelstrom from every hamlet between the two oceans and drawn from foreign nations.

Yet in the face of this ineradicable record the President and his Secretary of the Treasury now talk about our troubles having originated in Europe. The fact is that our excesses contributed to European distress. Sir Phillip Snowden, Chancellor of the British Exchequer, as well as other foreign ministers of finance, complained bitterly of the draughts on their resources to feed the flames of stock gambling in this country. In a budgetary talk, exactly 20 days before the October break, Sir Phillip warned the British public against being drawn into these transactions to the serious embarrassment of their own country.

Long after his inauguration as President, Mr. Hoover, the Superman, could see nothing alarming in this situation. Ten days before the crash of October 24, 1929, his Secretary of Commerce petulantly "denied rumors that a severe depression in business and industrial activity was impending." The day after the crash President Hoover was quoted as saying: "The fundamental business of the country is on a sound and prosperous basis." Six months after the crash President Hoover said: "I am confident we have now passed the worst. We have succeeded in maintaining confidence and courage. We have avoided monetary panic and credit stringency. These dangers are behind us." And Dr. Klein, that ever convenient and accommodating statistician of the administration, 10 days after the crash said: "We have come to see more clearly that the stock market is not the principal barometer of business, and that our American prosperity is deeply and firmly rooted."

Secretary Mills insists that our troubles started in Europe. Here was a financial crash right under his nose in New York City, involving a loss of $82,423,000,000 in security values alone, to say nothing of its blighting effects on general business. In its pitiful consequences the disaster reached into the remotest recesses of our business and social fabric, ruining as well the fortunes of thousands of adventurous people in foreign lands. Yet Mr. Mills says our "panic" originated in Europe with the failure of a great bank in Austria 18 months after the "panic" started in New York. Mr. Mills ascribes our financial troubles over here to England's abandonment of the gold standard, which took place 2 years, lacking 1 month, after the enveloping crash here described on the New York Stock Exchange. Thus, according to the President and his chief Cabinet minister, our depression and consequent consternation originated in Austria, was communicated to Germany, and found its last expression in England's temporary relinquishment of the gold standard.

BREAD LINES, PANIC, AND THE TARIFF

Ten million idle men were tramping the streets and countryside of the United States before the bank failure in Austria and before the abandonment of the gold standard by England. Miles of bread lines ranged along the streets of our towns and cities, and free-soup kitchens were as numerous as the leaves in Val-lombrosa before anybody could know of the financial difficulties in Austria or of the temporary expedient at the Bank of England.

I do not exactly comprehend Mr. Mills' meaning of "panic." If we had no "panic" in this country that paralyzed banking and business long before the events described by Mr. Mills, what did we have? We had "panic" that had no relation to foreign financial transactions; panic that produced cessation of business and frightful decrease in industry of all kinds; panic that threatened starvation and created humiliation and made unwilling beggars of people who were proud to work; and the only thing that Europe had to do with the situation was to stand by in consternation while we erected a tariff wall which literally wrecked our trade with that continent and with the nations of every other continent, causing these nations in a spirit of retaliation to place tariffs and embargoes against the products of our fields and factories, so that our foreign trade in 2 years dropped from $9,640,356,268 to $4,513,561,337, exports being reduced by $2,817,235,963 and imports by $2,309,558,968. So eager were Mr. Hoover and his Republican legislators for this tariff wreckage or that he called Congress in extraordinary session for the avowed purpose of equalizing agricultural privileges with the benefits of protected industry, only to wind up the session by multiplying the inequalities and exacting further enormous tribute from agriculture.

The Smoot-Hawley-Grundy Tariff Act constitutes moral insensibility as well as economic insanity. It will take its place in history as a legislative and administrative enormity, purchased from the Government at Washington by the contributors to Mr. Hoover's campaign fund. Equally with the frightful financial debacle, this measure is responsible for unemployment. Along with that intolerable legislative bastard, known as the Farm Board Act, these measures have reduced the American farmer to the point of penury.

Thus I have traced, with unerring accuracy I think, the causes of the panic and the inevitable consequences. These were not caused by the World War or by European disturbances, as alleged by Mr. Hoover. We had in 1922 largely gone through the processes of liquidation and of deflation in financial, commercial, and industrial enterprise. The country was prepared to go forward in an orderly fashion when the speculators seized the reins and, under the stimulating influence and applause of Republican administrations at Washington, embarked us on a career of adventure and inordinate inflation that carried us over the precipice. The World War had no more to do with this, nor Europe either, than the wars of the Phoenicians or the conquest of Gaul by Caesar. It was caused by the combination of factors which I have recited in the course of this address.

Now what were the remedies proposed and applied? Where rests the responsibility or credit for them, and in what degree have they been or are they likely to be effective?

The President of the United States was pathetic and importunate in his plea for "nonpartisan cooperation" in the effort to rescue business after he could no longer escape the conclusion that something needed to be done. For months and months Mr. Hoover seemed utterly ignorant of the stupendous disaster which had overtaken the country. From time to time he persisted in telling us that "prosperity was just around the corner", and his Department of Commerce statistician figured it out on paper accordingly.

PSYCHOLOGICAL POULTICES

However, when the President was actually brought to his senses and made to see that men and women were shivering in the cold, that unemployment and actual distress had reached alarming proportions, he resorted to the use of psychological poultices. He summoned railroad executives and captains of industry to a mass meeting at the White House and seemed to think he had exacted from these gentlemen an explicit agreement not to curtail employment or to reduce wages. In the existing situation the very suggestion betokened an utter misunderstanding of economics, if not mental aberration. The simplest person on earth should have known that men would not be employed if their services were not needed, and that wages would not remain unmolested if there was no market for the products of fields and factories.

It was predicted at the time of the White House announcement that if these railroad executives and captains of industry made the promise imputed to them by the President, they had exposed themselves to the bitter charge of bad faith whenever curtailment and reduction should occur. And so it happened. Responsible officials of the American Federation of Labor made exactly this complaint because there occurred curtailment of employment of 6,230,000 laborers with an annual wage or cash earning power of $7,507,155,000, together with a loss of work for 2,670,000 trained persons with a cash earning power of $5,564,280,000. This made a total of 8,900,000 persons out of employment, with a loss of $13,071,435,000 in earning power, since that famous White House conference. Thus this psychological device proved futile; and only 10 days ago the country witnessed the humiliating spectacle of the President of the United States begging railroad executives not to reduce wages further until after the Presidential election.

Then we had the moratorium on foreign debts, which was supposed to prove a psychological blessing. Those having intimate knowledge of the situation knew perfectly well that a moratorium or repudiation was inevitable and that if this country should not grant it some of our foreign debtors would be compelled to take it, and so the psychological effect of that device soon faded away and confidence was not yet restored.

Next we had the pitifully amusing expedient of organizing mass meetings to persuade against runs on banks and hoarding. Since this silly movement was more calculated to disturb confidence than to assuage fear, it was soon laughed out of existence. They tell us now, nearly a year after this absurd psychological attempt, that hoarding, computed to amount to a billion and a half dollars, has ceased to the extent of $250,000,000. This is a mere pre-election conjecture, based upon attenuated inferences and in no-wise substantiated by substantive bank figures, which show that deposits in member banks of the Reserve System alone have fallen off $2,882,000,000 since January 1, 1932. Mere reduction in circulation is by no means an exact index to hoarding. Any patriotic citizen could cheerfully wish that a more encouraging picture might truthfully be drawn; but nobody should have one particle of tolerance for partisan pre-election assertions designed only to magnify the alleged achievements of a candidate for the Presidency.

BURDENING THE TAXPAYER

The next expedient in order was the White House announcement that certain eastern bankers in the money centers had been induced by the President generously to promote a National Credit Corporation, making itself responsible for the use of $500,000,000 to acquire the frozen assets of threatened banks to prevent continued failures. It was suspected at the time that this corporation would be permitted, as was subsequently proposed, to dump its frozen assets in the lap of the Federal Reserve Banking System. Those of us responsible for legislation in Congress set our faces severely against anything of the kind; but it is now disclosed that before taking a step in the premises these eastern bankers at a secret meeting with the President of the United States and his Secretary of the Treasury at Mr. Mellon's apartment in Washington were definitely promised that a Government agency would take over the acquired assets of the corporation. This meant in plain terms that this "burden" of these generous eastern bankers was to be unloaded on the shoulders of the taxpayers of the United States! And in a round-about way this has been done; because the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, using exclusively the public funds, has already taken in excess of $100,000,000 of the assets of the National Credit Corporation by extending loans to individual banks throughout the country to enable them to repay the loans made by the National Credit Corporation under the secret promise of the President and his Secretary of the Treasury to take over these loans. I assume that nobody will deny the accuracy of this statement; if anyone does, I refer him to the statement of Percy H. Johnston, president of the Chemical Bank & Trust Co. of New York City, before the Senate Banking and Currency Committee on March 25, 1932, as recorded on page 147, part I, of the hearings. There Mr. Johnston definitely asserts that he was present when the President of the United States and Secretary Mellon made this agreement.

This National Credit Corporation did practically nothing for months until prodded into action by a threatened congressional inquiry. The Senate committee could not even persuade the chairman of the corporation to come to Washington and tell us what they were doing. Great banks were failing at its very doorsteps in the East; 825 were tottering in 3 months throughout the country. Hence the President was compelled by this inaction to suggest a revival of the old War Finance Corporation, organized under the Wilson administration to assist industries that were contributing to the conduct of the war. The Hoover idolaters acclaim his great genius for devising this instrument of relief. He had not one thing on earth to do with it. The act is almost a complete paraphrase of the act drawn by the Treasury Department under Mr. Wilson. Coincidentally, the very man appointed by me as Director of the War Finance Corporation, with the approval of Mr. Wilson, was picked to run this revised edition of this resurrected corporation, and was worked to the point of death. While the legislation was pending it was a profusely and repeatedly avowed fact that but for the unstinted cooperation of Democratic leaders in the House and Senate nothing whatsoever could have been done. Now all this is forgotten in order to magnify the alleged achievements of the man who besought this aid.

UN SOUND AND DANGEROUS

Even at that the bill as sent up from the Treasury was saturated with unsound and dangerous provisions, amounting to an assault upon the very integrity of our banking system. Under its terms $2,000,000,000 of hazardous loans were made eligible for purchase and rediscount at the Federal Reserve banks. One can reasonably conjecture that this proposal was in pursuance of the secret agreement made by the President and Mr. Mellon with the National Credit Corporation. Those of us who adhered to safe and sound banking principles were compelled, up to the last moment, to resist this and other questionable suggestions.

I assert that there is not a safeguard in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, few as they are, that was not written into it by a Democrat or progressive Republican after the bill came from the Treasury Department. I assert that but for the constant vigilance and active cooperation of the Democratic leaders in the House and Senate this revived War Finance Corporation could not have gotten on the calendar of either branch of Congress. This was repeatedly asserted by administration spokesmen in terms of grateful appreciation at the time; and we are now justified in resenting the attempt of President Hoover, in sheer campaign desperation, to appropriate to himself and his party whatever credit may attach to this irregular and unorthodox method of relief, the permanent effectiveness of which is far away from being established. In my 30 years of public life I have never witnessed such an exhibition of political ingratitude.

I shall not attempt here to discuss the seemingly prodigal waste of the taxpayers' money in fabulous schemes, few of which would be dreamed of in the ordinary course of business. I will say, however, that the President will never be able to justify this waste of public funds by craftily imputing responsibility to an alleged "Democratic majority" on the spending board. We are told that the astounding loans of this board, apparently reeking with political significance, will not cost the American taxpayers a dollar; but few people should be simple enough to credit this preposterous assertion. The very fact that not one dollar of the Corporation's debentures has been offered to private investors, but every dollar of them unloaded on the Federal Treasury, is a clear portent of the burden which the taxpayers of the country will be compelled to endure. Some of its loans have been so opportunely timed and so geographically distributed as to make some people wonder why the Republican Party should trouble itself to raise a campaign fund when the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, as in the case of California and other debatable States, is acting with such singular promptitude and precision. The country must wait until pay day shall have come to contrast the profligacy and the wisdom of this Corporation. Only in the final reckoning may the country know whether it has definitely helped or largely disorganized and crippled legitimate business—whether indignant denial of partisan political influence is pardonable sham or upon a frank basis. At all events, there was neither genius nor statesmanship nor engineering skill in the resurrection of Mr. Wilson's war device with which to cure the timidity and culpabilities of Mr. Hoover's administration. We shall later, perhaps too late, determine whether there has not been extraordinary political guile in its administration.

AN ATTEMPT TO DEBASE THE CURRENCY

The next legislative contrivance was the Glass-Steagall bill, made desirable by Presidential representations to the country that we needed to "broaden the base" of Federal Reserve credit facilities. This Executive misrepresentation of the credit situation persisted in the face of the fact that the Federal Reserve Board, justified by authentic reports from every member bank of the system, officially declared that $3,000,000,000 of commercial paper in excess of outstanding discount was available for loans, together with $5,000,000,000 of Federal securities held by the member banks. Back of this eligible paper was a supply of gold sufficient to expand bank loans by $4,000,000,000! It was in proof, by authentic statistics, that the distribution over the country of this excess in eligible commercial paper and in bonds was almost ideal. While I supported the bill to please the President's fancy, I nevertheless stated the facts to the Congress and the country. The ensuing results justify every prediction we made. Not a dollar has been loaned to a single bank under the first provision of the act, relating to associations of banks; and but 39 limping banks out of a membership of 7,600 were aided in the comparatively inconsequential sum of $27,000,000 under section 2 of the act. When it is considered that the total loans of member banks at the time amounted to nearly $31,000,000,000, the insignificance of this transaction is apparent, and the utter vice of Mr. Hoover having created alarm over our credit structure is mathematically demonstrated.

Even this Glass-Steagall bill, when brought to us by spokesmen for the President, was saturated with hazardous provisions. It would have permitted member banks to unload their frozen assets on the Federal Reserve banks while retaining their liquid assets in their own possession. It would have made eligible for rediscount at the Federal Reserve banks as many billions of foreign securities as the banks might be willing to receive. It would have permitted the big banks to absorb the credits of the Reserve banks to the practical exclusion of the smaller banks. As in the case of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation bill, every safeguard in the Glass-Steagall bill was written after the measure had left the Treasury Building.

In Republican official quarters it has been proclaimed that this Glass-Steagall bill kept the United States on the gold standard. I assert that this is false in fact and implication. I assert that those of us responsible for legislation never had the remotest intimation from the administration that the gold standard was in danger. I assert that the President and accredited spokesmen bitterly denounced the mischievous talk. I repeat the assertion that anybody who now says anything to the contrary of what is alleged here is either ignorant of the facts or indifferent to the truth.

Anybody who says this country was within 2 weeks of being "driven off the gold standard" actually impeaches the official integrity of the President of the United States and of the Secretary of the Treasury. The latter official, from January 1, 1932, to June 30, 1932, with the approval of the President, sold to the banks and private investors in the United States $3,709,213,450 of Treasury notes and certificates of indebtedness, redeemable in gold at the Treasury. Of this amount $2,014,224,050 represented 1-year certificates, and $1,694,989,400 were redeemable in 90 days from issue. If the President and the Secretary of the Treasury had knowledge of the fact that this country was faced with imminent disaster by being "driven off the gold standard in 2 weeks", and failed to so advise the banks and private investors who purchased nearly $4,000,000,000 of these Federal securities, they were guilty of amazing dishonesty; they were cheating the investing public; and could not even appropriate to themselves the solace of future oblivion, because their names would have been remembered in terms of anathema for a century to come.

Despite this suggested infamy, the authentic figures and facts show that no such situation existed as that which politicians have conjured up for discreditable campaign purposes in order to exaggerate the executive prowess of a candidate for the Presidency. The figures are conclusive, and persons who repeat this campaign hoax do not seem to realize that they are impeaching the common honesty of the President of the United States and the Secretary of the Treasury.

The third section of the Glass-Steagall bill was not even used until nearly 3 months after the time now fixed by administration spokesmen for this imaginary disaster; and shocking maladministration of the act, in direct conflict with repeated promises to the contrary, came nearer inciting both foreign and domestic raids upon our gold supply than anything that happened before the enactment of the law.

Mr. Hoover insists that the very essence of prosperity for the Nation is public confidence; and, that being so, just behold the plight of this country when the foremost publicist of continental Europe felt justified in cabling to the metropolitan press of America that Mr. Hoover's gold-standard assertion at Des Moines, repeated at Indianapolis, was in such direct conflict with assurances given last winter and spring as that the banks and responsible officials of France were finding it impossible to attach importance to any statement from the President of the United States.

A STRUTTING TRUMPETER

In this connection the newspapers report that Secretary Hurley, of the War Department, has openly proclaimed from the public rostrum that should the Democratic Party succeed at the November election, "the United States will be driven off the gold standard." For the sake of decency, it must be hoped that Mr. Hurley did not say that. If he did say it, he was guilty of a dangerous calumny. If he said it, he is totally unfit for official responsibility, and the President should have booted him out of office before breakfast time of the following day. Indecency, even in a political campaign, has its limitations. This alleged declaration, if made by this strutting trumpeter of the President, was not far short of treason to the country.

I come now to the last so-called "relief measure." It bears the name of WAGNER, the Democratic Senator from New York, who spent days and nights and weeks and months in reviewing the problems involved. Other Members of the Senate of both parties contributed thought and effort to the measure. It was a composite bill, reflecting the varying judgment of many minds. It provided for huge expenditures of public funds for special purposes. Vicious proposals by the administration were rejected; others of a different nature were accepted by the Senate. Inadvisable proposals by the House of Representatives were cast aside and others of a different nature were embodied in the bill. Personally, I regard the measure as utterly extraordinary and unorthodox; but I and others agreeing with me, not caring to appear as obstructionists, went along with this mammoth measure for relief.

No one man, be he the President of the United States or a legislative leader, can truthfully appropriate all the credit attaching to this relief act. No group of men of either party can with good grace make any such claim; and it is amazing to those who would prefer to respect the President of the United States that he should parade over this country and pretend that he and his party only are entitled to praise for this yet undemonstrated relief act.

If I were asked to pick out the three men in Washington more responsible for legislative relief to the unemployed and to the destitute of the country, I should never name President Hoover. I'd name ROBERT WAGNER, Democratic member of the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate; BOB LA FOLLETTE, Republican Chairman of the Senate Committee on Manufactures; and BOB BULKLEY, junior Senator from Ohio. This does not mean that there were not many Senators and Representatives in Congress, Republicans and Democrats, who devoted their very souls to the problem.

HOOVER NOT IN THE PICTURE

I have given you briefly a recital of the causes of panic and depression in the United States, and have told you of the expedients employed in Washington to arrest the ravages. Nowhere in this picture can you discern the martial figure of Herbert Hoover in death grapple with the panoplied forces of financial, commercial, and industrial disaster. Naturally, the President's eyes were too intently gazing on foreign convulsions to permit him clearly to see the wreckage at his feet. With great agitation he noted the failure of the Bank of Austria and ignored the 6,208 banks which toppled in this country before the Austrian debacle. He saw a temporary renunciation of the gold standard in England on September 21, 1931, and imagined that it caused the failure of over 5,000 banks in the United States before September 21, 1931.

Secretary Mills tells us that there was no "panic" in this country before the bank failure in Austria and the momentary abandonment of the gold standard in Great Britain. He thinks the greatest era of bank failures and of losses to depositors since the foundation of the Government came about in a quiet way without business agitation or loss of confidence until a bank failed in Austria and until England went off the gold standard. And Ogden Mills has a brilliant mind.

But now let me turn to the flagrant charges made by the President and Secretary Mills against the Democratic Party.

They say the administration was obstructed in its efforts to reduce Federal expenses by the resistance of Democratic leaders in Congress. I assert that, on the contrary, every effort made by the two Houses of Congress to reduce expenses of government was resisted by the President's own Cabinet ministers. No attempt was made in this direction until nearly 3 years after Mr. Hoover was inaugurated. Meanwhile rank Government extravagance was reflected in enormously increased expenditures. Mr. Hoover seemed to think the Nation could squander itself into prosperity. His slogan for the Government and the populace was: "Spend! Spend! Buy! Buy!" Budgetary disaster should have been foreseen in swiftly mounting costs and frightfully declining revenues. Taxes had been abolished which should have been retained. Four million taxpayers, at one swipe, had been released from all obligation to their Government. President Hoover, like Mr. Coolidge, permitted things to drift. The great engineering instinct seemed to have dried up. Although terrifying deficits threatened, Mr. Hoover played the part of a Presidential Micawber, "waiting for something to turn up." Not until last December was there one particle of interest manifested in these Budgetary disarrangements. Then the President frantically began to urge economy on Congress, and the next day after Cabinet ministers would troop to the Capitol not only to resist but to denounce congressional efforts at economy. Notwithstanding this, the official records, as attested by the Republican Chairman of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, show that Congress reduced appropriations $334,294,094.18 under the approved Budget estimates of the President himself.

I assert from actual knowledge of the facts that at the very moment the President was lustily preaching economy his Cabinet ministers were appearing before the Appropriations Committee of the Senate and offensively characterizing efforts at economy. His suave Postmaster General was disseminating throughout postal officialdom, from one end of the country to the other, a classified statement of 30,000 postal employees that he claimed he would be compelled to discharge should he carry out a Senate order to reduce expenses in his Department by 10 percent. This document was sent out obviously to incite all these employees to deluge Congress with protests against discharges that were never contemplated. We had hoped to make the 10 percent reduction without discharging anybody, but by reducing salaries, cutting expenses, and revoking, if possible, improvident and shameless subsidies for which the Post Office Department had contracted, paying in a single instance $820,000 for carrying $1,700 worth of mail to South America. Scores of such items appear in the list of expenditures. The Secretary of the Treasury appeared before the Senate Appropriations Committee and was so denunciatory of the attempt of the Senate to bring about economy as to create intense resentment among the committee members. He characterized the Senate resolution as "brutal" and "inhuman."

THE BUDGET UNBALANCED

These are but passing examples of the difficulties encountered by Congress in getting cooperation from the administration to effect economy. I am not seeking to minimize the gravity of President Hoover's difficulties; but he shall not be permitted, without protest, to lay them on the Congress. Our adversaries started this debate; I am simply giving them "a Roland for their Oliver."

The President and Mr. Mills charged Congress with obstructing the efforts of the administration to balance the Budget. I shall not waste your time and mine with a repetition here of the diverse views and contrasting figures submitted by each side to the controversy. Congressional disputants allege with apparent reason that it was never possible to get anything like an accurate estimate from the administration of the amounts required to balance the Budget. This I do know and assert: The pretense on the eve of adjournment that the Budget was balanced was pure political subterfuge and as far from the truth as any other prelection claim. Members of the Appropriations Committee of both Houses openly charged that the Budget was not balanced and that the administration, in a Presidential election year, had not courage enough to reduce expenses sufficiently or to propose a tax levy high enough to effectively balance the Budget. It was charged, upon the expert computations of competent actuaries, that the measure finally passed would not come within a billion dollars of balancing the Budget. Treasury receipts and disbursements to date, after all mitigating factors are considered, would seem to indicate that we did not come within one and one half billion dollars of balancing the Budget. Hence, additional taxes must be levied unless extraordinary expenditures are discontinued.

It is an indisputable fact that beyond sending messages to Congress in general terms the President gave no particle of help. At the very last moment of the session, after Democratic leaders had agreed with him at the White House on the final abortive attempt to balance the Budget and when Senate action was imminent, the President breathlessly rushed to the Capitol and publicly addressed the Senate in order to get publicity for himself. In the newspapers he was figured as "forcing the Senate" to do something that had been agreed on the night before and the consummation of which by the Senate was delayed for the exact time required for Mr. Hoover to thus uselessly pose in public on the stage. The camera men were at hand to snap the superman and exhibit him on the screen. The self-advertising machine was in full swing; but the President seemed not to know that the Budget was not balanced. It was a billion dollars out of gear. The only thing he had done was to fool himself and get in the pictures.

BONUS HYPOCRISY

The President and his Secretary of the Treasury put responsibility on the Democratic Party in general for the so-called "Patman bonus bill", merely because the Democrats have a slender margin of five votes in the House of Representatives, where the bill was projected by intraparty revolts. They make this charge in spite of the recorded fact that 69 Republicans in the House voted for this bill, which would have been defeated but for Republican support, and in spite of the much more pregnant fact that an overwhelming majority of Democratic Senators defeated the bill in the Senate. The only body authorized to speak for the Democratic Party of the country was its national convention. The platform committee of that convention had the courage to vote down every importunate plea for immediate payment of bonus certificates. The Republican convention was too cowardly to even intimate opposition to a legislative measure which the Republican President had said would debase our currency and wreck the Federal Treasury!

In the last analysis this bonus problem is a legacy of sordid Republican politics. This Government obligation was incurred by a Congress overwhelmingly Republican in both branches, with the almost fatal and predicted result of burdening the American taxpayers in behalf of more than 2,000,000 of able-bodied men who never got within 3,000 miles of the European battle front, thus rendering impossible more generous treatment of the men actually disabled in war and the widows and orphans of men who were killed. The President suggests that, when paid, the bonus should be paid with "a sound dollar." Given 4 years more of President Hoover and there will not be left a sound dollar in the Federal Treasury to pay anybody for anything.

Moreover, in response to the President's charge that the legislation proposed in the House and adopted with Republican aid involved "flat money", I assert that we had from the administration at the last session of Congress inflationary proposals that would have rocked the foundations of our banking system. The adoption of them would not only have tempted foreign raids on our gold reserves but would have incited a dangerous domestic demand for redemption. Had these proposals been adopted, they would have made millions of dollars of foreign securities with which this country was deluged by administration connivance a basis for tremendous credit expansion; and, while I voted against the bonus to able-bodied men and against the House bill for immediate payment, I assert that the Government certificates of indebtedness to the World War veterans are sounder security for credit or currency expansion than the securities of tottering South American republics and other foreign nations. Both are dangerous and unorthodox.

Finally, under this head, I direct your attention to the fact that the Democratic national platform declares for "a sound currency, to be maintained at all hazards." But if the Republican Party captures the next Congress, the Chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee of the House of Representatives will be the Honorable LOUIS T. MCFADDEN, until last December chairman of that committee. Mr. MCFADDEN voted for the Patman "flat money" bill, which the President charges threatened to wreck the Treasury and "debase our currency." MCFADDEN will be the Republican pilot in banking and under a Republican majority! Mr. Hoover expatiates on certain dangerous provisions of a House bill involving individual loans, but he very carefully withholds the fact that he and Secretary Mills urged a measure on the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate authorizing loans of public moneys to private business concerns. He fails to disclose the fact that, when asked by a foremost Republican Senator to give an example of the type of concerns he had in mind, the President "happened" to designate an automobile corporation the head of which is asserted to have contributed $25,000 to Mr. Hoover's campaign fund and to have been given an ambassadorship in requital. But for Democratic and progressive Republican vigilance this sort of appalling abuse of public funds would now prevail.

President Hoover and Secretary Mills charge the Democratic Party with responsibility for the proposal to guarantee bank deposits; but they refrain from telling the country that such an overwhelming number of House Republicans voted for this untried experiment as that it was impossible to get one fifth of the Membership to order a recorded vote. Mr. Hoover and Mr. Mills fail to reveal that this proposition sought the approval of the Democratic National Convention and was so overwhelmingly defeated as that it would not get the one-fifth parliamentary requirement to call the roll of States. Must the country infer that there is no longer any frankness left in Republican campaign speakers, who seek thus to deceive the people? The primary cause for the revival of this deposit-guaranty question is the $4,000,000,000 potential loss of deposits under the incompetent administration of Mr. Hoover. The overwhelming vote of Republican Members for this "guaranty" scheme may be regarded as their contribution to the conscience fund for the benefit of pillaged depositors.

HAVE FRANKNESS AND HONESTY DISAPPEARED?

Three times President Hoover has denounced a Democratic House of Representatives for passing the so-called "Goldborough stabilization bill", tauntingly characterizing the measure as "the rubber dollar bill." He charges it was a Democratic scheme, ignorant of the fact that it was a mere revival of a measure drafted by a New England Republican and urged for adoption in the House for 5 years successively by Mr. Strong, of Kansas, ranking Republican member of the House Committee on Banking and Currency. Infinitely worse than this, the President studiously concealed the fact that 117 Republican Members of the House, constituting two thirds of the entire Republican force, voted for this eccentric bill. Will the President dare go into the States of these 117 Republican Congressmen and advise their rejection at the polls because they voted for this "rubber dollar bill"? The President also failed to state that the passage of this bill, so ridiculous in its terms, was arrested by a Democratic Senator, on whose motion every word after the enacting clause was stricken out and a substitute adopted over Presidential protest, under which $120,000,000 of sound national-bank currency has been issued to 450 banks suffering from lack of expansive resources. Have frankness and honesty ceased to be a desirable element in political campaigns?

In order to frighten business Mr. Hoover makes scarecrows of alleged Democratic measures that were not enacted into law even with overwhelming Republican support; he appropriates exclusive credit to himself for Democratic measures that were enacted into law. This vice permeates every speech the President has delivered. The other day he avowed that the United States had saved the railroads from bankruptcy. The country wants to know what is to save the United States from bankruptcy with 4 years more of Hoover.

The President and his Secretary of the Treasury warn the country that the selection of a Democratic Congress and a Democratic administration would retard the business of recovery. And this coming from an administration that has increased the debt liability of the United States $4,000,000,000 in 3 years! In face of the facts here cited, that warning amounts to positive audacity; and in face of facts and figures that I shall now give it amounts to amazing effrontery. Every effort of relief by this Republican administration at Washington last winter and spring constituted a shuffling appeal to measures devised by a Democratic administration. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act is a resurrection in exaggerated form of Wilson's War Finance Corporation Act; and the chief reliance of this country, great as have been some of the mistakes made, was and is the Federal Reserve Banking System, devised and adopted under the administration of Woodrow Wilson. This act was voted against by an overwhelming majority of Republicans in the House and voted for by only three Republicans in the Senate, and denounced by Republican politicians throughout the Nation. This is the Democratic measure that has saved this country from total wreck and that now, under wise administration, will make recovery possible.

Listen to this amazing recital in response to the amazing declaration of President Hoover and Mr. Mills that a Democratic administration cannot be trusted to conduct the Government.

1. There have been more bank failures in the United States nearly every month under the Hoover administration than there were in the entire 8 years of Woodrow Wilson's administration, although 4 years of the Wilson regime had to contend with the convulsions of the World War.

2. There were almost as many business failures in the past 3½ years under Hoover as there were in the entire 8-year period of the Wilson administration.

3. The amount of business losses in the past 3½ years under Hoover was approximately a billion dollars more than the business losses in the entire 8 years of the Wilson administration—an excess greater than the entire bonded indebtedness of the United States before the World War.

4. To be exact, in the 8 years under Wilson there were 112,635 business failures, involving a loss of $1,882,953,000; whereas from January 1, 1929, to October 1, 1932, there were 102,556 business failures under Hoover, involving a loss of $2,645,476,000. The losses averaged $19,000,000 per month under Wilson, including 4 years of World War, and $58,000,000 per month under Hoover in 3 years of profound peace.

5. But 69 national banks failed during the whole 8 years under Wilson, whereas 800 national banks have failed in 3 years and 2 months under Hoover.

6. The last 3 years of the Wilson administration witnessed the failure of 8 national banks, whereas the past month witnessed the failure of 12 national banks under Hoover.

7. In the last 3 years of Wilson's administration 201 State banks failed, whereas in the last 3 years and 2 months under Hoover 4,061 State banks failed. Bank failures during 3 years under Hoover caused the jeopardy or actual loss of $4,198,358,000 to depositors.

Undertaking to minimize the horrible consequences of the nearly 7,000 bank failures in the United States, Secretary Stimson, lawlessly responsible for many of them, made the astounding assertion in New York some nights ago that our bank failures were consequent upon "the failure of banks in countries all about us." Never was there a more shameless falsification of fact indulged in by a responsible public official. England has not had a bank failure in 10 years. Her Dominion of Canada, across the St. Lawrence River, has not had a bank failure since 1925. France during this financial convulsion had not a single bank failure, nor had Italy. Even German and Austrian banks stood up until thousands in the United States had failed. Where are the bank failures "in the countries all about us" of which Mr. Stimson spoke? They were in his imagination and brought out solely for political effect in the desperation of a losing campaign.

Secretary Mills, at Baltimore, asserted that things were improving for banks, attributing the improvement to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; but Mr. Mills failed to tell his audience and the country that, with all the desperate and doubtful expenditures of the taxpayers' money to help decrepit banks, 1,096 banks have failed since the Reconstruction Finance Corporation began its work of salvage last January. These failures involved the jeopardy or actual loss to depositors of $603,757,000. Mr. Mills proudly tells us that stock prices and bond values have recently "moved up." If they moved at all they had to move up, because under this Republican administration they were, like McGinty, at the bottom of the well. Mr. Mills failed to tell the country that while there was a slight increase in the value of stock-exchange securities, there was a pitiful actual decrease in all commodity prices and that the products of field and factories are at the lowest ebb in the entire economic life of the Nation.

After this history of fright and helplessness and humiliation, Mr. Hoover and his really lovable Secretary of the Treasury have the assurance to warn the American people that a return of Democratic administration would menace the business interests of the United States. The Democrats couldn't do worse were they to try; and, unless the signs of the times are completely out of joint, after the 8th day of November the Democrats are going to be given a chance to rescue the country.

Franklin D. Roosevelt as Governor of one of the largest States of the Union, clean of body and clear of mind, dealing promptly with almost insuperable difficulties, is amply prepared for the tremendous task of reconstruction which will face the next Federal administration. He will not go to sleep at his post. The congressional contacts and understanding and plain common sense of John Garner preeminently equip him for helpful service in promoting the legislative program of a Democratic administration.

We shall not make impossible promises and then proceed to break them. We shall not employ Lydia Pinkham political pills nor psychological poultices as a cure for the maladies of the country. We shall not rely upon transient devices and mere temporary remedies for serious situations; but, holding fast to sound Jeffersonian principles and applying tested orthodox processes, we shall hope to rescue the Government and the country from the unendurable confusion and distress into which Republican maladministration has thrust us. So serious is the situation that only by the help of Almighty God can this be done.

Mr. REED. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. PATTERSON] to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS]. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll, and Mr. ADAMS voted "yea" when his name was called.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I desire to make a statement as to the modification which has been made in this amendment. A number of Senators were not in the Chamber when the amendment was modified.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, a point of order. The roll call has started.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Senators will be in order and take their seats, so that the Senate may proceed in order. What is the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. REED. That I may explain the modification to the Senate. I asked for recognition before the roll call began.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the roll call has been started, the first name has been called, and the Senator has responded. Therefore it is not in order for further explanations or speeches to be made.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I asked for recognition before the roll call began.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment as now proposed be stated by the clerk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The Senator from Pennsylvania proposes, on page 5, to strike out lines 1 to 18, inclusive, and to insert in lieu thereof the following words:

By proclamation to fix the weight of the silver dollar in grains nine tenths fine at a definite fixed ratio in relation to the gold dollar at such amounts as he finds necessary from his investigation to stabilize domestic prices or to protect the foreign commerce against the adverse effect of depreciated foreign currencies, and to provide for the unlimited coinage of such gold and silver at the ratio so fixed.

Mr. REED. A parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. REED. Is not the effect of the amendment as it now stands to strike out the revaluation of the gold dollar, but to leave unchanged and unchallenged the action of the Senate last night in acting on free silver?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that to be the effect of the amendment.

Mr. LONG. A point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LONG. Am I to understand that all we are voting on is leaving unchanged the silver amendment? Is the Senator taking out the gold devaluation altogether?

Mr. REED. Exactly.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I demand the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Senators will have to determine for themselves the effect of the amendment. The Chair will not take that responsibility. The clerk will continue with the roll call.

The legislative clerk resumed the calling of the roll.

Mr. GORE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL], who is absent. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea." I desire to have this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. LOGAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], who is absent on account of illness. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] and vote "yea."

Mr. LEWIS (when Mr. PITTMAN's name was called). The Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] is at present engaged in council with the President and representatives of foreign nations upon international matters. I merely announce his absence, and cannot state what attitude he would take upon the pending question.

Mr. TOWNSEND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]. If I were permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 35, nays 53, as follows:

YEAS—35

Adams	Dale	Hebert	Patterson
Austin	Dickinson	Kean	Reed
Barbour	Fess	Keyes	Stelwer

NOT VOTING—7

Davis	McKellar	Schall	Townsend
Gore	Pittman	Thomas, Utah

So the amendment of Mr. REED and Mr. PATTERSON, as modified, to the amendment of Mr. THOMAS was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], as amended.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I desire, of course, to offer the so-called "bonus amendment", if I have the opportunity at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment referred to by the Senator from Indiana is in order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I now send to the desk and ask to have read, at least, by title, the amendment which I propose to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana offers an amendment to the amendment, which the clerk will read.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The Senator from Indiana offers the following amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma:

On page 8, after line 21, insert the following:

"SEC. 38. Title V of the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof three new sections to read as follows:

"PAYMENT OF CERTIFICATES BEFORE MATURITY

"SEC. 509. (a) The President of the United States, in his discretion, is authorized to pay to any veteran to whom an adjusted-service certificate has been issued, upon application by him and surrender of the certificate and all rights thereunder (with or without the consent of the beneficiary thereof), the amount of the face value of the certificate as computed in accordance with section 501.

"(b) No payment shall be made under this section until the certificate is in the possession of the Veterans' Administration, nor until all obligations for which the certificate was held as security have been paid or otherwise discharged.

"(c) If at the time of application to the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs for payment under this section, the principal and interest on or in respect of any loan upon the certificate have not been paid in full by the veteran (whether or not the loan has matured), then, on request of the veteran, the Administrator shall (1) pay or otherwise discharge such unpaid principal and so much of such unpaid interest (accrued or to accrue) as is necessary to make the certificate available for payment under this section, and (2) deduct from the amount of the face value of the certificate the amount of such principal and so much of such interest, if any, as accrued prior to October 1, 1932.

"(d) Upon payment under this section the certificate and all rights thereunder shall be canceled.

"(e) Any veteran may receive the benefits of this section by application therefor, filed with the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs. Such application may be made and filed at any time before the maturity of the certificate (1) personally by the veteran or (2) in case physical or mental incapacity prevents the making or filing of a personal application, then by such representative of the veteran and in such manner as may be by regulations prescribed. An application made by a person other than a representative authorized by such regulations, or not filed on or before the maturity of the certificate, shall be held void.

"(f) If the veteran dies after the application is made and before it is filed, it may be filed by any person. If the veteran dies after the application is made, it shall be valid if the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs finds that it bears the bona fide signature of the applicant, discloses an intention to claim the benefit of this section on behalf of the veteran, and is filed before the maturity of the certificate, whether or not the veteran is alive at the time it is filed. If the death occurs after the application is made but before the negotiation of the check in payment, payment shall be made to the estate of the veteran, irrespective of any beneficiary designation, if the application is filed (1) before the death occurs, or (2) after the death occurs, but before the mailing of the check in payment to the beneficiary under section 501.

"(g) Where the records of the Veterans' Administration show that an application disclosing an intention to claim the benefits of this section has been filed before the maturity of the certificate, and the application cannot be found, such application shall be presumed, in the absence of affirmative evidence to the contrary, to have been valid when originally filed.

"SEC. 510. If at the time this section takes effect a veteran entitled to receive an adjusted-service certificate has not made application therefor he shall be entitled, upon application made under section 302, to receive at his option either the certificate under section 501 or payment of the amount of the face value thereof under section 509.

"SEC. 511. The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, in the exercise of his powers to make regulations for payment under section 509, shall to the fullest extent practicable provide a method by which veterans may present their applications and receive payment in close proximity to the places of their residence."

"SEC. 39. Payment of the face value of the adjusted-service certificates under section 509 or 510 of the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, as amended, shall be made in United States notes of the character described in subsection (b) (1) of section 34 of this act; and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to issue such notes in an amount sufficient for such purpose. The amount of the notes authorized by such subsection is hereby reduced by the amount of the notes issued pursuant to this section."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, for the past 3 years and more we have sought to effect a cure for the unfortunate condition in which the United States has found itself. We have been in the midst of a depression the like of which, of course, the world has never before known. Many remedies have been tried to effect a cure, but conditions have steadily grown worse. One administration has gone out of existence, and on the 4th of March last another administration came into the control of the Government of the United States. Since March 4 a great deal of legislation has been enacted. With some of that legislation I have been in sympathy; most of it I have opposed. Especially did I oppose the so-called "economy bill" which did not effect any real economy and which was cruel and unjust to the defenders of the Nation. In my judgment, that legislation was, is, and will continue to be indefensible from any standpoint; but it was passed; and I think it is not too much to say that millions of American citizens are now suffering and are in dire distress because it was passed.

Mr. President, the Chief Executive of the Nation is undertaking—I think his intentions are good—to alleviate the deplorable situation that obtains throughout the country. Since he took office, due directly to legislation enacted since March 4 and because of the bank holiday, the reduction in benefits to the veterans and the slashes in pay to Federal workers, to say nothing of the slashes in the wages of industrial workers throughout the country, brought about by the example by the United States, in my judgment, we have suffered $11,000,000,000 of additional deflation. I think there are today half a million more men unemployed than were unemployed on March 4. Purchasing power has been enormously curtailed; we are going downhill constantly, and unless we turn around and go in the other direction, Mr. President, we shall see catastrophe and chaos in this country before the middle of the summer.

Therefore I want to go with the President in this inflation program, though in doing so I am voting against the teachings of a lifetime. We have tried everything else, to no avail, and now I am willing to try inflation to see if the Nation may not be saved—conditions are as bad as that.

If we propose to inflate the currency, and if we propose to undertake this program, the power to bring about the reforms must be lodged somewhere. It is impossible for 531 men and women in the Congress of the United States, collectively, to execute a law of this kind. Therefore, I know of nothing else to do but place the authority and the power in the hands of the one man who holds a mandate directly from the people of America, hoping that he will use that vast power discreetly, wisely, and in the best interests of all the people of the Nation. Therefore, Mr. President, I am going along in this inflation program. Nothing else has worked; I hope inflation will.

It is one thing, however, to inflate the currency and another thing to get the money out among the people. I understand that $2,000,000,000, recently authorized and created as a result of the banking legislation, is on the shelves now, but the banks will not use it; they will not put it out. I hope to see a distribution of some of this money, to the end that there may be real purchasing power in the land and that we may revive industry through that purchasing power.

Accordingly, directly in line with such a program, I offer this so-called "bonus amendment" to the Thomas amendment, providing for the immediate payment of the adjusted-service certificates to veterans who hold them.

Mr. President, if Senators will read this amendment they will note that it proposes to pay in full the adjusted-service certificates to the veterans under subsection (b) (1) of section 34, which provides that $3,000,000,000 may be issued.

Mr. DILL and Mr. TYDINGS addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield first to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. DILL. I want to invite the Senator's attention to the language in line 18, "shall be made in United States notes of the character described in subsection (b) (1) of section 34," and so forth. I take it the Senator means issued under the requirements of this provision?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. That is true.

Mr. DILL. I wonder if the Senator would be willing to amend in line 18, after the word "character", by inserting the words "and under the requirements"? In other words, I want to make it certain that if this money is issued and paid to the soldier it will be under the 4-percent fund that is provided for it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I am entirely agreeable to that suggestion provided the Senator understands, as I do, that that will not make it impossible to pay the money on the certificates immediately. I am anxious that those who are needy and in distress shall have the money at once. The requirements of the section are that the notes shall be issued at the discretion of the President. I wish the Senator would look at that view of it while I proceed.

I yield now to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. Assuming the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana is to be adopted and carried into effect, I assume that each soldier holding a bonus certificate would receive the full face value of his certificate in one payment. Am I correct?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. That is my understanding.

Mr. TYDINGS. Has the Senator contemplated, instead of paying all this money out at one time in one lump payment, now that we are in a depression, now that we do not know when we will emerge, the idea of making the payments, if they are to be made at all, in monthly installments rather than in one lump sum?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. That is a suggestion worthy of careful consideration. I have not, however, given it any consideration up to this moment. I had expected to have the Government pay the money on the certificates in one sum immediately, and at the earliest possible moment, to relieve the distress.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a further observation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WHITE in the chair). Does the Senator from Indiana yield further to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think if the proposal is to be carried into effect, it would be much better to have a part of it in a lump sum and pay the remainder of it in monthly installments, because then the soldier who holds a certificate would get the same amount of money, but he would have it coming in to tide him over at least a part of the depression. I submit that to the Senator from Indiana for whatever consideration he may care to give it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The suggestion is appreciated and it is, of course, worthy of careful consideration. I had not thought of doing that at this time, at any rate, for the reason that most of the men need the money, need all they can get at the present time, and I think it would immediately circulate throughout the country.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I will not interrupt the Senator if he wishes, because his time is limited.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. That is true, but I am glad to yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to suggest, in addition to the other suggestions, that it seems to me the amendment would reduce the $3,000,000,000 referred to in the Thomas amendment on page 2, line 21, by the amount paid out on the certificates. Is that true?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. That is true.

Mr. NORRIS. Then we are in this dilemma. The Senator's amendment would be compulsory. The other provisions are that the President may take all or any of them as he sees fit. If we agree to the Senator's amendment, we are in the attitude then of having, in effect, rejected the balance of the bill for this amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I do not understand it that way.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to support the Senator's amendment if it came in the same category with the other provisions of the bill or if it came in the nature of a straight amendment, which in legal effect it does, anyway, because it cuts down the $3,000,000,000 provided for in subsection (a) on page 2.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I recognize the position of the Senator from Nebraska. I have not had time to consider the amendment. While the Senator from Indiana is carrying on his discussion, I suggest that the Senator from Nebraska prepare such a modification as he has in mind. I do not think it would require very much change to bring it in the desired category.

I believe the Senator from Indiana would be willing to accept it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The only thing about it that I fear, if I understand it, is that it places the payment of the certificates entirely in the discretion of the President, so that if he desires to pay the holders he may do so, but if he does not desire to do so they are no better off than they were before.

Mr. NORRIS. I appreciate the strength of the Senator's argument, but the Senator must remember that the whole bill is for the President to use as he sees fit. I would dislike very much to have one compulsory provision placed in the bill, all the other provisions of the bill being discretionary, and that one compulsory which in effect would amend one of the discretionary powers given to the President. It seems to me it is hardly a logical position.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. In just a moment I will yield to the Senator from New York.

It may be logical and the Senator from Nebraska may be right, and we may have to go to the old theory that half a loaf is better than no loaf at all. That is what I tried to avoid doing in writing the amendment. I want it made mandatory that the money shall be paid so that the needy veterans, who have just been deflated to the extent of 35 to 100 percent, may have money with which to buy food and provide shelter and clothing.

I yield now to the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska, if I may have his attention—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Indiana on the amendment has expired.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I will take my time on the bill, then. I want to yield to the Senator from New York, and then I am going to ask Senators not to interrupt me further because of the time limit. I am glad to yield to the Senator from New York for a question.

Mr. COPELAND. I was wondering why the Senator does not simplify his amendment by taking the Thomas amendment and, on page 4, line 7, after the word "obligations", insert the words "and retiring the adjusted-service certificates." Is not that what the Senator is seeking to do? The adjusted certificates would then have the same standing as other Federal obligations.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. What is the amendment suggested by the Senator?

Mr. COPELAND. Instead of having the rather long amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana, I suggest, on page 4 of the Thomas amendment, line 7, after the word "obligations", to insert a comma and the words "and retiring the adjusted-service certificates."

Then the certificates would be on exactly the same plane as other Federal obligations.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I do not believe that would be at all effective. I feel that that would be utterly nothing gained for the service men. I do not like to seem stubborn in the matter, but I think the veterans ought to be paid this debt, which has been due since the armistice was signed. We paid the railroads a big bonus, hundreds of millions of dollars, as soon as the war was over. We did not ask them to wait until 1945. We paid the contractors who built the cantonments and various camps all over the country. We paid them a cash bonus. We paid the Federal civilian workers in cash. The only class we have asked to wait until 1945 for payment of a debt which we conceded was due in 1924 are the veterans of the country who were over there stopping bullets for a dollar a day.

Mr. COPELAND. I am going to vote for the bonus payment, but I was only thinking about what might be a better way to do it. That is the thought I had in mind.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield for a question.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me ask the Senator if under his amendment the power of the President is discretionary? That is correct, is it not?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Not under my amendment. I did not intend it to be discretionary.

Mr. TYDINGS. It is compulsory?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Then may I ask the Senator if the President is compelled to pay the full value of the bonus, or could he pay 50 or 75 percent of the face value?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Under the amendment as written the Secretary of the Treasury would be directed to pay the entire amount of the balance of the bonus due.

Mr. President, I should like to place in the RECORD at this point some statistics with reference to the fund on hand and the amount necessary to retire the certificates.

The maturity value of the outstanding certificates as of March 31, 1933, is $3,514,476,919.

The amount of the adjusted-certificate fund now available to be applied to the certificates is $1,225,990,885.

The amount required to retire the certificates is $2,288,486,034. Of this amount the veterans would receive $1,945,236,682.

Then, Mr. President, here is an item that gives me a great deal of concern: The balance of $343,249,352 would be paid to banks and Government life-insurance funds holding liens against service certificates. In other words, that figure is approaching half a billion dollars; that is to say, if we go on for 3 or 4 years and continue to ignore this just obligation of the United States Government to the veterans, my fear is that the veterans will receive nothing; that all of the certificates will be held by the money lenders, and that the money lenders will cash in on the certificates in 1945. So I think it is necessary that these sums be paid, and paid at the earliest possible moment.

I stated a while ago—it is in the RECORD—that we are now paying into this reserve fund, for the redemption of the certificates in 1945, approximately $112,000,000 annually. Under the provision of the Thomas amendment, which provides for the issuance of $3,000,000,000 in Treasury notes, the sinking-fund requirement is only 4 percent. That means a net saving to the United States Government annually of $22,000,000 in ready money. In other words, as it stands now, we are placing in this special fund annually $112,000,000 for the redemption of the certificates. If this amendment is added to the Thomas amendment, and the bill passes and becomes a law, we shall be required to pay into the sinking fund only 4 percent on the amount of the certificates outstanding, or $89,120,000 annually, meaning a difference of approximately $22,000,000 each year. That would represent in operating the two funds a saving to the Government of that sum.

If we pay these certificates, Mr. President, we do not increase the indebtedness of the United States in the slightest degree. What we do is to discharge a debt of the United States that, regardless of any controversy that may arise as to when it may be due—some of us think it has been due since the armistice was signed November 11, 1918; others think it will not be due until 1945—is, in any event, a debt which must be paid at the latest in 1945. If this amendment is successful, that debt will be liquidated immediately; the difference being that the needy veterans and their families will receive the money, whereas if we wait until 1945 it will go largely to the money lenders, and the veterans, for whom Congress enacted the legislation in 1924, confessing the indebtedness, will receive practically nothing.

Mr. President, I know there are powerful interests in this country that are opposed to this legislation. I need mention only the National Economy League, composed largely of wealthy taxpayers of the land. They have opposed all veterans' legislation; and the program finally adopted by the Congress is precisely the program espoused by that organization, resulting in the passage of the so-called "economy bill."

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President—

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the Senator give me a moment to call attention to the fact that the organizations that have been opposing the passage of the bonus bill have been doing it upon the theory that it would be necessary to borrow something like $2,250,000,000 on Government bonds, and pay interest on it from that time on? I desire, however, to call the Senator's attention to the fact that under the Thomas amendment we have entirely gotten away from that method of financing, and paragraph (2) distinctly provides that the President may issue this paper money to the extent of $3,000,000,000 and thereby retire $3,000,000,000 of the bonds. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] says there is no objection to that, because the bonds have gone and have been replaced by this money.

The situation here is entirely different, if we have started upon this method of financing, because under this plan, while it probably would be necessary to increase the $3,000,000,000 to $5,250,000,000 in order to get this done, we may today take that $2,250,000,000, cancel the obligation due in 1945, have no interest at all to pay upon it, and if the soldier be willing to take that kind of money for an obligation of the Federal Government, I do not see why the National Economy League that the Senator mentions would not now change its position.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I should think so, and I should think Members of the Senate who voted previously against this legislation would change their position, too.

Mr. HASTINGS. May I be permitted to add that I do not see how it is possible for anybody who supports the Thomas amendment to object to paying the soldier bonus in the same kind of money that he is going to make legal tender for the rest of the Nation.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I thank the Senator for his observation.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President—

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator has not finished, then?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. If the Senator from New York expects to speak on this amendment, I desire to confer for a minute with some other Members of the Senate in connection with suggestions that have been made for additions to the amendment.

I desire to conclude, Mr. President. I think everybody understands the question, and I do not care longer to detain the Senate. I believe this is an honest obligation that should have been paid long ago; and regardless of what the reason might have been for voting against the so-called "bonus" last year—and I know the reasons that were advanced—I agree thoroughly with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] that those reasons do not obtain now. As long as we are going to have this inflation program, and this money is provided for, I see no reason in the world for denying payment to these veterans.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Indiana has expired. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. COPELAND obtained the floor.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me for just a moment? I promise to interrupt him for a second.

I desire to ask the Senator from Indiana if he will not amend his amendment, on page 1, lines 5 and 6, by striking out the words "Administrator of Veterans' Affairs" and in lieu thereof inserting the words "President of the United States, in his discretion", and in line 6 by striking out the words "and directed", leaving the amendment to read:

The President of the United States, in his discretion, is authorized to pay to any veteran—

And so forth?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I confess that I do not like to add that language. At the same time, I do not desire to seem obstinate and to stand in the way of possible adoption of the amendment. I am anxious for results, and I suppose everybody here is. I know that all those who are interested in the veterans' welfare are anxious for results. Therefore, I am inclined to accept the amendment, because I fear I could not get it adopted without adding that language. I may not be able to anyhow, but perhaps it gives us a better opportunity of success; and, with that understanding, I accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana accepts the proposed modification of his amendment.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President—

Mr. COPELAND. I am sorry that I cannot yield.

Mr. BLACK. I do not desire to have the Senator yield. I desire to ask a question about the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana. Can that be done without unanimous consent?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Senator from Indiana has the right to accept a modification of his own amendment.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, in April 1924 I offered an amendment to the measure then pending providing for the payment of the bonus in cash. That was voted upon on the 23d of April. It received 37 votes in the Senate as against 48, and, of course, was defeated.

Some of us last year were forced, against our convictions, to vote against payment of the bonus at that time. When we had up the economy bill, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and his colleague [Mr. COOLIDGE] and my colleague [Mr. WAGNER] and I joined in a statement pointing out why we could not vote for the cash bonus last year. I desire to quote just 2 or 3 sentences from that statement, which is found in the RECORD of June 17, 1932.

We said:

If the country were prosperous and free from the danger of an economic breakdown, we could defend this vast expenditure in view of the distressed condition of many veterans. But, unfortunately, the veterans are not the only unemployed sufferers; millions of other Americans are in the same sad plight. But even this situation would ordinarily justify preference to the veterans.

At another point we said:

The Federal Treasury is the last hope of a distressed people. Upon this we must depend if all else fails. It may prove our only hope to save the people from starvation. If the Nation's credit is further contracted, as is certain to be the effect of this proposal, the depression may continue indefinitely, with even the danger of our institutions, financial and political, being irreparably impaired.

That was our position in June of 1932.

We have before us today, however, a very different proposal. If it were proposed now to take out of the depleted Treasury a million dollars or a billion dollars, let alone 2¼ billions, it would be unthinkable. But we have here a proposal to provide, through unusual financing, large sums of money which may run into six or seven billions of dollars. Under these circumstances we may well pause, even at this late hour, to give thought to the obligation which we owe to the veterans of this country.

I desire to say to Senators that on the 1st day of next August, when the veterans and the widows of veterans fail to receive the checks which they have been receiving, there will be distress and discomfort, and we know not how much disturbance because of the failure of the Government to pay. If we are actually going to provide, through unusual means, for the issuance of money, why should we not at the same time include enough to take care of the veterans?

Proposals have been made to the Congress at this session and given approval which would have been impossible of enactment 1 short year ago. So great is the confidence of the country in the President and in his well-understood determination to restore prosperity, that most Members of the Congress are loyally supporting him. In order to give this support, it has been necessary in some instances for many of us to set aside our fundamental views. Certainly that has been my feeling regarding many of the proposals advanced.

As a matter of fact, we are living in a period without precedent. We are groping, seeking to find a way out of our troubles. The Thomas amendment is a proposal of a radical change in our monetary system and is somewhat shocking to conservatives. We feel, however, that the people have given President Roosevelt a mandate. The Thomas amendment is merely one part of his plan to carry out a program of reconstruction. Without committing ourselves to the Thomas amendment, we hold open minds, and desire, if possible, to be guided by the advice and recommendations of the President.

It has been well brought out today that it is the law of the land that 12 years from now the bonus must be paid. I think we may digress just a moment to enlarge upon that. Every time this matter comes up for discussion there is aroused a sentiment throughout the country which would seem to indicate that paying the soldiers is a brand-new idea. That policy has been determined, and in 1945, whether we wish to do it or not, we must pay that money. We have obligated ourselves to do it. So 12 years from now we are going to pay the adjusted-service certificates anyhow. Therefore we do not need to discuss the merits of the original legislation. It was enacted into law, and that pledge has become the moral and the legal obligation of the Government.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. LONG. The Senator has very appropriately stated, and in connection with his remarks just a moment ago I desire to emphasize, that we would not be enlarging our currency by paying the bonus at all. It is coming out of the three billion provided in the first section of the amendment. We are setting aside, as I previously stated, $120,000,000 a year to retire the bonus debt, which is due in 1945, whereas we will be able by paying $89,000,000 a year, some $23,000,000 less, to pay the bonus now and save the Government the actual payment of that amount of money.

Mr. COPELAND. I agree with the Senator, and also it would provide the money to pay the proposed 4 percent on the retirement of the $3,000,000,000 which we borrow.

It has been my view, and that position has been proven by my vote, that we could not consent to take out of a depleted Treasury the cash to pay these certificates. But the Thomas amendment provides for the issuance of money, to be used, among other things, for a specific purpose, namely, the purchase and the placing in the Federal portfolio of the Treasury bills and other obligations of the United States; and among these obligations resting upon us is a solemn, moral, and legal obligation to pay the adjusted-service certificates.

There is no greater obligation than the obligation to pay the certificates when they are due. Our Government has made a pledge to the veterans. Last year we said that we would be glad to pay the certificates at the earliest possible moment, and at that time, as a debtor to his creditor, we said to this creditor: "We do not have the money to pay you now, but when we can we will do so promptly. By the Thomas amendment we are providing the means to get money, and we are taking care of other obligations. You waited; you were good and patriotic sportsmen; you agreed to delay to a deferred date, and now we are taking care of everybody but you."

We are taking care of all these other obligations, taking care of the banks and the railroads, taking care of every obligation of the Government, and yet we are saying to the veterans, "We cannot take care of you."

If we can, through the extraordinary powers proposed by the amendment, raise money to pay these other obligations, certainly we should pay the veterans. It would be unfair and unjust to that group to do otherwise. If the pending proposal is to be enacted into law, I believe that no higher obligation rests upon us than to meet the pledged obligation to the veterans.

We assume that the only reason why the adjusted-service certificates were not included among the "other obligations" of the United States was because of the need of haste in the preparation of the bill. In the heart of our President is exactly the same feeling we have of sympathy and regard for the veterans, and the same desire to see that justice is given them. We accord the President the same high motives and impulses that we claim for ourselves.

Assuming that we are actually to provide for the purchase of Treasury bills and other obligations of the Government, it is our solemn conviction that the service certificates should be included. To this end, we are hoping it may meet the approval of the Congress and of the President.

If accepted, it would have the advantage of placing immediately into circulation  $2\frac{1}{4}$  billion dollars.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time on the amendment has expired.

Mr. COPELAND. I will take my time on the bill, which I have not had, even to the fraction of a second.

Mr. President, as far as I am concerned, I am going ahead and finish what I have to say. I am going to have my conscience clear, anyhow. Other Senators must take care of their own consciences.

This plan would place in circulation at once two and a quarter billion dollars. I heard this afternoon a very interesting and logical address by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Fess]. He brought together very much valuable material. He pointed out how necessary it is not to pile up our banks with money, but to put the money into circulation.

In a little conversation I had with Mr. Mellon a couple of years ago, I said, "Mr. Secretary, with the reserve gold we have, we could now issue $2,000,000,000 more currency, could we not?"

"Yes", he said, "we could; but what good would it do unless we could circulate it?"

I said, "There is no trouble about that. Pay the soldiers' bonus."

He laughed and said, "That certainly would put it into circulation."

Mr. President, the money we are about to issue will be of no value in the country in the improvement of conditions unless it circulates. We have found how silly, how foolish, how absurd and useless are many of the things we have done in past years. We put into the home loan bank bill last year, in July 1932, a provision permitting the national banks to issue circulating notes by placing the securities of the Government in the Treasury. Under the terms of that measure $995,000,000 could have been put into circulation in the way of currency. It had potentialities to that extent. As a matter of fact, the Treasury told me today that on April 1, $220,000,000 had been called for under the terms of that provision. That is less than a quarter of what could have been had if there was use for the money.

There are ample provisions for the issuance of money. We have in the banks $5,000,000,000 of eligible paper which has not yet been presented to the Federal Reserve. Why do we talk about more money? It is not money we need; it is the circulation of money.

Mr. President, I shall not attempt to discuss that particular matter; but I simply want to inquire, when we are proposing by this easy method to issue $3,000,000,000 or $6,000,000,000 of money, why not put $2,000,000,000 where it would go into circulation and do some good, and at the same time quiet the distress of these veterans? If we are to have a public-works program, which personally I approve, that, together with the payment of the certificates, would help materially to overcome unemployment and to aid the credit facilities of the country. It would quiet the distress of millions of veterans, who are wondering why we help banks, railroads, and industry without thinking of them.

We wish to emphasize our loyalty to the President and our desire to assist his program in its completed form. Frankness compels us to say, however, that unless these soldiers are provided for now, when we are seeking to absorb other obligations of the United States, it would be an act of unfairness and injustice.

Our plea is that Congress demonstrate its sincerity of purpose. If we are to proceed as proposed, there would be a lack of sincerity on the part of Congress in adopting the Thomas amendment without giving the veterans relief already promised, when the amendment provides the means for doing so.

Mr. President, those are the things I wanted to say. If we were seeking to take money out of a depleted Treasury, my feeling today would be exactly as it was last year, but when we are providing a means for paying all the other obligations of the Government, I am clear in my mind that there is a solemn obligation upon us to meet the claims of the veterans and to pay the adjusted-service certificates.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I desired to address the Senate briefly on the pending Thomas amendment. However, I understand we are about to take a recess, so I will proceed in the morning, if I may be recognized at that time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York will have the floor when the Senate convenes tomorrow.

HOURS OF EMPLOYMENT AND WAGES

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article from the Washington Evening Star of this date, by Mr. Walter Trumbull, relative to the long hours of work and the extremely low wages paid labor in the United States.

There being no objection, the article was ordered printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Evening Star, Washington, D.C., Thursday, Apr. 27, 1933]
"SWEATED" LABOR DEMANDS REFORM—LONG HOURS AND EXTREMELY LOW WAGES HAVE BECOME WIDE-SPREAD IN UNITED STATES

By Walter Trumbull

NEW YORK, April 27.—"Sweated" labor in the United States has increased to such an alarming degree that social workers are up in arms, and there is country-wide demand for State and Federal legislation involving shorter hours and a minimum wage.

A report from Mississippi indicates that 50 cents a day in the textile business is not an uncommon wage. Figures in the North put wages of mill hands as low as $5 to $7 a week. Not only is pay poor but hours are long. A cotton bleachery in the South shows a 91-hour week. A garment factory in New England discloses a 94-hour week.

Instances like these have instituted such legislation as the Black bill in Congress for shorter working hours and many labor-control bills in State legislatures. President Roosevelt considers such legislation vital.

Estimates of the unemployed in the United States have run as high as 12,000,000 to 14,000,000. But owing to the scale of wages in many industries the plight of thousands who have jobs is about as bad. They are worn, weary, and undernourished, victims of sweated labor.

NOT LIMITED TO GARMENTS

The term "sweated" labor is suggested by welfare workers rather than "sweatshop" labor. The latter conveys the idea of dirty, dark, unventilated lofts or cellars. It also suggests the garment trade. Today, in New York, with an excellent labor law, conditions which prevailed in the old sweatshop are infrequent. Nor is sweated labor confined to the garment trade or even to cities. In many places where room, light, and air are plentiful, workers are expected to live on the air. Starvation wages in comfortable surroundings frequently exist.

There still are sweatshops. There are, for example, operators who cut goods in New York and then, to avoid the law, truck them into a neighboring State where they have some little shop that can be abandoned without loss in case of investigation. There they hire girls to sew the goods. Such girls frequently receive little or nothing. This is accomplished by taking them on trial as "learners." While learning they receive no pay. Later they are discharged and new learners taken on.

Aside from the garment trade, sweated labor is common in the silk, wool, toy, candy, hosiery, shoe, lamp shade, and laundry trades. Canneries are full of it. Clerical workers are affected, and instances have been discovered in the tobacco and motor industries.

APPALLING SITUATION

In New York, called "the richest city in the world", facts and figures gathered by the National Consumers' League present an appalling situation. They show workers who spend the night in subways because they cannot afford room rent. They show women paid 12½ cents for making a dress, while the finisher of that dress gets 3 cents.

Reports gathered by the league from employment agencies and hospital social-service departments record such cases as that of a woman who got 21 cents for putting linings in 72 pairs of slippers, so that to earn $1.05 a day she had to handle 720 slippers in 9 hours.

A woman who was the support of two children and a jobless husband worked as a finisher and received 4 cents a dress. She averaged between $5.50 and $6.50 for a 60-hour week. Women finishing expensive pajamas have been getting 40 cents a dozen, which is more than a day's work.

An expert lamp-shade maker receives 1¼ cents to bind the top and bottom of each lamp shade. This takes 10 minutes, so her wage is 10½ cents an hour. Adult women workers in a hand-sewed rug manufactory average 50 cents a day.

Experienced seamstresses, making neckwear, receive 13½ cents an hour. A girl who had 3 years' experience in a dress factory is now working in an apron factory and gets 2½ cents an apron. Working at top speed, she makes 20 cents a day.

ADOPT PIECEWORK BASIS

Many factories which formerly paid living wages have gone on the piecework basis. One such factory pays 75 cents for a gross of garter belts. The fastest workers average $3 a week. Three workers in a linen house showed their pay slips. They called for 59, 75, and 80 cents for a day's work.

Reports from employment agencies show a lawyer offered $8 a week for an expert typist with knowledge of German. Another paid his secretary, a college graduate and court stenographer, $6 a week. A dentist who wished an assistant to answer the telephone, receive patients, assist at the chair, sterilize instruments, type bills, and dust 6 days a week was willing to pay $10.

The situation of some junior workers, many of them the sole support of a family, is shown in a complaint received by the New York State Labor Department in regard to a food factory. It read:

"The company employs about 500 people. They are mostly girls of 13, illiterate, second-generation Americans. The floor and tables are sloppy. There are no chairs available and there is no health examination—a very ordinary precaution required in food factories. The wages of a most expert worker average 50 cents a day."

In Connecticut wages have been withheld and workers cheated of part of the little they earned by assessments for mythical benefits. Contract shops have employed minors and worked them long hours for little or no pay.

WAGES EXTREMELY LOW

Similar conditions exist in Massachusetts. While a minimum wage law exists in Massachusetts it is not mandatory, and sweatshop competition has forced reputable concerns to break down their wage standard. In western Massachusetts records show wages of 1 cent an hour and in other parts of the State the wage scale has been reported as 5 cents an hour.

In Pennsylvania reports show that many children under 16 are employed at a medial wage of $3.10 a week. In the textile and clothing industries many of them have been making less than $2 a week. Twenty percent of the women employed in these industries are reported to have been earning less than $5 a week.

For a week's work in New Jersey, sometimes 54 hours or longer, women's wages in individual cases are reported as $3.26, $5.01, $3.92, $3.29, $5.36, and $1.96. One check for 3 weeks' work amounted to 70 cents. Another for a full week's work, with overtime, totaled $1.

A report from Illinois has shown that a girl in a large Chicago candy store and tea room received $5 for 2 weeks' work. A millinery worker got a little over $5 for 2 weeks' work. Women working on cotton dresses receive $1 a day. Ironers in laundries get $1.50 for ironing 60 shirts a day.

Reports of the same nature have been made from Maine to California. Cotton mills of the South have been running day and night shifts and paying anything they could hire workers for in an employers' market.

Wherever labor laws exist the violations and evasions of them have increased. And in many cases the penalties have not been sufficiently heavy to act as a deterrent.

RECESS

Mr. SMITH. I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 6 o'clock p.m.) took a recess until tomorrow, Friday, April 28, 1933, at 11 o'clock a.m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, APRIL 27, 1933

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Our blessed Heavenly Father, Thou art still steadfast, still unchangeable, still watching with eternal eyes of care. Thy holy word is with us: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." We pray that this commandment may permeate our thoughts, our plans, and our honor. Lead us to help him and wound him not, to lift him up and feel pain at his downfall, and always rejoice at his uprising. In our ways may we carry this spirit of working and serving for others. As we move among men, in all our relationships, may we be in affectionate service. O God, enlarge our visions and give us to understand this long-unheeded sign of the golden age. To the glory of Thy holy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H.R. 4225. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Allegheny River at or near Parkers Landing, in the county of Armstrong, Commonwealth of Pennsylvania; and

H.R. 4332. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Allegheny River at a point near the Forest-Venango county line, in Tionesta township, and in the county of Forest, and in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on April 26, 1933, present to the President, for his approval, a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H.J.Res. 135. Resolution to amend section 2 of the act approved February 4, 1933, to provide for loans to farmers for crop production and harvesting during the year 1933, and for other purposes.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a short editorial on the gold standard.

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, whose editorial is it?

Mr. DIRKSEN. It is from a newspaper and it is only a factual article.

Mr. RICH. I must object to anything unless it is the gentleman's own remarks.

Mr. DIRKSEN. It is not my own remarks.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

LOANS TO HOME OWNERS

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 5240) to provide emergency relief with respect to home-mortgage indebtedness, to refinance home mortgages to extend relief to the owners of homes occupied by them and who are unable to amortize their debt elsewhere, to amend the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, to increase the market for obligations of the United States, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 5240) providing for loans to home owners, with Mr. DRIVER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. GOSS. Reserving the right to object, I shall not object if the bill is printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the bill will be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL]?

There was no objection.

The bill referred to is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933."

(a) The term "Board" means the Federal Home Loan Bank Board created under the Federal Home Loan Bank Act.

(b) The term "Corporation" means the Home Owners' Loan Corporation created under section 4 of this act.

(c) The term "home mortgage" means a first mortgage on real estate in fee simple or on a leasehold under a renewable lease for not less than 99 years, upon which there is located a dwelling for not more than three families, used by the owner as a home or held by him as his homestead, and having a value not exceeding $15,000; and the term "first mortgage" includes such classes of first liens as are commonly given to secure advances on real estate under the laws of the State in which the real estate is located, together with the credit instruments, if any, secured thereby.

(d) The term "association" means a Federal savings and loan association chartered by the Board as provided in section 5 of this act.

REPEAL OF DIRECT-LOAN PROVISION OF FEDERAL HOME LOAN BANK ACT

SEC. 3. Subsection (d) of section 4 of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act (providing for direct loans to home owners) is hereby repealed.

CREATION OF EMERGENCY LOAN CORPORATION

SEC. 4. (a) The Board is hereby authorized and directed to create a corporation to be known as the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, which shall be an instrumentality of the United States and which shall be under the direction of the Board and operated by it under such bylaws, rules, and regulations as it may prescribe for the accomplishment of the purposes and intent of this section.

(b) The Board shall determine the minimum amount of capital stock of the Corporation and is authorized to increase such capital stock from time to time in such amounts as may be necessary, but not to exceed in the aggregate $200,000,000. Such stock shall be subscribed for by the Secretary of the Treasury on behalf of the United States, and payments for such subscriptions shall be subject to call in whole or in part by the Board and shall be made at such time or times as the Secretary of the Treasury deems advisable. The Corporation shall issue to the Secretary of the Treasury receipts for payments by him or on account of such stock, and such receipts shall be evidence of the stock ownership of the United States. In order to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to make such payments when called, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and directed to allocate and make available to the Secretary of the Treasury the sum of $200,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, and for such purpose the amount of the notes, bonds, debentures, or other such obligations which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered under section 9 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended, to have outstanding at any one time, is hereby increased by such amounts as may be necessary.

(c) The Corporation is authorized to issue bonds in an aggregate amount not to exceed $2,000,000,000, which may be sold by the Corporation to obtain funds for carrying out the purposes of this section, or exchanged as hereinafter provided. Such bonds shall be issued in such denominations as the Board shall prescribe, shall mature within a period of not more than 18 years from the date of their issue, shall bear interest at a rate not to exceed 4 percent per annum, and shall be fully and unconditionally guaranteed as to interest only by the United States, and such guaranty shall be expressed on the face thereof. In the event that the Corporation shall be unable to pay upon demand, when due, the interest on any such bonds, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to the Corporation the amount of such interest, which is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the Corporation shall pay the amount of such interest to the holders of the bonds. Upon the payment of such interest by the Secretary of the Treasury the amount so paid shall become an obligation to the United States of the Corporation and shall bear interest at the same rate as that borne by the bonds upon which the interest has been so paid. The bonds issued by the Corporation under this subsection shall be instrumentalities of the United States and shall so state on the face thereof, and shall be exempt, both as to principal and interest, from all taxation (except surtaxes, estate, inheritance, and gift taxes) now or hereafter imposed by the United States or any District, Territory, dependency, or possession thereof, or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority. The Corporation, including its franchise, its capital, reserves and surplus, and its loans and income, shall likewise be exempt from such taxation; except that any real property of the Corporation shall be subject to taxation to the same extent, according to its value, as other real property is taxed.

(d) The Corporation is authorized, for a period of 3 years after the date of enactment of this act, (1) to acquire in exchange for bonds issued by it, home mortgages and other obligations and liens secured by real estate (including the interest of a vendor under a purchase-money mortgage or contract) recorded or filed in the proper office prior to the date of the enactment of this act, and (2) in connection with any such exchange, to make advances in cash to pay the taxes and assessments on the real estate, to provide for necessary maintenance and make necessary repairs, to meet the incidental expenses of the transaction, and to pay such amounts, not exceeding $50, to the holder of the mortgage, obligation, or lien acquired as may be the difference between the face value of the bonds exchanged plus accrued interest thereon and the purchase price of the mortgage, obligation, or lien. The face value of the bonds so exchanged plus accrued interest thereon and the cash so advanced shall not exceed in any case $10,000, or 80 percent of the value of the real estate as determined by an appraisal made by the Corporation, whichever is the smaller. In any case in which the amount of the face value of the bonds exchanged plus accrued interest thereon and the cash advanced is less than the amount the home owner owes with respect to the home mortgage or other obligation or lien so acquired by the Corporation, the Corporation shall credit the difference between such amounts to the home owner and shall reduce the amount owed by the home owner to the Corporation to that extent. Each home mortgage or other obligation or lien so acquired shall be carried as a first lien or refinanced as a home mortgage by the Corporation on the basis of the price paid therefor by the Corporation, and shall be amortized by means of monthly payments sufficient to retire the interest and principal within a period of not to exceed 15 years; but the amortization payments of any home owner may be made quarterly, semiannually, or annually, if in the judgment of the Corporation the situation of the home owner requires it. Interest on the unpaid balance of the obligation of the home owner to the Corporation shall be at the rate of 5 percent per annum. The Corporation may at any time grant an extension of time to any home owner for the payment of any installment of principal or interest owed by him to the Corporation if, in the judgment of the Corporation, the circumstances of the home owner and the condition of the security justify such extension. As used in this subsection, the term "real estate" includes only real estate held in fee simple or on a leasehold under a renewable lease for not less than 99 years, upon which there is located a dwelling for not more than 3 families, used by the owner as a home or held by him as a homestead, and having a value not exceeding $15,000.

(c) The Corporation is further authorized, for a period of 3 years from the date of the enactment of this act, to make loans in cash subject to the same limitations and for the same purposes for which cash advances may be made under subsection (d) of this section, in cases where the property is not otherwise encumbered; but no such loan shall exceed 80 percent of the value of the property securing the same as determined upon an appraisal made by the Corporation. Each such loan shall be secured by a duly recorded home mortgage, and shall bear interest at the same rate and shall be subject to the same provisions with respect to amortization and extensions as are applicable in the case of obligations refinanced under subsection (d) of this section.

(f) The Corporation shall have power to select, employ, and fix the compensation of such officers, employees, attorneys, or agents as shall be necessary for the performance of its duties under this act, without regard to the provisions of other laws applicable to the employment or compensation of officers, employees, attorneys, or agents of the United States. No such officer, employee, attorney, or agent shall be paid compensation at a rate in excess of the rate provided by law in the case of the members of the Board. The Corporation shall be entitled to the free use of the United States mails for its official business in the same manner as the executive departments of the Government, and shall determine its necessary expenditures under this act and the manner in which they shall be incurred, allowed, and paid, without regard to the provisions of any other law governing the expenditure of public funds. The Corporation shall pay such proportion of the salary and expenses of the members of the Board and of its officers and employees as the Board may determine to be equitable, and may use the facilities of Federal home-loan banks, upon making reasonable compensation therefor as determined by the Board.

(g) The Corporation is further authorized, for a period of 3 years from the date of the enactment of this act, to exchange bonds and to advance cash, subject to the limitations provided in subsection (d) of this section, to redeem or recover homes lost by the owners by foreclosure or forced sale by a trustee under a deed of trust within 2 years prior to such exchange or advance.

(h) Any person indebted to the Corporation may make payment to it in part or in full by delivery to it of its bonds which shall be accepted for such purpose at face value.

(i) The Board is authorized to make such bylaws, rules, and regulations, not inconsistent with the provisions of this section, as may be necessary for the proper conduct of the affairs of the Corporation. The Corporation is further authorized and directed to retire and cancel the bonds and stock of the Corporation as rapidly as the resources of the Corporation will permit. Upon the retirement of such stock, the reasonable value thereof as determined by the Board shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States and the receipts issued therefor shall be canceled. The Board shall proceed to liquidate the Corporation when its purposes have been accomplished, and shall pay any surplus or accumulated funds into the Treasury of the United States. The Corporation may declare and pay such dividends to the United States as may be earned and as in the judgment of the Board it is proper for the Corporation to pay.

FEDERAL SAVINGS AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS

Sec. 5. (a) In order to provide local mutual thrift institutions in which people may invest their funds and in order to provide for the financing of homes, the Board is authorized, under such rules and regulations as it may prescribe, to provide for the organization, incorporation, examination, operation, and regulation of associations to be known as "Federal savings and loan associations", and to issue charters therefor, giving primary consideration to the best practices of local mutual thrift and home-financing institutions in the United States; but no such association shall be incorporated by the Board unless in its judgment the community to be served is insufficiently served by local thrift and home-financing institutions.

(b) Such associations shall raise their capital only in the form of payments on such shares as are authorized in their charter, which shares may be retired as is therein provided. No deposits shall be accepted and no certificates of indebtedness shall be issued except for such borrowed money as may be authorized by regulations of the Board.

(c) Such associations shall make loans only upon real property located within 50 miles of their home office, and such loans shall be first liens upon homes, or combination homes and business property, having a value not exceeding $20,000, except that not exceeding 15 percent of the assets of such an association may be invested in first liens on other improved real estate. Such associations may also lend upon the security of their own shares and may invest in stock of a Federal home-loan bank or in obligations of the United States or in Federal home-loan bank bonds.

(d) The Board shall have full power to provide in the rules and regulations herein authorized for the reorganization, consolidation, merger, or liquidation of such associations, including the power to appoint a conservator or a receiver to take charge of the affairs of such association, and to require an equitable readjustment of the capital structure of the same; and to release such association from such control and permit their further operation.

(e) No charter shall be granted except to persons of good character and responsibility, nor unless in the judgment of the Board a necessity exists for such an institution in the community to be served, nor unless there is a reasonable probability of its usefulness and success, nor unless the same can be established without undue injury to properly conducted existing local thrift and home-financing institutions.

(f) Each such association, upon its incorporation, shall become automatically a member of the Federal home-loan bank of the district in which it is located, or, if convenience shall require and the Board approve, shall become a member of a Federal home-loan bank of an adjoining district. Such associations shall qualify for such membership in the manner provided in the Federal Home Loan Bank Act with respect to other members.

(g) The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized on behalf of the United States to subscribe for preferred shares in such associations which shall be preferred as to the assets of the association and which shall be entitled to a dividend, if earned, after payment of expenses and provision for reasonable reserves, to the same extent as other shareholders. It shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to subscribe for such preferred shares upon the request of the Board; but the subscription by him to the shares of any one association shall not exceed $100,000, and no such subscription shall be called for unless in the judgment of the Board the funds are necessary for the encouragement of local home financing in the community to be served and for the reasonable financing of homes in such community. Payment on such shares may be called from time to time by the association, subject to the approval of the Board and the Secretary of the Treasury; but the amount paid in by the Secretary of the Treasury shall at no time exceed the amount paid in by all other shareholders, and the aggregate amount of shares held by the Secretary of the Treasury shall not exceed at any time the aggregate amount of shares held by all other shareholders. To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to make such subscriptions when called there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,000,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended. Each such association shall issue receipts for such payments by the Secretary of the Treasury in such form as may be approved by the Board, and such receipts shall be evidence of the interest of the United States in such preferred shares to the extent of the amount so paid. Each such association shall make provision for the retirement of its preferred shares held by the Secretary of the Treasury, and beginning at the expiration of 5 years from the time of the investment in such shares, the association shall set aside one third of the receipts from its investing and borrowing shareholders to be used for the purpose of such retirement. In case of the liquidation of any such association the shares held by the Secretary of the Treasury shall be retired at par before any payments are made to other shareholders.

(h) Such associations, including their franchises, capital, reserves, and surplus, and their loans and income, shall be exempt from all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States, and all shares of such associations shall be exempt both as to their value and the income therefrom from all taxation (except surtaxes, estate, inheritance, and gift taxes) now or hereafter imposed by the United States; and no State, Territorial, county, municipal, or local taxing authority shall impose any tax on such associations or their franchise, capital, reserves, surplus, loans, or income greater than that imposed by such authority on other similar local mutual or cooperative thrift and home-financing institutions.

(i) Any member of a Federal home-loan bank may convert itself into a Federal savings and loan association under this act upon a vote of its stockholders as provided by the law under which it operates; but such conversion shall be subject to such rules and regulations as the Board may prescribe, and thereafter the converted association shall be entitled to all the benefits of this section and shall be subject to examination and regulation to the same extent as other associations incorporated pursuant to this act.

ENCOURAGEMENT OF SAVING AND HOME FINANCING

Sec. 6. To enable the Board to encourage local thrift and local home financing and to promote, organize, and develop the associations herein provided for or similar associations organized under local laws, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $250,000, to be immediately available and remain available until expended, subject to the call of the Board, which sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, the Board is authorized to use in its discretion for the accomplishment of the purposes of this section without regard to the provisions of any other law governing the expenditure of public funds.

PENALTIES

SEC. 7. (a) Whoever makes any statement, knowing it to be false, or whoever willfully overvalues any security, for the purpose of influencing in any way the action of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation or the Board or an association upon any application, advance, discount, purchase, or repurchase agreement, or loan, under this act, or any extension thereof by renewal, deferment, or action or otherwise, or the acceptance, release, or substitution of security therefor, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000, or by imprisonment for not more than 2 years, or both.

(b) Whoever (1) falsely makes, forges, or counterfeits any note, debenture, bond, or other obligation or coupon, in imitation of or purporting to be a note, debenture, bond, or other obligation, or coupon, issued by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation or an association; or (2) passes, utters, or publishes, or attempts to pass, utter, or publish, any false, forged, or counterfeited note, debenture, bond, or other obligation, or coupon, purporting to have been issued by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation or an association, knowing the same to be false, forged, or counterfeited; or (3) falsely alters any note, debenture, bond, or other obligation, or coupon, issued or purporting to have been issued by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation or an association; or (4) passes, utters, or publishes, or attempts to pass, utter, or publish, as true any falsely altered or spurious note, debenture, bond, or other obligation, or coupon, issued or purporting to have been issued by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation or an association, knowing the same to be falsely altered or spurious, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000, or by imprisonment for not more than 5 years, or both.

(c) Whoever, being connected in any capacity with the Board or the Home Owners' Loan Corporation or an association (1) embezzles, abstracts, purloins, or willfully misapplies any moneys, funds, securities, or other things of value, whether belonging to it or pledged or otherwise entrusted to it; or (2) with intent to defraud the Board or the Home Owners' Loan Corporation or an association, or any other body politic or corporate, or any individual, or to deceive any officer, auditor, or examiners of the Board or the Home Owners' Loan Corporation or an association, makes any false entry in any book, report, or statement of or to the Board or the Home Owners' Loan Corporation or an association, or, without being duly authorized, draws any order or issues, puts forth, or assigns any note, debenture, bond, or other obligation, or draft, mortgage, judgment, or decree thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or by imprisonment for not more than 5 years, or both.

(d) The provisions of sections 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, and 117 of the Criminal Code of the United States (U.S.C., title 18, secs. 202 to 207, inclusive), insofar as applicable, are extended to apply to contracts or agreements of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and an association under this act, which, for the purposes hereof, shall be held to include advances, loans, discounts, and purchase and repurchase agreements, extensions and renewals thereof, and acceptances, releases, and substitutions of security therefor.

SEPARABILITY PROVISION

SEC. 8. If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the order of the House, this bill will be considered under general debate, confined to the provisions of the bill, for a period of 1 hour and 30 minutes, to be equally divided between the gentleman from Alabama and the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for 45 minutes.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this bill is to supply to urban-home owners similar emergency relief to that which we are undertaking to provide for farmers who find themselves in danger of losing their homes.

I need not tax the patience of Members of the House in discussing the distressed conditions that obtain at this hour. They are recognized by all, and, of course, all of us, charged with legislative responsibility, share the desire to afford relief, as far as we may, with due regard to constitutional limitations and the financial resources of the Government.

This bill sustains very much the same relation to the home-loan bank system that the emergency farm relief legislation, to which I have referred, sustains to the farm credit system afforded under the Federal Farm Loan Act. The Home Loan Bank Board is authorized under the provisions of this bill to establish an emergency home owners' relief association, a corporation to be known as "Emergency Mortgage Corporation."

Mr. SNELL. Does the gentleman care to yield for a question at this point?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes; I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. SNELL. I am not clear in my own mind just how this affects the home loan bank bill that was passed last session. Will there be 2 organizations set up, or will there be 1 with added power?

Mr. STEAGALL. I was just approaching a discussion of the portion of the bill which I think will answer the inquiry of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. May I answer the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] first?

Let me explain first to the gentleman from New York: The Home Loan Bank Board is authorized to organize an emergency-mortgage corporation. The corporation is to be supplied with $200,000,000 of capital out of the Treasury of the United States to be subscribed by the Secretary of the Treasury. The corporation is authorized to incur obligations or issue bonds to the amount of $2,000,000,000, which are to bear an interest rate of 4 percent, and the interest on the bonds is to be guaranteed by the Government. The corporation is expected to exchange its bonds for mortgages against homes where there is a necessity for relief to avoid the loss of homes.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. In a moment.

The corporation is to be under the control and supervision of the Home Loan Bank Board, but the organization of the corporation is to be entirely separate and apart from the organization of the home-loan banks except that it is to be under the management of the Home Loan Board.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. STEAGALL. Certainly.

Mr. SNELL. Does the gentleman mean there will be an entirely new organization to cover the whole country, the same as the old Home Loan Bank Board has now throughout the various States of the Union?

Mr. STEAGALL. No; I did not intend to say that. There will be a separate organization, but it is in no sense a duplication of the organization of the home-loan bank system. The corporation to be organized under this act is entirely a temporary, emergency organization, and would be operated under the control and direction of the Home Loan Bank Board, through such employees, agencies, and representatives as the Board may find necessary.

I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. PARSONS. The farm mortgage bill provided for a loan of 50 percent of the appraised value and 20 percent of the insurable value of the buildings thereon. Why should discrimination be made against farm lands and only loans to the extent of 50 percent of the value of farm lands made, while 80 percent of the value of city property is allowed to be loaned? I realize the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency did not have the farm mortgage bill under his supervision, but does not the gentleman think we should have a higher rate of appraisal in the farm mortgage bill or a lower rate of appraisal in the home mortgage bill so as to give equitable treatment to each of the two classes?

Mr. STEAGALL. There are many difficulties in attempting to make the two methods parallel. In dealing with the farm-mortgage situation we had to take care of loans and mortgages that had been brought about under the operation of the Federal land banks and of the joint-stock land banks and other loaning agencies in the country. The problem was entirely different from the one that confronts us with reference to homes. Maybe the other act was not as liberal as it might have been. I am not attempting to pass judgment upon that question, but certain it is the provisions of this bill are very liberal as regards the valuation upon which loans are to be made.

The valuation authorized under this measure is 80 percent, but this runs for only 15 years and is purely an emergency measure. It has no relation whatever to, and no connection with, loans that have been made under the permanent home-financing system provided in the original home loan bank bill.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. STEAGALL. Certainly.

Mr. PARSONS. I have no objection to the 80-percent valuation. It all depends upon what standard they use. If you are going to use the 1928 or 1929 standard of value, of course, it is still going to be inflated to a certain extent; but if you are going back to pre-war value, I doubt if you can assist any mortgagor, whether he be in the city or in the country, unless the debt is very materially scaled down by the mortgagee.

Mr. STEAGALL. The values would be based upon contemporaneous appraisals. This, of course, explains in part the liberality of the act with respect to valuation. It is recognized that values are far below normal. Under this bill loans may be made to 80 percent.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman says we are going to have a separate corporation acting under the jurisdiction of the Home Loan Bank Board. Does not the gentleman think we could dispense with this new organization and have the Home Loan Bank Board or this organization perform the functions recommended for both?

Mr. STEAGALL. That, of course, depends on whether men can do twice the work they are doing now. It is assumed that in setting up the necessary personnel they will employ no more help than is required and that every employee will be given a full day's work and the same as to those who now work in the organization of the home-loan bank system. The whole activity of this corporation would be under the control of the Home Loan Bank Board, with such agencies as they might see fit to employ.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The language of this bill provides the bonds shall be guaranteed as to interest only. I think the gentleman stated that the bonds are to be guaranteed.

Mr. STEAGALL. I did not intend to make that statement. If I did, it was an inadvertence. Of course, it is only the interest on the bonds that is guaranteed. Back of these bonds is the initial capital of $200,000,000 subscribed by the Government, together with the securities supporting the mortgages and loans and safeguarded by other provisions of the bill and by competent management. No loan may be made in excess of $10,000. No loan may be made in excess of 80 percent of the value of the property; and no home having a valuation of over $15,000 is eligible for a loan. These are the three limitations within which loans must be made.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Where the mortgage is due and the mortgagee refuses to renew, can the owner of the building make application to the Government to renew that mortgage? Will the mortgagee have to accept the bonds or can he get cash?

Mr. STEAGALL. He cannot get cash. The plan provides for the exchange of bonds of the corporation for mortgages.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Then if a man refuses to accept the Government bonds at 4 percent, the owner of the property cannot get any relief?

Mr. STEAGALL. We cannot relieve every situation, but we hope that in a great many instances we shall be able to exchange these bonds the interest upon which is guaranteed by the Government and protected by capital set-up and other safeguards in a way to afford a large measure of relief.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It will not relieve the situation of the ordinary citizen who has a mortgage of $5,000 or $10,000 and the mortgagee wants to get his cash and will not accept these bonds.

Mr. STEAGALL. Of course, there are two points of view about that. I have on my desk right now a telegram from a man who is known in this House, whose judgment is highly respected in this House, who takes just the contrary view and insists that the interest rate required is too high, that everybody who has mortgages would gladly exchange them for bonds.

We have tried to set a rate on the bonds that would appeal to mortgagees and enable us to render the service contemplated, and meantime fix such an interest rate against mortgagors as will not be unduly burdensome but sufficient to relieve the Government of loss in these transactions. In other words, we tried to work it out so that the Government would lend its credit but not be driven into making drains upon the Treasury to take care of these obligations. The interest rate on the bonds is 4 percent. The interest rate on the mortgage is 5 percent.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. DOWELL. Is there any provision in the bill whereby the person purchasing his home under contract can secure a loan?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes. The bill covers all prior liens, contracts of sale, and, as far as we knew how to draw the bill, it is designed to meet just such situations as that pointed out by the gentleman from Iowa. Not only that, we authorized advances in cash for the purpose of taking care of taxes, assessments, and other charges, including insurance.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. BRIGGS. Does not the gentleman think it is particularly wise to leave within the law the privilege to this corporation to make direct loans where the benefits cannot be obtained through any other source which, in turn, may receive accommodations from this organization?

Mr. STEAGALL. I may say to my friend that one of the fundamental purposes of this bill is to afford direct relief to mortgagors who are in danger of losing their homes. That is just the object sought. No provision is made, except for direct relief to home owners.

This is the particular service which we are attempting to render through this legislation to exchange bonds to any mortgagee who has a mortgage on a home, where by proper negotiation such an exchange may be arranged.

In addition, the bill provides for the organization of local home-loan associations. There are hundreds of counties in the United States that are not supplied with borrowing agencies having access to the facilities of the home-loan bank system. To meet conditions of this kind and to take care of individual borrowers, the bill provides for the organization of local home-loan associations and supplies $100,000,000 of funds out of the Treasury of the United States for the purpose of supplying capital to aid in forming these organizations. Such organizations, when formed, become members of the home-loan bank system.

Mr. BRIGGS. Does not the gentleman feel that a great deal of value and utility of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has been defeated by individuals or firms not having an opportunity of borrowing when they could not get the accommodations from financial institutions that did have the money?

Mr. STEAGALL. Of course. In principle there can be no differentiation as to classes among those who should be permitted to come directly to the Treasury of the United States for aid, but, as a practical proposition, I am sure I need not argue with my friend that it is not desirable to have the Treasury of the United States undertake in an adequate and comprehensive manner to respond to all the credit requirements of the people of the United States. It would not take long, under that kind of scheme, to find the end of the ability of this Government to obtain the cash with which to make loans, and, of course, we are confronted with a practical situation in undertaking to legislate along the lines indicated by my friend.

Mr. BRIGGS. But the gentleman will admit that the House and Senate did adopt that very principle in the last Congress, although it was not approved by the then President of the United States, where applications for loans were based upon adequate security and they could not be obtained from other sources, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was to be permitted, in such an event, to give consideration to such cases.

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes; I voted for that bill just as my friend did, because of the principle involved; but, of course, we all recognize the difficulties involved in putting such a plan into practical operation.

Mr. BRIGGS. Is not one of the chief difficulties that the individual is encountering today his inability to obtain the credit that the Government is providing through these huge agencies? It is just as if they go right through a pipe line that is tapped along the way, and then there is a gate valve that keeps this credit from reaching the people, and is not that one of the things we are trying to correct in this proposed legislation?

Mr. STEAGALL. We are trying to correct that, and I think we are correcting it to some extent, possibly not in a way that will be entirely satisfactory when we come to the end of it, but that is the direction in which we are going, and that is our purpose.

I may say to my friend, although it is aside from this discussion and I am not going to enlarge upon it, I believe there is only one way to restore normal business conditions in the United States, and that is by proper legislation to bring about a resumption of the use of normal bank credits with which the business of our people has always been done. [Applause.]

There can be no substitute for it. All other methods serve a limited purpose and are wholesome as far as they go. We all sympathize with the purpose, and we are glad to join in the effort, but we have found how trivial is the aid that could be supplied out of the limited funds of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; and all these efforts to supply credit will prove inadequate until we find a way to restore banking to a normal basis in the United States. It is bank credit that supports business values in the United States. But we want to grant such limited and temporary aid as we may.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. MAY. Of course, the gentleman remembers the provisions of the bill which was passed at the last Congress that provided for some direct connection between the borrower and the banks.

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. MAY. Has the gentleman considered the idea that while you perhaps cannot provide for that in this bill, yet you might make it possible for the man who owes a mortgage on his home to go to a member of the Federal Reserve System in his community and let the credit be approved by that bank and transmitted to the other banks concerned?

Mr. STEAGALL. That has already been done. Under the emergency legislation passed since this session of Congress began, there is no limit upon the securities that a Federal Reserve bank may take for a member bank or a nonmember bank, and we did not stop with making all the assets of all classes of banks eligible for loans with the Federal Reserve banks, but we provided that such assets may be used as a basis for the issuance of Federal Reserve bank notes. The results to follow that legislation must depend upon the administration of the Federal Reserve System.

I must conclude, in order to save time for other Members who desire to discuss this bill in general debate. We are going to have the day for the consideration of amendments.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. For a question; yes.

Mr. DONDERO. If the mortgagee refuses to take the bonds provided for in this bill, is there any relief for the mortgagor who must receive aid or have his mortgage foreclosed?

Mr. STEAGALL. It requires an agreement at that point.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Referring to page 5, section (b), you have in line 18 the word "vendor", but you have nothing about the assignee of the vendor. Was the word "assignee" purposely left out?

Mr. STEAGALL. No; the assignee of the vendor is not left out, because we have by broad language made the bill applicable to all existing liens.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. In line 22 you have taxes and assessments that can be paid by cash. Would the committee object to an interlineation or an amendment including valid and subsistent liens of mechanics and material liens?

Mr. STEAGALL. It is the view of the committee that that is covered by the provisions of the bill.

Mr. HOEPEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. HOEPEL. There is provision in section 5 whereby the private individual may invest in these securities. Can the gentleman state what rate of interest private citizens would receive?

Mr. STEAGALL. There is no arbitrary provision in regard to that.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CELLER. Why does the bill provide for a guaranty of interest on bonds and does not guarantee the principal? Does the gentleman believe that the public will invest in these bonds without a guaranty of the principal?

Mr. STEAGALL. I thought I had covered that question. It was thoroughly discussed in the committee. It is felt that with the capital of $200,000,000 and the security supporting the mortgages the bonds will be found attractive. The gentleman must remember that recently the Treasury of the United States on short-term loans had to pay over 4 percent to get the money to carry out its program. It would be a serious thing to have the Treasury undertake to guarantee principal and interest on bonds covering the enormous home-mortgage indebtedness of the country, amounting to over $20,000,000,000. There is an end to what can be prudently done in having the Treasury assume the burdens involved in such a stupendous program. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] is recognized for 45 minutes.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I have had but few requests for time, so that I shall be able to use nearly all the time myself, and I shall be glad to answer any questions after I have made a statement. So permit me to make the statement without interruption, unless it be necessary to clarify something I say.

The chairman of the committee has adequately explained the general purposes of the bill, and it would be but repetition for me to attempt a further analysis of it. I wish to address myself chiefly to a phase of the situation that Members ought to understand.

Last year we passed the home loan bank bill. There is throughout the country wide dissatisfaction with the operation of that bill, and many Members of Congress are disposed to criticize.

I fear Members will equally be disposed to criticize the operation of this new law, for they will find the same discontent over its operation; and in anticipation of their need for information on the subject, in order that this bill may better stand the shafts of criticism that will be thrown at it throughout the land, I wish to make clear to you the nature of the bill we passed 9 months ago and why we are passing this bill.

Unfortunately, after last year's bill was enacted the public gained the impression from the press that any man might go to some agency of the Government and borrow on real estate whatever money he might need. I admit that I was in part to blame for this wrong impression, because when the bill of last year was drafted in its first section it gave to the institution the title "Federal Home Loan Discount Bill." It struck me that was a long and awkward name, that the people would talk of it as a home loan bill, and that we might well drop out the word "discount." That was done. It is possible that if the word "discount" had been left in, then the public would have better understood what we were doing, which at the start was simply to create a system for rediscouinting mortgages.

It was never the intention of those who conceived that bill, nor of those who worked over it in the House, nor indeed of most of those who worked over it in the committee in the Senate, that there should be any direct loans. We were not intending to set up an institution that would compete with existing lending agencies, and we are not here intending to set up any such institution. If gentlemen can make their constituents understand that we do not now intend to embark the Government in competition with savings banks, building and loan associations, and other lending agencies, they may escape some part of the grief that will come to their constituents, in the real sense of that word, and the grief that will come to themselves in the sense in which it is often used nowadays. So I am trying to get over the fact that we never have meant, and we do not now mean, to embark the Government in the lending of money to individuals save for emergency need, and then only where there is no other opportunity to get the money.

I will now show why my friend from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN], whom I am glad to see present, has been disturbed in this matter without perhaps appreciating what has gone on in his own neighborhood. If I mistake not, Missouri is in the Des Moines home-loan bank district. That bank, from the beginning of its operations October 15 of last year to February 1, had 6,682 requests for loans. It turned out that 937 of them were requested on farm property, which is not within the scope of the law.

Seven hundred and fifty of those persons asked for loans in excess of the limitation put in the law. There has been criticism of this limitation, but that bill cannot succeed to the extent hoped for and this bill cannot succeed unless bonds can be issued, and bonds cannot be sold unless there is the finest of security behind them. Gentlemen who desire much more extensive lending operations than these two laws will permit fail to recognize that neither institutions can possibly succeed unless there is security behind the loans. Seven hundred and fifty of these people could not furnish the security to the extent they wished to borrow.

The Government cannot and must not lend without adequate security.

One hundred and fifty-four wanted to borrow on second mortgages; 128 had made no attempt to get money through the ordinary channels. Eleven had no home on the property. Fifteen wanted loans on property valued at more than the limit of $20,000. One hundred and eleven wanted to borrow on business property, 65 on farm property, 12 on buildings housing more than 3 families. One hundred and ninety-three had no ability to make payments. Sixty-seven filed incomplete applications and 242 wanted to borrow on residences which they did not themselves occupy as their own homes. One hundred and thirteen could show no state of distress warranting action by the bank.

Investigation was made of those applications for loans the bank thought might be available, 1,185 in number, and in 490 of the 610 cases heard from it was found that the security offered was not enough to warrant the loan, while in 36 cases the present mortgagees agreed to continue the loan, or the application was withdrawn. Out of all that mass of applications only 84 were found that could comply with the requirements of the law.

When this bill goes through, precisely the same thing is going to take place, if you encourage the distressed and unfortunate people who have not enough security, in the idea that they are going to be able to save their homes. We cannot save the unfortunate man whose property has so depreciated that it is already mortgaged in excess of 80 percent of its value. He is the man whom nobody can save in this emergency by any method of this sort.

I hope many of them can be saved, however; and that quickly, by a revival of that confidence which is now so lacking. I view these measures we are passing one by one, not with first in mind their individual merit or demerit. I am paying slight attention to that. The question is, Can all these measures, taken together, so encourage the people of the United States that you and I and everybody else will begin to spend money once more. So in this particular case the great benefit will be found in what encouragement we can give all the people by legislation as far as we can prudently go, meant to help distressed home owners in cases that can be brought within the law.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. For clarity? Have I not made myself clear?

Mr. PARSONS. The gentleman stated that there were 84 applications that were investigated and found could be given loans. That was 84 out of how many?

Mr. LUCE. Out of 1,185.

Mr. PARSONS. Were those loans made direct to the individuals?

Mr. LUCE. These were loans where the examining institution stated willingness to make the loan at once or after receiving funds from the home-loan bank.

Mr. PARSONS. But not direct to any individual?

Mr. LUCE. I shall take the matter of direct loans up next, if I may. Gentlemen in another branch—and I am not criticizing—believed that in addition to what we of the House provided last year, we should furnish direct loans. That is, we should authorize the home-loan bank to lend money direct to applicants. That was never in the minds of those who conceived the bill, of those who framed the bill, or of the Members of the House who persuaded the House in the passage of the bill. In the Senate—and it was not the present Senate, so I think I am outside the rule—it was seen fit to put on an amendment authorizing direct loans. We of the House felt that the original purpose of the bill ought to be maintained, but the amendment to which I have referred, authorizing direct loans, came toward the end of many months of controversy, and the House, as well as the Senate, was anxious to go home, and, under duress, the House accepted that amendment because we knew if we did not accept it the bill could not become law. We foresaw the harm it would do. We knew that thousands upon thousands of our citizens would be encouraged by false hopes that could not be fulfilled. We knew that this would be advanced as criticism against the bill itself. We knew that it would do immeasurable harm, and it did.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. If I am not making myself clear; yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I simply want to ask, Did the Home Loan Board make any loans, directly?

Mr. LUCE. Practically no loans have been made directly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I wanted to know if there had been any. Does the gentleman know whether they have made any direct loans or not, under the existing law?

Mr. LUCE. As far as I know, none has been made; but there may have been a few.

I was going on to explain that this amendment was inadequate. It did not furnish the machinery for making direct loans. It ran up against doubt as to its conflict with other provisions of the bill, in the minds of certain attorneys connected with the Government or the institutions concerned; and for this group of reasons it was an unworkable amendment. It did nothing but deceive the people. So one of the things we are doing in this bill is to repeal that amendment. It never has worked; it never will work; it ought not to have been in the bill; but we are trying to supply machinery that in another way will accomplish, at least in part, what was in the minds of those who framed the direct-loan amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. LUCE. If for clarity; yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Can the gentleman inform us how an individual who cannot secure a loan through a cooperative association could get relief under the bill? In a great many of the smaller towns in districts like mine and others throughout the country there are people who are losing their homes and there are no building and loan associations in the vicinity, and they cannot secure a loan. I want to know what relief that class of people will have.

Mr. LUCE. In all courtesy, I may say to the gentleman that this and other features of the bill I had hoped to reach in the orderly process of my remarks, which is why I requested to be able to finish them without interruption, hoping I would reach such topics in due course. However, I will take this one up now.

There are in this country 3,072 counties. There are 1,566, almost exactly half, that have no building and loan associations, no mutual savings bank, and no insurance company, and therefore cannot benefit by the provisions of last year's law. It has now been conceived that it will be a social advantage, a blessing to the people of the land, if we try to encourage the creation of thrift institutions in that half of the counties of the United States where they do not now exist. For that purpose the latter part of this bill provides an appropriation by the expenditure of which the home-loan bank system may encourage and stimulate the creation of thrift associations and may foster them in the 1,500 or so counties that now do not have them.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. What minimum capital would those thrift associations be required to subscribe?

Mr. LUCE. There is no specification of that. The chairman of the Board, Mr. Stevenson, a former Member of this House, who had the respect of all its Members and who, on the Committee on Banking and Currency, demonstrated unusual capacity and very sound judgment, assures us that those associations will be formed in accordance with the best building-and-loan practice, and I feel sure we may rely upon him and his Board to carry out that promise.

Next, there was much dissatisfaction because the last law did not get into action quickly. There were thousands upon thousands of persons disappointed because they could not at once get relief. Mr. Chairman, it will be precisely the same with this bill. Constituents of Members of this House will be disturbed in great numbers because they cannot instantly profit by its operation. If memory serves me right, it was 11 months after the Federal Reserve System was created before it got into operation. These big machines can only be started slowly, but what have we done in the matter of the home-loan bank? The law was passed only at the end of last July, and at this very time 8 of the 12 home-loan banks are more than paying expenses. The banks, all told, are putting out $7,000,000 a week.

What were the obstacles in the way? Notice this, please, and then see if you longer complain. There were 36 States where the legislatures had to be convinced of the necessity of statutory changes. Thirty-six State legislatures had to be induced to pass laws. Only one has yet refused to do it. Only 1 of the 48 States had not acted previous to the passage of the home-loan bank bill or has not since acted. That is the State of Nebraska, and it is believed that before the session of its legislature adjourns Nebraska, too, will have acted.

Complaint has come to us in some measure from Missouri, and that is why I wanted the gentleman from Missouri on the floor. His State got into line only last week. Only last week did the Legislature of Missouri allow this system to function there to its fullest extent. Nevertheless much criticism has come because that law has not furnished the flood of money Missouri desired.

When the last figures were obtained the home-loan banks all told had disbursed $28,195,605 and had authorized further disbursements, now in process, of $35,430,766, making a total of $63,626,371 that we have put out or got under way in less by 2 months than the time it took for the Federal Reserve System even to make its first discount.

There are already in the System 1,070 building and loan associations; and there are pending 1,000 more applications where they have put up the money. So more than 2,000 building and loans associations are already engaged in the good work.

It is contemplated by the bill before us to put the machinery in the hands of the Home Loan Bank Board. They must for some of the purposes of the bill function under a legal fiction as a corporation, but it is to be the same organization, the same men, the Home Loan Bank Board; and I think I can assure you that with equal celerity this bill will go into operation. Nevertheless, for a time you will be disturbed, you will be agitated, by complaints from your neighbors that the bill is not working.

As fast as it can be done we are going to put the urban and the suburban home owner, the town, and the village home owner, on much the same plane which we propose to put the farmer.

In general, I should like to point out that the farm mortgage bill is broader, more expensive, and more dangerous than this bill. We had our own way, to some measure, in the shaping of this bill. We have carried out the general desire to the administration, but we saw fit in the framing of the bill to apply the same meticulous care by the use of legislative counsel that we did with the home loan bill; and we have made this a safer bill. We have made it possible to sell the bonds more readily. We have created an institution that in part is meant to be permanent, that we hope will accrue to the benefit of all the people of the land through many years to come.

And so, after this study, this careful scrutiny, this hard work, taking advantage of our experience in framing the home loan bill, we present to you unanimously this measure in the hope of its speedy enactment and as prompt meeting of the needs of distressed home owners as far as is practicable. [Applause.]

Now I will answer any questions.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I respect the gentleman's judgment in this matter, but may I ask at this point if the gentleman considered the matter of reducing the interest rate by one half percent less than that carried in the bill at the present time?

Mr. LUCE. This matter received much discussion, and I have no doubt when we reach it under the 5-minute rule all the considerations pro and con will be presented.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Does the gentleman think that the feature of the bill exempting these bonds from taxation is a good thing for the country?

Mr. LUCE. The gentleman broaches a question that has had long discussion both in the committee, in the House, and outside. If we were to start afresh, I should, I think, vote against tax exemption for Federal and municipal securities, but to now begin to draw the line here without facing the general proposition seems to me undesirable.

Of course, the gentleman could very well say that the time to begin is the time to begin; that we ought to begin now. One consideration is often lost sight of in the general proposition, namely, that if you remove the tax exemption you have to pay a higher rate for your money, and it has always seemed to me to be a case of even-Stephen. For that reason it does not in the end make very much difference whether you have tax exemption or not; but for the moral effect I think it might be wise for us at once to abolish all tax exemptions. [Applause.] But to do it immediately is probably impracticable.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield.

Mr. HEALEY. Will the gentleman briefly explain the manner in which an individual whose home is in danger of foreclosure may initiate the procedure provided under this bill for his relief?

Mr. LUCE. He goes to the home-loan bank and explains his situation. Thereupon they offer to take over the mortgage and pay for it in bonds—bonds guaranteed as to interest but not as to principal.

So far the progress is very easy and simple. The hitch comes when the mortgagee is confronted with an offer of the bonds. Now, we cannot tell whether the mortgagee will accept these bonds or not. We do not know. We think in most cases he will. Judging from my own attitude toward a certain piece of real estate in the gentleman's city that I hold as trustee, I would be delighted if I could swap the property for bonds.

Mr. HEALEY. The individual mortgagor himself may initiate the procedure by filing an application with the banks or agencies which are set up to administer the provisions of this bill. Is this correct?

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield.

Mr. BACON. What were the considerations which led to a limitation of the benefits of this bill to homes valued at under $15,000? I have particularly in mind—

Mr. LUCE. If I may interrupt the gentleman, this feature is sure to have long and earnest debate when we reach it under the 5-minute rule. Unless the gentleman particularly cares to go into it at this moment, will he not defer it until this point is reached under the 5-minute rule?

Mr. BACON. May I ask one further question then?

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. BACON. What happens in the case a small home has a small first mortgage and a second mortgage in addition to the first mortgage? Has provision been made to permit a home owner under such circumstances to make application for a loan where the two mortgages do not exceed the appraised value of the home?

Mr. LUCE. I had so understood. The bill is complicated and some of my answers must have a string attached to them, but it is my understanding that when the total of the mortgages comes within the limit they can be handled under this law.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. I want to thank the gentleman for his lucid explanation of this bill. I wish him to make a further explanation of the 80-percent valuation provision. Our experience in Oregon with home-loan mortgages has resulted in losses through overappraisal of property. I do not understand that it is a good business venture to loan on property up to 80 percent of its value when it is notorious that appraisers overappraise, especially in reference to Government loans. Will the gentleman be so kind as to explain how this 80 percent is to be arrived at?

Mr. LUCE. In reply to the gentleman's question, I may say that in my own State the mutual savings banks may loan up to 66⅔ percent. For a long time the cooperative banks, another name for building and loan associations, could lend up to 75 percent. We found it safe to increase that to 80 percent. This was the figure we used in the home loan bill last year, because the greater part of the building and loan associations do lend up to 80 percent. In view of the terrible drop in land values in the last 3 years, thousands of banks and other lending institutions have been caught because they lent too large a percentage of the security. I share the gentleman's apprehensions. For my own part I would have been willing to have had that reduced in order to get greater safety, but in consideration of the fact that the first part of this bill is an emergency proposal confined to 3 years, I came to recognize that by reason of the great distress of these people, threatened with the loss of their homes, we well might not insist on the extreme of ordinary business prudence.

Mr. CELLER. Section 5 of the bill provides that Federal saving-and-loan associations may be established in districts now insufficiently served by local thrift and home-financing institutions, and then on page 14, subdivision (i), section 5, provision is made for any Federal home-loan bank to convert itself into a Federal savings and loan association, whether that particular district is sufficiently or insufficiently served by the present loan thrift or home-financing institution. Does not the gentleman think that this will have a tendency to force the mutual savings and loan associations into the Federal System? In other words, if you have a group of mutual saving and loan associations and one is permitted to convert into a Federal institution, this in and of itself will force more business to the Federal association to the detriment of the other mutual associations.

Mr. LUCE. It is not understood that that would be permitted by the Board.

Mr. CELLER. I believe that would be the effect.

Mr. LUCE. I have no doubt it would, and we have tried very hard to guard against it.

Mr. CELLER. For example, in the city of Newark there are 500 mutual associations and if 2 or 3 or 4 of those associations should convert, they would very soon drive the others out of business.

Mr. LUCE. We never dreamed of the possibility of permitting such a thing as that.

Mr. CELLER. Why do you provide for conversion and what is the necessity for it?

Mr. LUCE. Because there are places in my own State, for example, numerous small towns, that have but one cooperative bank and if it desires to convert we thought it should have the possibility of doing it. In my own city, however, there are two of them, and I have not the remotest idea that the Board would ever permit one alone of the two to convert.

Mr. CELLER. You have a proper limitation in the first provision?

Mr. LUCE. We leave such things to the judgment of the board. We give the board great power to administer the act.

Mr. CELLER. In this instance you take away the power and do not set up a standard when you allow conversion. If you put the same limitation on conversion that you do on establishing the Federal institutions in the first instance, I would go along with the gentleman, but in this particular you take away the safeguarding provision.

Mr. LUCE. On that particular, if the gentleman can convince the chairman of the committee it is wise to accept such amendment, I would not object.

Mr. STUDLEY. Did the committee give consideration to the situation that confronts the home owner in the metropolitan area of New York? and I presume the same thing is true in Boston, where the land is of great value and $10,000 will not satisfy the mortgage. Therefore this bill will bring no relief to such persons.

Mr. LUCE. It will not. I cannot speak for the whole committee as to their views, but my own view is that we ought to have followed the home-loan bank bill of last year.

Mr. RICH. Are the valuations of today to be considered in respect of these properties on which they are going to lend up to 80 percent, or are you going to take 80 percent of the value in 1928 or 1929?

Mr. LUCE. Present value.

Mr. KELLER. Along the same line, may I ask the gentleman whether or not, as a matter of fact, you are not justified in placing the percentage of the loan at 80 percent because of the present terrifically devalued condition of property in the country?

Mr. LUCE. That is one factor, and it will be further considered when we reach that section of the bill, because I am certain amendments will be offered.

Mr. KELLER. May I also ask when and by what method we can bring before this body consideration of further prevention of tax-proof securities? I will appreciate the information.

Mr. LUCE. A resolution to that effect would go before the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. MOTT. I was very much interested in the gentleman's statement that the people should be warned that they must not expect either too direct or too speedy action in this regard. I think the gentleman is correct, and I would ask him if it is not his opinion that not only the title of the bill itself, but the message of the President in regard to it, and the newspaper comments that have gone out to the country about it are all calculated to raise in the people the hope that they will get both direct action from the Government by way of direct loans and also speedy loans.

Mr. LUCE. It is a big problem, this, of how far you are justified in cheering up the public. I will not answer the question. I cannot answer it.

Mr. MOTT. I am asking now, in view of your statement that a damper should be put on the people, if it is not a fact that heretofore their hopes have been too optimistically aroused both by the title of the bill itself and the President's message in regard to it.

Mr. LUCE. The gentleman is absolutely right.

Mr. JENKINS. Suppose in a town where they have three building and loan companies, one of them has availed itself of the opportunity to become associated with the home-loan bank and the other two have not, and suppose an individual living in that community wishes to avail himself of the opportunities of this bill, will he have to apply to that representative or that one building and loan association that is now a part of the home-loan bank or can he make his application direct to the home-loan bank?

Mr. LUCE. I cannot give the gentleman a definite answer. I will have to check up on that.

Mr. DE PRIEST. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield.

Mr. DE PRIEST. On page 2, line 8, you limit the value of the homestead to not exceeding $15,000.

Mr. LUCE. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but that will come up under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. DE PRIEST. I received a letter from a man who owns a home in which he lives, for which he paid $30,000 and he only owes $8,500. Could he get any relief under this bill?

Mr. LUCE. I am sorry to say that he could not get any. I tried to get that remedied, but I was not successful.

Mr. SWICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield.

Mr. SWICK. On page 6, line 20, there is a provision with reference to making payments sufficient to retire the interest and principal within a period not to exceed 15 years. Suppose that a man has not been able to pay the interest or the principal for 3 years or taxes for 3 years. Will he benefit by this loan?

Mr. LUCE. That question has been raised, and an amendment has been suggested—I do not know whether it will be offered or not—to take care of the 3-year period by a moratorium, so to speak. The framers of the bill thought that we had gone as far as we should go.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. The home-loan corporation created by the act will not be able to make a direct loan. Must he turn the money into the banking board association?

Mr. LUCE. Gentlemen will understand that this corporation is the Home Loan Board under another guise, and if he will look at section 5, page 5, paragraph (d), and page 7, paragraph (e), he will find that this corporation may make loans under conditions set forth.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. Is there anything in the bill which would permit the sale of the bonds for cash, so that some cash would be available to pay the mortgage? In other words, if the mortgagee threatens to foreclose—

Mr. LUCE. If the bank has taken over the mortgage and given bonds for it, it is expected that will meet whatever the mortgagor can require.

Mr. DONDERO. Suppose the mortgagee, in view of the fact that the principal is not guaranteed by the United States, refuses to accept the bonds and continues the foreclosure against the mortgagor. Does not that defeat the purpose of the bill in giving relief?

Mr. LUCE. To what extent that will be possible I do not know, but I believe that nearly all the mortgagors of homes will be able to get relief under this bill.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman said awhile ago that you would take the present valuation of the property. If you start the inflation, you will not be able to take in all the property—

Mr. LUCE. I would be willing to discuss that subject with the gentleman at a much greater length of time than I have now.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. Is there any provision made for payment of back taxes?

Mr. LUCE. There is a direct loan for that purpose to the mortgagor.

Mr. ADAMS. Is that mortgage increased in any amount?

Mr. LUCE. If the gentleman will read the section at the bottom of page 5 to which I have referred, he will find the provision.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. PIERCE. Under this bill interest on the bonds alone is guaranteed by the Government?

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. PIERCE. What is supposed to be the difference in market value between bonds carrying a guaranty of interest only and straight Government bonds?

Mr. LUCE. I do not think that matter was brought out in the hearings.

Mr. PIERCE. Has the gentleman any estimate of the difference in value in the market?

Mr. LUCE. I could not give the gentleman any estimate.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York agreed to yield his 5 minutes to me.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I have not any more time to yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Very little can be said in reference to this proposition in 5 minutes.

The problems confronting the home owner cannot be exaggerated. His condition is most critical. The question as I see it is whether the Congress is going to stand by and see hundreds of thousands of honest citizens and their families turned out into the street, lose their life savings, because they are unable to renew mortgages upon their homes. Hundreds of thousands of our God-fearing citizens, home-loving people, have already been turned out of their homes. I have heard from these people by the thousand, and I say to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE], always interesting, a man who always knows his subject, that the reason thousands of applications were not filed in the Des Moines, Iowa, office was because the people knew that they would be wasting a 3-cent stamp if they filed an application. They knew absolutely that there was no opportunity for an individual to secure a loan from the Home Loan Bank Board; and my prediction made months and months ago that no loans would be made to an individual came true, and it is true today, because not one individual has ever received a loan from that Board. If the speech just made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] had been made on the floor of this House in the closing days of the last session, we would not have had a Home Loan Bank Board today, because that speech would have been defeated in the House.

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Not now. We were led to believe by the chairman of the committee, and other members of the committee, that the individual would be taken care of. We enacted the bill, and it is nothing more than a sales agency for the building and loan associations. [Applause.] That is all it is. Analyze it in any way that you desire and that is the final conclusion to which you must come. We all know how one becomes a member of a building and loan association. A man cannot simply walk into the office and join. How is a person who has a mortgage on his home, who cannot pay taxes or interest, going to make any subscription to a building-and-loan association in order that he might become a member and make a loan or have them take up his mortgage?

Officials connected with the Home Loan Bank Board tried to build a fire under me out in Missouri just before election because I would not keep still. I welcomed their opposition. Since our legislature has been in session officials of the Home Loan Bank Board have sent me letters and telegrams urging me to urge the members of the legislature to adopt legislation that will permit the building and loan associations of my State to participate. I am here not representing one particular class of people, but I am here representing all of the people. [Applause.] I pity any individual who is unable to join such an association, and he is the man I want to see the Government take care of. Gentlemen speak of not making it a direct loan to the individual. Does anyone know of any better security in the world than the homes of the country?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 minutes more.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the country is full of money. Pass a real bill here and you will pry that money loose that is now in hoarding. Let me give you the best evidence in the world in reference to this country's being full of money. I have it here from the Treasury Department. How long has it been since anyone here has seen any of the old large money? It is years. Yet on March 31, 1933, the Treasury Department tells me, there were still outstanding, that has not shown up for redemption, $426,972,925 of the old money. Where is it? It is sewed up in mattresses, hidden in chimneys, or down under the ground somewhere—put away. The people are scared. You will pry loose that money the minute you show them that the Government is going to take over these mortgages. Your banks will then loan some of the money they have on hand. I propose under the 5-minute rule to have something else to say about this bill. I think we should let it be known now that the purpose of this legislation is to take care of the individual, and I will offer such an amendment at the proper time.

We cannot rewrite a bill of this character on this floor. There has been too much mystery surrounding this legislation. Nobody saw this bill until last night. Nobody could look at it. Why be in a hurry. We are a month or two ahead of the Senate. Legislation of this character should be carefully considered and the Members should have had reasonable time to prepare amendments.

I cannot see the necessity for setting up corporations of this kind in the States. I think the present bank can take care of this proposition. If we can loan money to the farmers for seed and feed for cattle when the only collateral we have is the crop and the cattle, why not loan a man money on his home? The home is there. It is better security than anything else that could be given to the Government. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] has expired.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DUFFEY].

Mr. DUFFEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to voice my approval of H.R. 5240.

During my active practice of law in Toledo, Ohio, the financing of homes and the legal work incident to this class of transaction has been a matter of particular study. At the time that the original act was passed in the Seventy-second Congress, I acquainted myself with its provisions. It is my judgment that the legislation then did not adequately meet the problem of the home owner who was at that time in the position where mortgage refinancing was essential. After the Federal Home Loan Bank Board was organized under that statute and the various district boards throughout the country were organized, I gave further study to the provisions and operations of the law. Mr. James V. Davidson, of Toledo (one of the directors of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board of Cincinnati, known as district no. 5, embracing the States of Ohio, Kentucky, and Tennessee) called my attention to the excellent report of the reviewing committee for that district, which recently submitted the semiannual report on the financial condition, practices, and policies of their board. Such report is very enlightening and shows how great benefits can be realized when properly administered. However, I have never really been satisfied with the general operation under the existing statute for the particular reason that the provisions of the law, as well as the rules and regulations adopted, did not reach the individual problems of the home owners themselves who were intended or should have been intended to be aided and benefited by that law. Mr. Chairman, the proposed H.R. 5240 corrects this situation. The bill actually will provide direct, necessary, and urgent relief to millions of home owners in the United States, who are today threatened with the loss of their homes and the equity which has taken years to acquire. Delinquent taxes and assessments have accumulated. In my congressional district, where foreclosure suits were filed by the hundreds, our courts on their own motion saw fit to withhold the order of sale where it appeared that the defaulted mortgagor was a home owner in possession. And on the other hand, in many instances, the mortgagee has been some life insurance company or a building and loan association, a bank, or similar financial institution, whose assets and reserves were invested in first mortgages on homes, an investment always considered as a safe form of investment. This class of mortgagees are to be considered in fact as trustees for thousands of depositors and policyholders, who have been dependent on such assets and should have protection and a return on their insurance policies. Therefore, it is not only the home owners but also thousands of beneficiaries who receive aid and benefit through the provisions of the proposed act.

The bonds to be exchanged for these mortgages will bear interest at 4 percent, to be guaranteed by the Government; the new mortgages will be at the rate of 5 percent. The spread of 1 percent is hardly sufficient to meet all the necessary administrative expenses; but even if the Government should lose something in this matter, it is well worth it in the interest of homes and society. One of the results of this bill will be that both the mortgagor and the mortgagee will be benefited, and if any benefits accrue in the scaling down of the obligations, this reduction will go to the mortgagor, the home owner.

I have conferred with the members of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board in Washington, and I have requested certain definite information and figures which will be of great benefit to all the Members of the House in analyzing the exact situation which faces the defaulted home owner in every State in the Union. These facts, data, and statistics are now available for your information. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent of the House to extend my remarks by adding the following memoranda and statements.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The memoranda are as follows:

APRIL 24, 1933.

HON. WARREN J. DUFFEY,

House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. DUFFEY: In response to your request of April 20 I am very glad to send you with this letter a memorandum containing our estimate of the volume of urban home mortgages and other urban mortgages outstanding on January 1, 1932, and broken down among the principal types of mortgage lenders.

Accompanying the memorandum you will find tables showing the total volume of all mortgages held by building and loan associations, banks, and insurance companies. Wherever these are shown by States the figures represent the volume of mortgages held by institutions whose principal offices are located in the respective States. This means that all mortgages held by large insurance companies, such as the Prudential, for example, are shown in the figures for New Jersey, etc. So far I have been unable to find a satisfactory analysis of the volume of insurance-company loans in each State. All other types of mortgage lenders, however, confine their loans almost exclusively to their respective States, and accordingly the State pictures for these institutions are clearer than they are for insurance companies. The national totals are equally clear for all types of institutions.

Please note that the figures in our memorandum, showing a grand total of $36,295,000,000 urban mortgages, of which our estimate shows $21,450,000,000 in urban home mortgages alone, does not involve farm mortgages. The latest estimate made by the United States Department of Agriculture shows that the total indebtedness on farms (including mortgages held by individuals, as well as junior mortgages) amounted to $8,500,000,000.

Trusting that these figures give you the information you desire, I am,

Sincerely yours,

ARTHUR J. MERTZKE, Economist.

ESTIMATED VOLUME OF URBAN MORTGAGES IN UNITED STATES IN 1932

The accompanying table shows the estimated volume of urban mortgages held by banks, building and loan associations, insurance companies, and mortgage companies, as well as estimates of the total outstanding real-estate mortgage bonds and mortgages held by individuals. The aggregate volume of mortgages held by all these groups, as estimated for each group, is $36,295,000,000.

The figures showing the total urban mortgages held by Federal Reserve member banks, mutual savings banks, and all other banks are based upon December 31, 1932, reports filed with the Comptroller of the Currency. The total for building and loan associations is based upon figures compiled as of December 31, 1931, by C. F. Cellarius, Secretary of the United States League of Building and Loan Associations. The total figure for insurance companies is based upon the aggregate mortgage holdings of all insurance companies, on December 31, 1931, as shown by Best's Insurance Reports, minus the volume of farm-mortgage loans of life-insurance companies in 1931 (and the same proportion was also deducted from the total mortgage holdings of casualty-, fire-, and marine-insurance companies).

The figures representing the volume of mortgages held by mortgage companies represent a conservative guess based upon limited data. The United States Department of Agriculture estimated that in 1928 mortgage companies held $1,600,000,000 in farm mortgages alone. Scattered studies on the volume of second mortgages indicate that in ordinary times these constitute from 10 percent to 15 percent of the volume of first mortgages. Hence this item alone would ordinarily represent an amount in excess of the estimated total of $3,000,000,000 in mortgages held by mortgage companies at the present. The figures representing real-estate mortgage bonds are based upon tabulations showing the aggregate volume of such bond issue since 1920, minus maturities and repayments to date. Urban mortgages held by individuals are very difficult to estimate accurately, but such sample studies as have been made indicate that in the farm-mortgage field, for example, individuals hold 30 percent of all farm mortgages. More limited studies in the urban-mortgage field indicate that this percentage is less in the urban field and approximates 20 percent in urban-home mortgages. Among urban mortgages on properties other than homes, the percentage of mortgages held by individuals would doubtless be much lower.

DIVISION BETWEEN HOME MORTGAGES AND OTHERS

Banks

The figures representing urban-home mortgages of banks are based upon the total mortgage holdings of these institutions as reported to the Comptroller of the Currency on December 31, 1932.

A survey of the mortgage holdings of banks shows a wide variation among institutions in the percentage of urban-home mortgages to total mortgages. Mutual savings banks in the northeast portion of the United States, for example, invest from 60 to 90 percent of their mortgage loans in urban-home mortgages, whereas in some of the Western States urban-home mortgages represent less than 30 percent of the total mortgage holdings. The average for the United States was 58 percent. Consequently, the figures shown on the attached table represent 58 percent of the total mortgage holdings of all six types of banking institutions included in the tabulation.

Building-and-loan associations

In the case of building-and-loan associations, the estimate of the volume of home mortgages was based upon the aggregate volume of mortgages held by building-and-loan associations in each State as shown by the 1932 annual report of the secretary of the United States Building and Loan League. A survey of building and loan associations' mortgage investments indicated that in general 90 to 95 percent of their mortgage investments are in the form of small urban-home mortgages. Accordingly, the figures shown on the attached table as the volume of mortgages on small urban homes represent 90 percent of the total mortgage holdings of all building and loan associations in each State.

Insurance companies

In computing the estimated total volume of urban-home mortgages held by insurance companies, the total volume of all mortgages held by insurance companies in each State was first tabulated. These figures were taken from Best's Insurance Reports for 1932, and represent mortgages held by insurance companies on December 31, 1931. The figures include mortgages held by fire, marine, and casualty companies, as well as life-insurance companies. The great bulk of these mortgages, however, are held by life-insurance companies, as may be seen from the following tabulation:

Types of companies

	Total amount of mortgages held
Life-insurance companies	$7,752,377,409
Fire- and marine-insurance companies	89,830,191
Casualty- and miscellaneous-insurance companies	8,021,706,305
Total	8,021,706,305

The urban mortgage holdings of insurance companies were obtained by deducting their farm-mortgage loans as explained above. The balance, or $5,940,000,000, representing urban mortgages, was divided between home and other mortgages in the following manner:

On the basis of a survey covering 84 of the principal life-insurance companies of the United States it was found that the volume of home mortgages held by these 84 companies represented approximately 35 percent of their total urban-mortgage holdings at the close of 1931. Accordingly the figures showing in the attached table the volume of urban-home mortgages held by insurance companies in each State represent 35 percent of the total volume of urban mortgages held by all insurance companies whose principal offices are located in the respective States.

Farm-mortgage debt

The indebtedness on farms in 1932, as estimated by the United States Department of Agriculture, was $8,500,000,000. In this estimate are included not only first mortgages held by financing institutions but also farm mortgages held by individuals and second mortgages on farms.

On the basis of the foregoing figures, the total real-estate mortgage debt in the United States in 1932 was as follows:

Urban-home mortgages	$21,450,500,000
Other urban mortgages	14,844,500,000
Farm mortgages	8,500,000,000
Total	44,895,000,000

The attached tables, showing figures by States, represent part of the "raw material" used in preparing our estimate.

I enclose them for the partial light they throw upon the volume of mortgages in the several States, even though the figures for banks are incomplete and the figures for insurance companies are shown in the States of the "home offices" of insurance companies.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933."

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the gentleman from Maryland a question, but may I state first that my colleague has no higher regard for Mr. Stevenson than I have?

The gentleman said the corporation was authorized to issue $2,000,000,000 worth of bonds. Does the gentleman feel it is an absolute necessity to form additional savings-and-loan associations?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. If a county has no organization whatever to loan money, the gentleman knows, probably as well as or better than I, that it is almost impossible to get money from a bank at this time. It was on this theory that these associations were authorized to be set up.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. My question is prompted by the fact that Congress has passed laws appropriating hundreds of millions of dollars for the purpose of being loaned to individual farmers for seed and crop production and for feed for cattle, and so forth. Under such laws regional offices have been opened throughout the country. There is one in my city. All the farmer has to do to get a loan is to fill out the proper application blanks and file them with the regional office. He then gets money for seed and plants the seed.

Why cannot this corporation carry on in the same way, by opening up regional offices, and where they find people who come within the terms of this act, who fill out the proper application blanks and submit the proper affidavits showing they are unable to get a loan elsewhere, take over their mortgages?

Why not clarify and simplify the matter by taking out all the red tape and all the delay and make the loans to people entitled to them after due inspection and examination of the facts of the individual case?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. The gentleman knows that such a set-up is not within the scope of this bill.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I am trying to simplify matters.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. May I ask the gentleman if he has introduced a bill covering the ground he speaks of?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I introduced a bill in the last session of Congress and also in the present Congress providing that direct loans under the Home Loan Bank Act could be made up to 80 percent.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. The only answer I can make is that what the gentleman speaks of does not come within the scope of this legislation. It is not intended to cover every case. It is intended to cover cases as far as individual mortgagors are concerned where there is a state of mind on the part of mortgagor and mortgagee which would permit the refinancing; that is all; that is the scope of the bill.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. In other words, then, only the owners the gentleman referred to a minute ago can get relief, the case of a mortgagee owning a $10,000 mortgage willing to take $7,000 or $7,500 in bonds rather than go through foreclosure proceedings. Only mortgagees in that class of cases are covered by this legislation.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. That is correct; yes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. And the individual having a $3,000 or $4,500 mortgage against his property wishing to refinance it gets no relief at all?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. If the gentleman has read the bill, he knows such an individual cannot get relief under this bill.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Is it going to be another fraud like the one we enacted at the last session of Congress?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. This is not a fraud. The bill has been thoroughly explained, has been correctly explained. Had the gentleman listened to the general debate, he would now understand the bill.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Are we, then, going to be honest and tell the people that this bill is not a set-up through which the Government will take over their mortgages?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Not at all. Only people coming within the purview of the bill can get relief under it. If a person does not come within the terms of the bill, his case will be no different than had this legislation not been passed.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. It depends upon whether or not the man who holds the mortgage will accept bonds. Insurance companies and building-and-loan associations cannot accept the bonds under the State laws.

Mr. BRUNNER. Of course, if the mortgagee does not want to do any refinancing, he cannot be compelled to do it.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. In that event we cannot allow the mortgagor anything to pay off taxes and liens.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Oh, yes; there is such a provision in the bill. Money can be loaned for the purpose of paying taxes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. That will be a second lien.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. No; it will be a first mortgage.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Suppose a first mortgage already exists on the property. In such a case you could not loan him money to pay interest and taxes.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. If 80 percent of the appraised value of the property amounts to more than the first mortgage, the mortgagor can get an additional loan.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Is the bill to be administered on the basis of assessed value or appraised value?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. On 80 percent of the appraised value.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this bill, but I want to point out certain developments which have occurred in Newark, N.J., where is located the Federal home-loan bank serving New York State.

It is one thing for us to pass legislation of as good a character as this legislation, but it is another thing to have our good efforts frustrated and our glorious purposes balked by inefficient and self-seeking officials.

Now, I charge that the board of directors, with few exceptions, of the Federal home-loan bank in Newark, its whole personnel and staff, have done everything in their power to frustrate our efforts. We sought to help mutual savings and loan associations and small-home owners. They sought to prevent carrying out of our efforts.

For example, section 4 (a) of the old act provides that relief may be given directly to home owners up to a certain percent of the appraised valuation of their properties. Deliberately the officials passed some sort of a general order or regulation which in effect prevented the carrying out of our express mandate that home owners should be directly relieved.

The home-loan bank officials in Newark deliberately went out of their way to prevent giving the relief which was so desired and which was so necessary to the distressed home owners in New York City, including Brooklyn, all Long Island, and the various other sections and communities of the States of New Jersey and New York.

Soon after the home-loan bank was established at Newark there developed a definite hostility to the bank. Newspapers flayed it and its directors and personnel. Instead of attempting to assuage this antipathy, they seemed not to care. They seemed to assume an attitude of the "public be damned." Instead of meeting the people half-way, explaining their difficulties and limitations, they coldly and unsympathetically received applicants, if they did not actually slam the door in their faces. These directors and officers and their attitude rendered not service but disservice. Politics ruled the day. The bank was simply a place to dish out political jobs. Franklin Fort put his partners, associates, friends, and political henchmen in places of power and influence. To get relief, the sine qua non was one's Republicanism.

Mr. CAVICCHIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. CAVICCHIA. The gentleman is reviving a question that former Congressman LaGuardia spoke of on this floor. Does not the gentleman know that the present chairman of the Board, a former Member of this House, is following out the same practice because they cannot make direct loans?

Mr. CELLER. No; he is not. He is gradually changing the situation for the better. We have to iterate and reiterate these matters in order to get relief. What our former colleague, Mr. LaGuardia, said is absolutely correct so far as Newark is concerned, and I lay the whole business at the door of our former colleague, Franklin Fort, because of the disservice he rendered to the Federal home-loan bank rather than service. He appointed all his ward heelers to political office, or rather made political officers of the staff and officers of the Federal home-loan bank at Newark. He paraded before the people of Newark and of New Jersey that this was a political proposition, and he caused all kinds of havoc. He turned public opinion against the bank. So much so, that if you ask anybody in New York or New Jersey who is a home owner about the Federal home-loan bank, he will throw up his hands in dismay. They think there that there can be no possible relief from the Federal home bank because of the actions of Franklin Fort and his political sycophants who are either members of the Board or a part of the personnel. I only make three exceptions to the statement that every one of the members of the Board have not demeaned themselves in a patriotic and efficient manner. I am going to name the three exceptions so as to get the record straight. George Lloyd has done good service. So has Eustace Seligman. George McDonald has likewise performed good service. Every one of the others is not worth a pinch of snuff, and their resignations should be demanded forthwith.

Mr. CAVICCHIA. The gentleman is making it a matter of politics.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. No. Politics should play no part.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The gentleman said 50 percent. Was not 40 percent all they would allow?

Mr. CELLER. They would not allow anything directly to home owners. They deliberately dodged the whole scheme and said it was not part or parcel of the purpose of Congress to make any direct loans in this way. They simply frustrated our efforts.

I have the greatest confidence in the present chairman of the Federal home-loan bank, our former esteemed colleague, Mr. Stevenson, of South Carolina. I am sure he is going to weed out these fellows in the Newark office.

I will say to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. CAVICCHIA] it is not a question of politics. I do not want the Democrats necessarily to control this situation any more than I want the Republicans to control it. This is a nonpartisan board, and their activities ought to be conducted in a nonpartisan spirit, but this was not the case with Fort in the saddle. It was conducted, and has been conducted up to this very moment in Newark, in a clearly partisan spirit, and it is time to call a halt in this regard. There is indeed need for a complete housecleaning. [Applause.]

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] in an address in the general debate on this bill made the statement that the home-loan bank bill would not have been passed by the House were it not for the fact that the Chairman of the House Banking and Currency Committee and his friends misrepresented the bill as giving relief to the individual home owner.

It was my privilege to write the report of the committee recommending the bill to the House for passage, and it is distinctly stated in that report that there was no help or hope for the individual home owner unless through membership in some home-financing institution. There was not one word in the debate in this House wherein there was any deception or fraud of any kind practiced. No member of the committee on either side of the House pretended in any way that the bill provided for direct loans to the individual home owner.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I am not talking about the House committee, I am talking about the conference committee after the Senate amendment was added.

Mr. REILLY. The home-loan bank bill was designed to serve existing home-financing institutions, as the Federal Reserve System at the present time serves its member banks.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. But the Senate made it for individuals.

Mr. REILLY. The idea of a direct loan was grafted on the bill, as you have been told by the chairman of the committee today, and by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE], and as the gentleman from Missouri ought to know, in the Senate, and the members of the Banking and Currency Committee of the House tried to get it out of the bill in conference, because there was no machinery for carrying into execution a direct loan. The direct-loan idea is contrary to the theory and purpose of the bill, and the gentleman from Missouri ought to know it, and not stand upon the floor of this House and send out to the country the charge that the Banking and Currency Committee of this House put a fraud over on the House and people in passing the home-loan bank bill by claiming it provided for direct loans to the home owner.

There was no fraud practiced on the House in the passing of the home-loan bank bill. The home-loan bank law was designed to work just as it is working. As one of the members of the Banking and Currency Committee of this House who played a humble part in the framing of that bill, I may say I am well satisfied with the way the law is working. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, in all fairness, it does seem to me that this legislation which we are about to consider today is in the first instance only another piece of legislation that is going to dash the hopes and aspirations of millions of people on the rocks.

There are some nine or ten billion dollars worth of mortgages which come within the provisions of this act. At least, I understand that is the estimate.

Now, how are we going to give them relief? The first thing is that there must be some money obtained to do it. Under this bill, $200,000,000 is in sight. The rest of it comes over here in section (c), page 4, where it provides for the authorization of $2,000,000,000. How is that $2,000,000,000 obtained? Why, by selling bonds paying 4-percent interest, and the Government guarantees the interest but nothing more.

What security is back of these bonds? Collateral taken up on distressed-mortgage property. I do not believe that the bonds can ever be sold. Why should any citizen, in his right mind, buy bonds at 4 percent on which the Government guarantees the interest only when he can go into the open market and buy Government bonds paying 4½ percent, on which the Government guarantees both interest and principal. I hope it does not turn out that way, but my common sense tells me that this bill is going to be another case of leading the people to false hopes.

I have never committed myself to the proposition that it is the obligation of the Government to take care of the financial liabilities of the people or corporations. I have thought that that was radicalism. I cannot conceive of anything more radical than the Government taking the money out of your pocket and giving it to some other person or corporation.

Here the Congress is enacting a bill on the idea of giving relief to mortgage-distressed people in this country, and it must make some provision to get the money. If that is what Congress intends to do, then some member of the committee, when we come to section 3, page 4, should be courageous enough to offer an amendment whereby the Government of the United States guarantees both the principal and interest. If you are not willing to adopt that, let us not pass legislation which will lead the people of the country to false hopes.

The gentleman from Missouri criticizes the bill because it talks about giving credit but does not do it.

There are $9,000,000,000 mortgage indebtedness, and this bill leads the people to believe that the Government is going to take care of them. Let Congress be courageous enough to provide the money to do it.

So far as the bill is concerned, it only provides, with certainty, $200,000,000. It looks to me like it is on a parity with a salesman going out and selling stocks and guaranteeing to keep up the interest but does it by selling more stock.

Any plan where all that is guaranteed is payment of the interest and not repayment of the principal has something basically wrong about it, and that wrong consists in the fact that it is questionable whether it is a good security. If the proposed board sells this $2,000,000,000 worth of bonds, they will be sold only because innocent American people buy them believing that the Government is standing back of them, interest and principal. I say now to the people of the United States that if any living soul buys one of these bonds he must buy it knowing that the Government of the United States is not back of it, and that the Government guarantees nothing but the interest. I hope the people will realize that. Merely printing it on the bond is not going to be enough to save the people from being deceived.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last four words in order to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. REILLY] a question. Under the old Home Loan Act, States with local statutes prohibiting reassignments could not participate. As I understand it, this bill does not embrace that feature.

Mr. REILLY. This bill is entirely along different lines than the home-loan bank bill at present, and State statutes cannot interfere with its working.

Mr. GREEN. Does it carry that provision in the old bill that we passed last year?

Mr. REILLY. This is an amendment taking out of the present home loan bill the provision as to direct loans to individuals.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me to ask a question of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. GREEN. Yes.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I want to know if there is any alternative in the bill which will allow an individual to obtain a loan, when there is not an association located in his immediate community.

Mr. REILLY. The bill provides the same as the Farm Loan Act, where the mortgagor can negotiate with the mortgagee, and if he can provide for an exchange of Government bonds for his mortgage, and get it all below 80 percent, he can go and get the mortgage direct from the Government and amortize it.

Mr. GREEN. And these loans will be based upon the appraised present value of the land?

Mr. REILLY. The appraised value at the present time.

Mr. GREEN. And this appraisal will be made through home-loan organization?

Mr. REILLY. Through the corporation set up by the home-loan organization?

The Clerk read as follows:

DEFINITIONS

Sec. 2. As used in this act—

(a) The term "Board" means the Federal Home Loan Bank Board created under the Federal Home Loan Bank Act.

(b) The term "corporation" means the Home Owners' Loan Corporation created under section 4 of this act.

(c) The term "home mortgage" means a first mortgage on real estate in fee simple or on a leasehold under a renewable lease for not less than 99 years, upon which there is located a dwelling for not more than 3 families, used by the owner as a home or held by him as his homestead, and having a value not exceeding $15,000; and the term "first mortgage" includes such classes of first liens as are commonly given to secure advances on real estate under the laws of the State in which the real estate is located, together with the credit instruments, if any, secured thereby.

(d) The term "association" means a Federal savings-and-loan association chartered by the Board as provided in section 5 of this act.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BACON: Page 2, line 8, after the word "exceeding", strike out "$15,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$20,000."

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, I am offering this amendment because in the larger cities of the country, particularly in the suburban sections, where real-estate values are higher than they are in the rest of the country, a limitation of $15,000 will not bring the relief this bill is intended to bring. Gentlemen should not forget that there is a limitation later on in the bill that no loan shall exceed $10,000. It seems to me entirely safe, therefore, to increase this limit from $15,000 to $20,000. After all, if we continue the limitation at $10,000 contained hereafter in the bill, it seems to me that the security that the home owners' loan corporation can receive is better if the value of the home is $20,000 rather than $15,000. Unless this amendment be adopted, many of the small home owners in the suburban sections of the large cities of the country will not have the relief that the bill purports to give them and will lose their homes entirely.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Is it not a fact that in the gentleman's district, the same as in mine, the average home costs from $15,000 to $25,000, and this bill will relieve only a very small percentage of the home owners?

Mr. BACON. The gentleman is correct. I have also in mind the matter of the 2- and 3-family homes, which the bill will not reach unless the limit is raised from $15,000 to $20,000.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It is a fact that the 2-family houses run from $18,000 to $30,000. I probably represent more individual home owners than any other Member in the House.

Mr. BACON. The gentleman is quite correct, and I hope that the committee will accept this amendment. The people who have been hardest hit are the skilled mechanic and the small-salaried man, who has been trying to buy a home for his family, and now finds himself without a job.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. KENNEY. Why is it necessary to place any limit at all upon the value of a man's home where the loan is limited to $10,000?

Mr. BACON. I think the gentleman is correct. If we limit the amount of the loan to $10,000, I do not see any reason why we should limit the appraised value of the house, because the greater the appraised value, the more security there is behind the $10,000 loan.

Mr. KENNEY. There was no limit fixed on the value of farms, was there?

Mr. BACON. Yes; I think there was a limit of $50,000.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACON. I yield.

Mr. GILCHRIST. There was a limit of much less than that, so that in the great State of Iowa you could not put a loan upon an acre of ground exceeding $45 an acre. It was limited to 50 percent of the value of the land and 20 percent only of the value of the buildings. I am not opposing the gentleman's suggestion, but I am simply stating the facts.

Mr. BACON. I voted for the farm mortgage relief bill and I am glad the gentleman is supporting my amendment. I want to reiterate that there has been a limit of $10,000 placed on the amount of the loan later on in the bill. Therefore the greater the value of the house, the more the security back of that loan of $10,000. I am offering my amendment in the interest of people in dire need who are in danger of losing their homes.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACON. I yield.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. If no limitation is put on, cannot the city of New York absorb this $2,000,000,000 of itself?

Mr. BACON. I do not get the significance of the gentleman's question.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. In other words, if there is no limitation put on the value of the house, the city of New York alone can absorb, in $10,000 loans, the whole amount of this $2,000,000,000?

Mr. DOWELL. And all the money will be paid to those who are not intended to receive it under this bill.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. That is right.

Mr. BACON. I disagree absolutely. This bill purports to help those in real need, who will lose their homes unless this limit is raised from $15,000 to $20,000. The gentleman must not forget that in the big cities there are many 2- and 3-family homes. In fact, they are more usual than otherwise, and if you are going to protect those home owners, you must raise the limit from $15,000 to $20,000. And do not forget the skilled workman and small-salaried man, who has lost his job, who may now be working at a greatly reduced wage—

Mr. STUDLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACON. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. STUDLEY. Is it not true that this condition arises largely because of the value of land in the metropolitan area of New York, and not because of the particular value of the houses built upon that land?

Mr. BACON. That is exactly what I tried to bring out, that the value of the land is greater in the metropolitan areas than it is in the smaller towns. Therefore, while the house may cost exactly the same, the appraised valuation will be greater in city and suburban sections where the value of the real estate is greater. Unless my amendment is adopted, many distressed, harassed, and deserving people will lose their homes. This bill does not go far enough.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. LANHAM). The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON] has expired.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON].

Mr. Chairman, I do not believe the valuation of a house eligible to benefit under this law should be raised from $15,000 to $20,000. The gentleman from New York speaks about high land values in his city. I happen to represent a district that has as much poverty as any in the country and I also represent the richest village in the State of Michigan. I represent the Grosse Pointe area, whose land values are also high, and those people will get along better than the workingman owning a small home. If we change the limit of the valuation of the eligible home from $15,000 to $20,000, what will happen? The people who own the high-priced and expensive homes in my district through acquaintanceships and friendships will come in and be able to borrow this money. That will happen in my district and in every other district. I want to put a limitation on this thing so that the little man will get what he is entitled to. That is what this bill is intended for.

Mr. BACON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BACON. I am not in disagreement with the gentleman on that proposition, but there is a limitation on the amount of the loan, no matter what the value of the house.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. That is right. If they allow $10,000 loans to every applicant who comes in, the fund will soon be exhausted. The gentleman knows, as well as I, as a practical matter, that if the gentleman from New York knows the administrator of his district, he will help his friends get these $10,000 loans and diminish the area over which this money should be distributed, and I contend it is the purpose of this law to allow as many $500, $1,000, and $2,000 loans as possible. If you want to destroy the purpose of this bill, then change this limit. I am not in favor of raising this limitation one cent. I have just as fine homes in my district as any district in America, not excluding the district of the gentleman from New York, and the people who have $20,000 and $30,000 homes can better take care of them than the little man who owns a thousand-dollar home.

Mr. LANZETTA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEIDEMAN. I yield.

Mr. LANZETTA. Does the gentleman know that the average lot in New York City is worth between $6,000 and $10,000, and he will find owners of that property who are working people?

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Yes; but there are other districts in this country outside of New York City. I can buy the finest residence in Grosse Pointe today for $10,000. It is a residence fit for a king. We must take into consideration all the little homes worth five and six hundred dollars or a thousand dollars. Those are the people who need relief.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. We are not legislating for any one section of the country, but it is for the country as a whole.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. That is right; and we are not legislating for New York City alone.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is right; and we, of course, are legislating for the whole country. In my district there are thousands of 2-family homes occupied and owned by mechanics and laborers who have mortgages on their homes, and they would not be able to get any relief. I think the laborer and the mechanic in New York City, owning a home worth $20,000, is entitled to relief just as much as those living in any other section of the country.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. I agree with the gentleman, but if a laborer and a mechanic can afford to pay $20,000 for a home, he removes himself from the classification of laborer and mechanic.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The gentleman does not understand the standard of living in this country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WEIDEMAN] has expired.

Mr. DE PRIEST. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute amendment for the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute offered by Mr. DE PRIEST for the amendment offered by Mr. BACON: Page 2, line 6, strike out beginning with the word "for" down through line 7 and insert in lieu thereof "in which the owner occupies a unit as a home"; page 2, line 8, strike out "$15,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$40,000"; so that the paragraph will read as follows:

"(c) The term 'home mortgage' means a first mortgage on real estate in fee simple or on a leasehold under a renewable lease for not less than 99 years, upon which there is located a dwelling in which the owner occupies a unit as a home or held by him as his homestead, and having a value not exceeding $40,000; and the term 'first mortgage' includes such classes of first liens as are commonly given to secure advances on real estate under the laws of the State in which the real estate is located, together with the credit instruments, if any, secured thereby."

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. LANHAM). In the opinion of the Chair, the amendment offered is not in the nature of a substitute. It is not germane to the pending amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, which deals solely with the matter of amount. In the opinion of the Chair, the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois would have to be considered as a separate amendment rather than as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DE PRIEST. That being the case, Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from New York by striking out the figure "$15,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$40,000."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DE PRIEST to the amendment offered by Mr. BACON: On page 2, line 8, strike out "$15,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$40,000."

Mr. DE PRIEST. Mr. Chairman, I know certain Members think this is an absurd amount; and, on the face of it, it is absurd—but unless the amount is raised a class of people intended to be helped will not be reached.

Later on I shall offer a perfecting amendment which will make clear the substitution of $40,000 for $15,000.

Let me explain my purpose: Under the terms of the present bill a man owning a 3-flat building valued at $15,000 can get but $10,000 as a loan. To help the people we really want to reach out and help, the people in the cities whom this bill will not cover at all, I propose to offer later on, if this amendment is adopted, a further amendment limiting the loan percentage according to a sliding scale. For instance, the bill now provides not to exceed 80 percent on a $15,000 home. I want this to stand as it is, and insert thereafter language to this effect: Not to exceed 60 percent on a valuation between $15,000 and $25,000; not to exceed 50 percent on a valuation between $25,000 and $40,000. Such an amendment will increase the security holdings, make the paper better, and will not take a great deal more money.

It will do what? I received a letter this morning from one of my constituents telling me he had a $8,500 loan due on some property, which he was about to lose through foreclosure proceedings. This property consists of a 6-apartment building. Under the terms of this bill he could not make a loan of $8,500, even though the security he has to offer is a 6-apartment building.

Through this effort we are trying to reach out and help the middle class, the so-called "white-collar people", who need help, and need it badly. They used to have a dollar, but practically all of them are broke under existing conditions. We want to so frame this bill that it will reach the great number of people who need help, and this is why I wish the limitation raised to $40,000.

I have made this explanation so you would understand my reason for making the amount $40,000. As I said, under an amendment I propose to offer, these loans would be made on a sliding-scale basis, 80 percent on a $15,000 valuation; 60 percent on a valuation between $15,000 and $25,000; and not to exceed 50 percent on a valuation between $25,000 and $40,000.

Mr. BRUNNER. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON].

The CHAIRMAN. A substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON] is now pending.

Mr. BRUNNER. Then, Mr. Chairman, I shall offer my amendment later.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DE PRIEST]. The substitute amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON].

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, may the amendment again be read for the information of the House?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk again read the Bacon amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. STEAGALL) there were—ayes 59, noes 73.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks for tellers. Those in favor of taking this vote by tellers will rise and stand until counted. (After counting.) Twelve Members have risen, not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOYLAN. More than 12 Members rose. I counted 20.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that a Member cannot appeal from the decision of the Chair on a demand for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BRUNNER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BRUNNER: Page 2, line 8, after the word "homestead", strike out "and having a value not exceeding $15,000."

Mr. BRUNNER. Mr. Chairman, the reason for this amendment is that further on in the bill there is a provision stating that the loan cannot exceed a certain amount, and I do not see why a man who owns a home worth $25,000 or $30,000 should not be permitted to receive a loan on that home up to the amount that is put in the bill here, which is $10,000. I do not think that is enough and I expect to offer an amendment later making it $16,000. However, I do not see why the person who owns a home worth $35,000 or $40,000 should be excluded from the provisions of this bill, because, after all, in my district and in many other districts, some of those who are hardest hit by this depression are business men who own homes valued over $25,000 and now have absolutely no income. In most instances they have a 70-percent equity in these homes.

I am going to vote for this bill, no matter in what form it is finally presented to the House, because I think it is going to offer a small measure of relief to some. I wish it were possible for all you Members to come to my district and see the suffering that is there. I represent a district of almost 1,000,000 people, and in this district we have over 250,000 home owners. Fifteen thousand of them have already lost their homes since 1929 because they could not keep up their payments. Sixty-five percent of the owners of homes in my district are now in distress, and this does not tell half the story.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. And the small-home owners are the ones that lost their homes.

Mr. BRUNNER. Yes; and a good many of the owners of large homes lost them, too. I can refer my colleague to a man who was in business making $25,000 or $30,000 a year who is not making $1,000 a year today. I think he is hit just as hard as the poorer fellow who owns a $10,000 home.

What I have said does not tell half the story. The savings banks, title companies, and lending institutions have been exceedingly lenient in extending time, and right now I want to congratulate them upon their public spirit.

Personally, I think most of the owners who expect to obtain relief from this bill will be very much surprised. First, because the present holders of the mortgages must be willing to accept 4-percent bonds, to run for 15 years; second, because the principal is not guaranteed and the holder of the bonds will find it difficult to turn his bonds into cash; and, third, because the appraisals will be made as of present-day values, when everybody knows it is impossible to make such appraisal fairly. The only homes that have been disposed of in the last 4 years are those for which the owner was compelled to accept anything he could get above the mortgage and in most instances he was glad to accept a few dollars above the mortgage because he knew he could not carry on any longer, and even a hundred dollars or so would keep the wolf from the door a short time.

I hope the committee will agree to my amendment.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I assume it will be sufficient to say that the amendment would remove all limitation as to valuations of homes that would be eligible for loans. Surely, the House would not destroy every purpose of the bill by the adoption of this amendment. This is all I care to say.

Mr. BRUNNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. BRUNNER. Farther on in the bill, is there not a restriction on the amount one may borrow?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. BRUNNER. Under the bill at the present time, if a man's home is worth $15,100 he cannot be considered under the terms of this bill.

Mr. STEAGALL. That is quite true; but the purpose of this bill is to afford a measure of relief, not complete relief, but a measure of relief to distressed home owners. Nobody contends that we should go to the extent of opening up the Treasury or its credit for adequate relief for all home owners in the United States. We only hope to relieve some of them, and we wish to see that the aid goes to those worst in need. The task of relieving all would be too stupendous at this time. We are attempting to do for urban home owners what we formerly started out to do for the farmers, and that is to give an opportunity to the man of small means with a family to save his home. This is as much as we think can be accomplished at this time, and, fundamentally, I do not see how any man can justify the contention that we should open up the Treasury and grant tax-free securities to obtain loans for men of wealth living in costly and elaborate homes. That is foreign to every purpose of this bill. Under such a plan the funds available would soon be exhausted, and a large portion—in fact, the larger portion—of the funds would go to make loans on property worth $20,000, $25,000, $50,000, and more.

Can there be any justification for issuing tax-free bonds to obtain funds to make a loan to a citizen who has a $50,000 home or a $100,000 home? I call attention to the fact that under present valuations an appraisal of $15,000 based upon present market value in the average community of the United States does not represent more than one third of the value of that home in normal times.

Mr. BRUNNER. Does the chairman mean to convey to the members of the committee here that the Home Loan Bank Board will lend money to these rich people he talks about? This is an emergency measure that is to help the people who are in distress, is it not?

Mr. STEAGALL. I assume the Board will follow the purposes of Congress as disclosed by its enactment and the purposes as they are made clear in these debates. If this amendment is adopted, there is no limit as to valuations. The funds would be consumed without any possibility of accomplishing the purposes that we have in mind.

That is what happened to the Federal land bank system. We started out by limiting loans to $10,000. The clamor came and we raised the limit to $25,000. The Federal land banks soon found themselves in serious difficulties.

The joint-stock land banks were loaning under $50,000 limit. We know what has happened to them. I hesitate to state what has occurred in the case of the Federal land banks. The story is one of disappointment to all of us who had any part or pride in the establishment of the system and who were interested in its success.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words in order to ask the gentleman a question. Why did you put the limit of $50,000 in the Farm Mortgage Act and only $15,000 in the home loan bill?

Mr. STEAGALL. I will say this: If the gentleman were familiar with the record of the chairman of this committee in connection with the Federal Farm Loan Act and amendments to that act, he would not have propounded that question. I stood on the floor of this House and opposed the amendment which raised the limit of loans in the Federal land banks from $10,000 to $25,000, and I think everybody agreed later that it was a mistake.

Mr. GOSS. In the agricultural mortgage bill, passed last week, the limit was $50,000.

Mr. STEAGALL. I am not responsible for that. It was done by other gentlemen who are responsible for that legislation. I had nothing to do with it.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. May I suggest that the mortgagors can borrow 80 percent, where in the farm loan bill the farmers can borrow only 20 percent. A home owner has a greater advantage over the farmer, because at the present valuation farmers will not be able to get any loan whatever.

Mr. BEEDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. I yield.

Mr. BEEDY. I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that 80 percent of the valuation on property today means about 48 percent on its value at the time the mortgage was given. Property now is 60 percent—to be very generous in the estimate—of its value at the time the mortgages were given. You are offering a relief to the home owner of 48 percent on the value of the property when the mortgage was made. National banks can lend up to 50 percent of the value.

Mr. GOSS. The gentleman from Maine does not think there is a fair ratio between the two bills?

Mr. BEEDY. I do not. I think it was a mistake to raise the limit to $50,000. It was intended to help the poor man.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. What was the interest on the loan to farmers?

Mr. GOSS. I do not know, but in this act it is 5 percent.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Chairman, I come from a wholly farming community. I very much deprecate the talk that is going on here which compares the benefits of this home loan bill with the farm loan bill. Gentlemen from the city seem to say that this bill provides relief in a very much less degree than the farm bill did. I think they are in error. The facts are that the farm bill will not admit of a loan of probably more than 40 percent of the value of the property. That was pointed out at the time in a speech made by the gentleman from Wisconsin and in a few remarks by me. This bill provides for loans up to 80 percent of the value of the home.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILCHRIST. Not now. Furthermore, gentlemen have suggested that the rates are better in the farm bill than they are here. Again gentlemen are in error. The farm loan bill provided that the farmer could get a 4½-percent rate, but he was compelled to go into an association to get that rate, and it will be remembered that he was loaned only $95, for which he paid 4½ percent. So when you come to compare the rates of interest you are again wrong.

There was one provision of the farm loan bill which provided that where these associations did not exist, then the farmer would have to pay 5 percent—exactly the same as in this bill. Let us try not to find fault with the farm loan bill. I want to go along with the Members who live in the cities. I am under obligation to them for votes which they have given to farm legislation—gentlemen from Chicago and New York and from other cities all over the country. In the remarks I have heretofore made I have thanked these gentlemen for their votes in support of the farming interests. I thank them again today. I want to go ahead with the gentlemen from the cities who think that this bill now ought to be made so that it is workable for them, and I shall support this amendment, because I think we ought to be fair to all classes. When we represent the interests of the whole country, then we are, indeed, representing the interests of our own districts, and that ought to be what actuates us here in voting.

Let us not have any more talk about how the farmers have been favored. It is not so. They were not especially favored by the farm loan bill. If there is any discrimination, it is in favor of the home owner under this bill. I thank the Lord that destitute and despoiled home owners are to get relief. I know people who live in the towns and the cities who cannot now pay their mortgages or the interest upon them, but who will be relieved under this bill. If there is any man in a city who has a home, let that home be saved for him. I want to vote for him.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILCHRIST. Yes.

Mr. BOILEAU. A statement was made on the floor that loans to farmers could be made as high as $50,000. Is it not a fact that the farm mortgage bill provided loans should not exceed $25,000, and then only in exceptional cases with the endorsement of the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. GILCHRIST. The gentleman is entirely right. Why have this talk about a comparison between one bill and the other? Representing a farm district, I want to go along with this amendment, although I know that the farm loan bill was not as favorable to our farmers as this bill is to your home owners.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILCHRIST. Yes.

Mr. LANZETTA. Does not the gentleman agree that the farm bill took care of the majority of the farmers?

Mr. GILCHRIST. I certainly do not agree with that. I showed at the time that it cared for a small percentage only of the farmers out in my State; it provided for scarcely any of them. I do not think it took care of 15 percent of the farmers in my district. That is why I wanted to amend that bill. It should have been amended.

Mr. LANZETTA. I was led to believe that it took care of 75 percent.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Then the gentleman did not hear my speech. Nobody then or since then has answered, or even tried to answer, the facts and figures that I then gave to the House, nor the inferences that I then drew from these facts. These inferences were that the farm loan bill would not afford help to the average farmer who stood in average relationship to the farm mortgage situation in my State. I then begged for the right to amend that bill so that it would do us the good it ought to do. But this right was refused. I insisted on this then, and I insist on it now, because I want to lay the foundations for real, honest-to-goodness farm-mortgage relief.

But that is no reason why we should refuse to help the home owner in the city or the town or the village. Let us not wrangle and dispute peevishly about it, but let us go ahead with a wholesome intention to help all who are in distress and who want to save their homes.

Mr. DE PRIEST. Mr. Chairman, I call attention of the Members to the fact that under the provisions of this bill there can be no new mortgages made. According to the report gotten out by the committee, that is so. The report reads as follows:

This bill does not provide cash to take up mortgages or make new loans.

The bill provides that the bonds shall be exchanged for the mortgages, but it does not provide any cash to take up the mortgages under that interpretation. The chairman remarked awhile ago that if the limit is raised upon the value of the property, pretty soon the rich would be getting the money. The bill provides only for mortgages now in existence, and those mortgages are a matter of record and there is no way of changing them now so that anyone can get any benefit from it. This limitation ought to be raised. It makes no difference what the property is worth so long as the limit of the loan is kept to $10,000. It seems to me that at this time we could with justice to ourselves and in justice to the people we want to help raise the amount of the valuation so long as we hold the loan to $10,000.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DE PRIEST. Yes.

Mr. DONDERO. As long as the amount of the loan is fixed in the bill at $10,000, does it make any difference what the value of the property is above that?

Mr. DE PRIEST. Not a bit.

Mr. DONDERO. It seems to me it makes the security that much better for the new mortgage.

Mr. DE PRIEST. It is not a new mortgage. You can only benefit property that already has a mortgage upon it.

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will not be adopted. This bill, if it serves its purpose, will have to be properly administered, and it ought to be safeguarded here so that we can have the spread of it to help the poor class of borrowers, as indicated by the chairman a few moments ago. If you strike out this restriction upon the value of the land, it would affect the financing of these bonds. You have to sell the bonds or exchange them for the mortgage. When you strike out the restriction, you destroy the market for any bond that can be issued here, and that would destroy the purpose of the bill.

Mr. DONDERO. Are these bonds to be sold for the purpose of yielding cash, or are they to be given to the mortgagee in exchange for his mortgage?

Mr. GLOVER. It will have to be exchanged for the mortgage. Anyone who knows anything about this bill knows they will not sell enough of those bonds to have money to loan. They must be exchanged for the mortgage.

Mr. DONDERO. That is just the point.

Mr. GLOVER. If you enlarge the bill to that extent, it will destroy the market for the bonds, so that you cannot sell them for 50 cents on the dollar.

Mr. BRUNNER. Does the gentleman know there is a provision in this bill which prevents the rediscounting of the bonds?

Mr. GLOVER. Oh, if you have that in this bill, you cannot sell them at all.

Mr. BRUNNER. That is what you have got here.

Mr. GLOVER. Whenever you enlarge the purposes of this bill to that extent you will destroy the purpose of the bill and it will accomplish nothing.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

I wish the House would approach this proposition more from the standpoint of what I believe to be the real forgotten man. I sympathize very much with the gentleman from New York [Mr. Bacon] and the other gentlemen from suburban districts. I represent a district very much the same. We have in that district men and women who were justified, in prosperous times, in owning homes up to the value of $20,000 or $25,000. There are men and women who are suffering more than any of the individuals who have been described on the floor of the House today. There are men and women who will not go to the local relief association for aid for the reason that in former times their names were found on the list of those who contributed to relief funds.

I have in my hand a letter from the president of a building and loan association in my city, whose average loans will not exceed $15,000, which is an index to the fact that the raising of this limit to $20,000 or more is necessary if this proposition is going to reach the limit of people who should be reached in this relief.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to print in the RECORD at this point, as a part of my remarks, a letter from Mr. George H. Parsons, president of the Jefferson Park Building & Loan Association, of the city of Elizabeth, N.J., which is a strong argument for raising this limit to at least $20,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The letter referred to is as follows:

ELIZABETH, N.J., April 15, 1933.

HON. DONALD MCLEAN,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: I see from the newspapers that the new home bill which President Roosevelt is advocating is to apply to homes of $10,000 or less. I think to limit the cost of a home is unfair, as many of our citizens built homes around $20,000 in 1928 and 1929 on parcels of land worth $5,000 to $10,000, securing part of the money from building and loan associations, say, for example, $14,000, which has been reduced by three yearly payments. Some of these citizens are now out of employment, or their income has been reduced, and they are in danger of losing everything.

I am writing this from knowledge gained as president of the Jefferson Park Building & Loan Association of Elizabeth, N.J., and, therefore, protest as an officer of that association against any limit in the cost of a home. The whole thing should be based on a "home"—not a speculation. If a limit is set, I cannot see the fairness or justice in permitting a person owning a $10,000 home to borrow and prohibiting from borrowing a person who owns a $10,100 home.

Trusting you will use your influence to counteract this legislation, I am

Yours very truly,

GEO. H. PARSONS,
96 Wilder Street, Hillside, N.J.

Mr. STEAGALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCLEAN. I yield.

Mr. STEAGALL. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the amendment before us is not to raise the limit of valuation to $20,000 but to remove all limitations.

Mr. MCLEAN. Exactly, and I think that is a very wise provision, because then the result will be predicated upon the character of the individual who is being helped, and upon the percentage of value of his property, which is the proper way of making a mortgage loan, and will enable the Government of the United States to give relief where it is needed and deserved.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am very much interested in the successful passage of this bill, and I am very much interested in the bill obtaining the maximum of benefit intended by Congress in the passage of this bill.

I am interested in this emergency, in trying to assist the average small-home owner. I realize the weight of the arguments advanced by those who have spoken in support of the amendment, and I should like, if possible, to see every class of home owners benefited; but we are confronted with a practical problem, and we are desirous of trying to obtain an objective which will produce maximum results. We are extending the powers of government, under its optional functions, when we pass this bill, reluctantly, but because we feel that necessity prompts and requires it and because private agencies which have handled this problem in the past have fallen down and are at present unable to cope with the emergency and necessity that exist.

This amendment would be very fatal, in my opinion, to the practical objective that we are trying to attain. We propose to try and benefit the average small-home owner, and the average small-home owner is best reflected by those who own 1-, 2-, or 3-family dwelling houses, dwelling houses that the average person who is a home owner is capable of purchasing and owning.

Mr. DINGELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. DINGELL. What is the reason we cannot include a 4-family house in this bill. Is there any objection to that?

Mr. McCORMACK. That was considered last year when the present home loan law was under consideration. In fact, the committee reported out a bill covering 2-family dwellings, and I introduced an amendment increasing it to 3-family dwellings. At that time the 4-family dwelling amendment was offered by our former distinguished colleague from Wisconsin, Mr. Stafford. We wanted to limit the bill to dwellings. That was then the spirit and intent of the Membership. The 4-family dwelling house brings it more or less in the apartment-house status. I recognize that such owners are very deserving people, but there had to be some limitation; and, therefore, we felt that the 3-family dwelling house was a proper and reasonable limitation.

When the bill went over to the Senate, they put back the 2-family-dwelling provision, and we had to have the provision for the 3-family dwelling inserted when the bill went to conference. I had no objection to the 4-family dwelling then, but there must be a limitation somewhere. The 4-family house enters in the realm of an apartment house or building. For that reason, to keep the bill strictly within the dwelling-house feature, we limited it to 3-family dwellings.

This is the only answer I can give to my friend.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Can a 3-family house be purchased for $15,000?

Mr. McCORMACK. I should prefer to have the amount $20,000. The $20,000 clause is in the home-loan bank bill of last year. Personally, I should much prefer to have the limitation $20,000. But as between no limitation, as proposed in the pending amendment, and a $15,000 limitation, while recognizing the logic of the argument advanced in support of no limitation, for practical reasons I would vote to retain the $15,000 limitation. That will accomplish the greatest amount of good, and that is what we want to do. We cannot reach everybody. All we can do is to approximate a maximum, and this bill will accomplish this purpose.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. I find a very significant provision on page 11 of this bill, that the Federal Reserve Savings & Loan Association may loan on property having a value not exceeding $20,000. Why make it $15,000 in one place and $20,000 in another?

Mr. McCORMACK. As I just explained, personally I would rather have a limitation of $20,000.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, some time ago I sent an amendment to the desk. I wish 5 minutes in which to discuss it.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Chairman, I, too, have an amendment on which I wish to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, which the Clerk will again report for the information of the committee.

The Clerk again read the Brunner amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I sent to the desk some little time ago.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BACON: Page 2, line 3, after the word "first", insert the words "and second."

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. BURKE of California. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CELLER: Page 2, line 12, after the period insert a new sentence, as follows: "One- or two-family dwellings with a store shall qualify as a dwelling subject to a home mortgage under this act, where the owner resides in said property."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DOCKWEILER: On page 2, line 6, after the word "than", strike out the word "three" and insert in lieu thereof the word "four."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendments offered by Mr. LANZETTA: Page 2, line 6, after the word "dwelling", strike out the words "for not more than three families" and insert the following: ", apartment or tenement building."

Page 2, line 7, after the word "home", insert the following: "and by some of the tenants as and for living quarters."

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I shall ask a division of the amendment; and, pending that, I make a point of order against the first part of the amendment on the ground that it has already been acted on by the committee.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order in order to get a vote on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KENNEY: Page 2, line 8, strike out the words "and having a value not exceeding $15,000", and insert in lieu thereof the words "having an assessed value not exceeding $15,000."

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, I object; and I do so reluctantly, but the gentleman objected to my request awhile ago.

Mr. KENNEY. No; I did not object to the gentleman's request. The gentleman is mistaken.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DIMOND: Page 2, line 15, after subsection (d) of section 2, insert a new subsection to read as follows: "(e) The provisions of this act shall apply to the several States of the United States, to the District of Columbia, the Territories of Alaska and Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands of the United States."

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Chairman, this raises an entirely new question.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that debate on this section and all amendments thereto has been exhausted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The gentleman cannot be recognized for the purpose of discussing the amendment.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to discuss this amendment for 2 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the Delegate from Alaska?

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, I made the same request. Objection was made to my request. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the Delegate from Alaska.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DIMOND) there were—ayes 37, noes 97.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

LOAN BANK ACT

SEC. 3. Subsection (d) of section 4 of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act (providing for direct loans to home owners) is hereby repealed.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, a little while ago I offered an amendment to define the expression "home mortgage" to include both first and second mortgages. Under the bill as written homes with second mortgages are apparently placed at a great disadvantage.

I did this for the reason that most of the very small homes in this country have been financed by means of a first and second mortgage.

There is nothing in this bill that gives any relief to the owner of a very small home who may have a second mortgage on his property. If we had adopted the amendment which I offered and which I was prevented from debating, we could have defined the phrase "home mortgage" to include both first and second mortgages. The gentleman from Alabama, the chairman in charge of this bill, saw fit to shut off debate and apply a gag to free expression.

Remember that in a later provision of the bill 80 percent of the value can be lent, and this would have permitted the joining of the first and second mortgages up to 80 percent of present value, and not to exceed $10,000. Unless some provision for taking care of second mortgages is added to this bill many small-home owners will not benefit at all by the passage of this bill, and they will lose their homes.

The amendment which I offered was in the interest of the owner of the very small home, the man who has a small salary or the skilled laborer, and who is buying a house on the installment plan. By choking off debate the Committee has not had a fair opportunity to consider this question or to properly understand my amendment. I maintain, and I think most members of the Committee will agree with me, that the very small-salaried man or laborer who is buying a home on the installment plan has got to have a second mortgage if he is to own a home. This bill does not permit him to get any relief if besides a small first mortgage he has a second mortgage on his small home. The second-mortgage problem is not adequately taken care of in this bill.

Mr. JENKINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACON. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS. Someone asked that question of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] a little while ago and I do not remember the answer he gave, but is it not possible for the man to have a second mortgage and then refinance his first mortgage and in that way get the benefit of this bill?

Mr. BACON. I asked that question of the gentleman from Massachusetts. In my belief the answer is "no", if the owner of the second mortgage refuses to postpone it or insists on foreclosure. Most of the situations that I have come in personal contact with are cases where the owner of the second mortgage is the one who is forcing foreclosure.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. CELLER. I believe the gentleman will find the remedy on page 5, line 17, where there is provision made to take care of home mortgages and other obligations and liens secured by real estate.

Mr. BACON. I agree that there is one vague reference on page 5 to what might be a second mortgage, where it discusses other obligations and liens, but it seems to me that if we clarify and make certain this terminology on page 2, to define a home mortgage as including both the first and the second mortgage, we will do a great deal to relieve the small-home owner by making definite provisions to bring second mortgages under this bill.

Mr. CELLER. I quite agree with the gentleman.

Mr. BACON. Furthermore, it is a wise definition. Everybody knows that a definition of a home mortgage must include the second mortgage as well as the first.

Mr. DONDERO. And so long as it does not exceed 80 percent, what damage can it do?

Mr. BACON. None whatever.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that we may return to that portion of the bill, section 2, so that the amendment may be considered.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I may say that I shall object to the request unless the gentleman lets me speak before the request is put.

The CHAIRMAN. I hope the gentleman will pardon the Chair for overlooking the fact that the time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Bacon] had not expired at the time the gentleman was interrupted.

Mr. BACON. I will gladly let the gentleman from Maryland go ahead now. I think I have made my point clear, that unless you do something for the owner of the small home who may have a second mortgage on his home, you are not going to bring relief to the owners of the very smallest homes in the land, the very people we should all want to help.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CELLER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Bacon] submitted a unanimous-consent request that was not acted upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair withheld putting the request pending recognition of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH].

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my unanimous-consent request for the moment, so that the gentleman from Maryland may have 5 minutes in opposition to the pro forma amendment. I will renew the request later, as I believe if the Committee are permitted a vote, my amendment will be adopted and that we will bring some relief to the small-home owner who is burdened with a second mortgage.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, subsection (d), page 5, was written for the express purpose of taking care of liens of all kinds, whether it be second mortgages, judgments, mechanics' liens, liens for labor, or any other kind. The language is sufficiently broad to cover second mortgages. For that reason I shall be constrained to object to returning to the section referred to and voting again on the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BACON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. BACON. What objection is there to clarifying the language by specifying second mortgages? It is limited to 80 percent, and you have nine or ten thousand dollars limit in the bill. It is merely clarifying the situation by permitting first and second mortgagees to get together and relieve the home owner.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. The term "home mortgage" runs all through the bill, and to write in the gentleman's amendment would destroy the sense of the act in a great many particulars. As I said, the language in section (d) was written to take care of the situation the gentleman refers to.

Mr. HEALEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Yes.

Mr. HEALEY. Is it not true that the second mortgagee could defeat the purpose of the whole bill by refusing to agree to a plan that the first mortgage be refinanced?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Yes; all those questions could arise.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I will.

Mr. GILCHRIST. On page 2, line 3, you say the term "home mortgage" means first mortgage, and on page 5, line 16, the words "home mortgage" is again used. That could not mean anything less than a first mortgage, could it?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. The language I have quoted, "home mortgages and other obligations and liens secured by real estate", will include second mortgages.

Mr. BACON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BACON. What would happen? Suppose the owner of the second mortgage wanted to foreclose and insisted on foreclosure?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. The only way he could foreclose would be subject to the first mortgage.

Mr. BACON. Of course, that is true, and at the same time if the holder of the first mortgage is willing to let his mortgage stand. But under the terms of the bill the holder of the second mortgage could not foreclose.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. He could foreclose subject to the first mortgage.

Mr. STEAGALL. The language "home mortgage" is intended to define what is meant by the security which the Corporation possesses at the end of the transaction by which it takes up through the exchange of bonds all liens outstanding. That is the meaning of that language.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to return to section 3. Is there objection?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I object.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last four words. I am going to offer an amendment to page 4, and in taking the floor I want to anticipate that the steam roller may deprive me of making a statement at that time. We are approaching the week-end, and it may be desirable to finish the bill today, and perhaps I will not be given time to discuss my amendment.

It has been stated by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. McGugin], and properly so, that this bill is doomed to failure unless you can dispose of these bonds. No man is going to exchange his mortgage for these bonds unless these bonds are properly secured and can therefore be sold. All you do in this bill is to provide a Government guaranty of interest. You provide no Government guaranty of principal. The return is but 4 percent. I defy anyone to tell me where you are going to find a market for these bonds under present-day conditions. Let us follow out what will happen under this act. Suppose the man who has a mortgage which is held by the home owners' corporation or by this bank cannot pay his interest, cannot pay his amortization. He cannot go through the amortization arrangement. Will this corporation foreclose? What is the mortgagor going to do? He is going to his Congressman, and if his Congressman happens to be the chairman of this committee, he happily will go to him, and if the majority leader on this side and a minority leader on that side, he will go to them. He will go to a half dozen Congressmen, and he will tell them all of his troubles and what are the Congressmen going to do?

On behalf of his poor distressed constituents the Congressman is going down to the home-loan bank or to the home owners' corporation and endeavor to get extension after extension. He will endeavor to stop the foreclosure. If the foreclosure is in progress, is this corporation going to eject the owner from his property? I am sure that you are not going to get any ejections? Then what do you have? The prospective investors know what they will have. They will have just pieces of paper for security, empty rights, with no worthwhile privilege to foreclose due to political pressure. Under those circumstances you will never be able to dispose of $2,200,000,000 worth of these bonds. When you figure that there is over $9,000,000,000 of distressed property of home owners and apartments and you only have $2,200,000,000 to spend here, if you can spend it, you will see that you will not get any worthwhile relief whatever. You are giving the people of this country by this provision and the failure to provide for a guaranty of the principal nothing but a gold brick. With all due deference to the chairman of the committee and his colleagues, I say that they are living in a fool's paradise if they think that the people of New York and the people in all the money centers will come forward and buy these bonds.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. GOSS. Does not the gentleman realize that under the terms of these bonds they cannot be sold, but they can be deposited in the Treasury and we could print money against them?

Mr. CELLER. I do not see any prohibition against the sale. There is no such bar in the bill. But if they cannot be sold, that is all the worse. Then certainly the people will not invest in them, and I say that if you cannot sell them, as the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Goss] states, I believe erroneously, then indeed we are giving the people of this country a simon-pure gold brick.

Mr. BEEDY. Does not the gentleman realize that every dollar that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has paid out has not been by virtue of any sale of any bonds? Does the gentleman not know that all of this money has to be borrowed by the Treasury?

Mr. CELLER. That is different.

Mr. BEEDY. We are going farther on the same road.

Mr. CELLER. There is quite a difference between the bonds of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the bonds to be issued by this home owners' loan corporation. You have not the credit of the United States behind the home owners' loan corporation bonds. You have simply these "distressed" mortgages behind these bonds.

Mr. BEEDY. And none of them can be sold.

Mr. CELLER. Absolutely. There will be no market. But they may be sold.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. I have secured this time in order to read a letter from a constituent who is the president of a land company. He makes an inquiry which I think is pertinent. He says:

In connection with the two bills that are going to be passed, providing for refinancing of farm loans and city loans, it occurs to me that one condition is apparently being overlooked, viz: a great many people during the depression, in order to save eventual foreclosure expenses for the mortgagee, and in the event of redemption for themselves, have given deeds to the mortgagee on being given a specified time, usually a year, in which they can still redeem on paying up arrears, or in some cases a smaller amount.

The rights of these people should in some manner be covered so as to give them the benefit of such legislation as it is proposed to enact.

Can the chairman state whether or not the definitions on page 2 of the bill, and elsewhere, are broad enough so that it will include that class?

Mr. STEAGALL. Unquestionably, it will.

Mr. KVALE. I am glad to have that assurance for the RECORD.

Mr. STEAGALL. If the gentleman will read subparagraph (g) on page 9 he will find the provision which specifically covers loans to redeem or recover homes lost by owners by foreclosures or forced sale, and so forth.

Mr. KVALE. I thank the Chairman. Now, there is one other question in my mind, but I shall not formally bring it up because I do not believe, within reason, it could be held to be pertinent or germane to this discussion.

There is one class of property owners in my State, and in all other States, who just now are between the devil and the deep blue sea. There is no group, no agency, no company, no source of credit to which they can go. I am speaking about the owners of the small independent stores, the little independent merchants who are now faced with the problem of how to refinance their indebtedness, so that they may continue in business without being subject to foreclosure, and—worse than that—to loss of stock and everything in addition to their property under a deficiency judgment.

I am wondering if the committee has considered that group or the possibility of introducing another bill at a later date to cover that group of individuals?

Mr. STEAGALL. Of course, such a provision could have no proper place in this bill. We all share the solicitude which the gentleman feels for citizens of the country in the class to which he has alluded, but I have not yet seen any legislation designed to afford specific relief to that class.

Mr. KVALE. And none is in formative process now?

Mr. STEAGALL. Not that I know of.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

CREATION OF EMERGENCY LOAN CORPORATION

SEC. 4. (a) The Board is hereby authorized and directed to create a corporation to be known as the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, which shall be an instrumentality of the United States and which shall be under the direction of the Board and operated by it under such bylaws, rules, and regulations as it may prescribe for the accomplishment of the purposes and intent of this section.

(b) The Board shall determine the minimum amount of capital stock of the Corporation and is authorized to increase such capital stock from time to time in such amounts as may be necessary, but not to exceed in the aggregate $200,000,000. Such stock shall be subscribed for by the Secretary of the Treasury on behalf of the United States, and payments for such subscriptions shall be subject to call in whole or in part by the Board and shall be made at such time or times as the Secretary of the Treasury deems advisable. The Corporation shall issue to the Secretary of the Treasury receipts for payments by him or on account of such stock, and such receipts shall be evidence of the stock ownership of the United States. In order to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to make such payments when called, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and directed to allocate and make available to the Secretary of the Treasury the sum of $200,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, and for such purpose the amount of the notes, bonds, debentures, or other such obligations which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered under section 9 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended, to have outstanding at any one time is hereby increased by such amounts as may be necessary.

(c) The Corporation is authorized to issue bonds in an aggregate amount not to exceed $2,000,000,000, which may be sold by the Corporation to obtain funds for carrying out the purposes of this section or exchanged, as hereinafter provided. Such bonds shall be issued in such denominations as the Board shall prescribe, shall mature within a period of not more than 18 years from the date of their issue, shall bear interest at a rate not to exceed 4 percent per annum, and shall be fully and unconditionally guaranteed as to interest only by the United States, and such guaranty shall be expressed on the face thereof. In the event that the Corporation shall be unable to pay upon demand, when due, the interest on any such bonds, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to the Corporation the amount of such interest, which is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the Corporation shall pay the amount of such interest to the holders of the bonds. Upon the payment of such interest by the Secretary of the Treasury the amount so paid shall become an obligation to the United States of the Corporation and shall bear interest at the same rate as that borne by the bonds upon which the interest has been so paid. The bonds issued by the Corporation under this subsection shall be instrumentalities of the United States and shall so state on the face thereof, and shall be exempt, both as to principal and interest, from all taxation (except surtaxes, estate, inheritance, and gift taxes) now or hereafter imposed by the United States or any District, Territory, dependency, or possession thereof, or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority. The Corporation, including its franchise, its capital, reserves and surplus, and its loans and income, shall likewise be exempt from such taxation; except that any real property of the Corporation shall be subject to taxation to the same extent, according to its value, as other real property is taxed.

(d) The Corporation is authorized, for a period of 3 years after the date of enactment of this act, (1) to acquire in exchange for bonds issued by it, home mortgages and other obligations and liens secured by real estate (including the interest of a vendor under a purchase-money mortgage or contract) recorded or filed in the proper office prior to the date of the enactment of this act, and (2) in connection with any such exchange, to make advances in cash to pay the taxes and assessments on the real estate, to provide for necessary maintenance and make necessary repairs, to meet the incidental expenses of the transaction, and to pay such amounts, not exceeding $50, to the holder of the mortgage, obligation, or lien acquired as may be the difference between the face value of the bonds exchanged plus accrued interest thereon and the purchase price of the mortgage, obligation, or lien. The face value of the bonds so exchanged plus accrued interest thereon and the cash so advanced shall not exceed in any case $10,000, or 80 percent of the value of the real estate as determined by an appraisal made by the Corporation, whichever is the smaller. In any case in which the amount of the face value of the bonds exchanged plus accrued interest thereon and the cash advanced is less than the amount the home owner owes with respect to the home mortgage or other obligation or lien so acquired by the Corporation, the Corporation shall credit the difference between such amounts to the home owner and shall reduce the amount owed by the home owner to the Corporation to that extent. Each home mortgage or other obligation or lien so acquired shall be carried as a first lien or refinanced as a home mortgage by the Corporation on the basis of the price paid therefor by the Corporation, and shall be amortized by means of monthly payments sufficient to retire the interest and principal within a period of not to exceed 15 years; but the amortization payments of any home owner may be made quarterly, semiannually, or annually, if in the judgment of the Corporation the situation of the home owner requires it. Interest on the unpaid balance of the obligation of the home owner to the Corporation shall be at the rate of 5 percent per annum. The Corporation may at any time grant an extension of time to any home owner for the payment of any installment of principal or interest owed by him to the Corporation if, in the judgment of the Corporation, the circumstances of the home owner and the condition of the security justify such extension. As used in this subsection, the term "real estate" includes only real estate held in fee simple or on a leasehold under a renewable lease for not less than 99 years, upon which there is located a dwelling for not more than three families used by the owner as a home or held by him as a homestead and having a value not exceeding $15,000.

(e) The Corporation is further authorized, for a period of 3 years from the date of enactment of this act, to make loans in cash, subject to the same limitations and for the same purposes for which cash advances may be made under subsection (d) of this section, in cases where the property is not otherwise encumbered; but no such loan shall exceed 80 percent of the value of the property securing the same as determined upon an appraisal made by the Corporation. Each such loan shall be secured by a duly recorded home mortgage, and shall bear interest at the same rate and shall be subject to the same provisions with respect to amortization and extensions as are applicable in the case of obligations refinanced under subsection (d) of this section.

(f) The Corporation shall have power to select, employ, and fix the compensation of such officers, employees, attorneys, or agents as shall be necessary for the performance of its duties under this act, without regard to the provisions of other laws applicable to the employment or compensation of officers, employees, attorneys, or agents of the United States. No such officer, employee, attorney, or agent shall be paid compensation at a rate in excess of the rate provided by law in the case of the members of the Board. The Corporation shall be entitled to the free use of the United States mails for its official business in the same manner as the executive departments of the Government, and shall determine its necessary expenditures under this act and the manner in which they shall be incurred, allowed, and paid, without regard to the provisions of any other law governing the expenditure of public funds. The Corporation shall pay such proportion of the salary and expenses of the members of the Board and of its officers and employees as the Board may determine to be equitable, and may use the facilities of Federal home-loan banks upon making reasonable compensation therefor as determined by the Board.

(g) The Corporation is further authorized, for a period of 3 years from the date of the enactment of this act, to exchange bonds and to advance cash, subject to the limitations provided in subsection (d) of this section, to redeem or recover homes lost by the owners by foreclosure or forced sale by a trustee under a deed of trust within 2 years prior to such exchange or advance.

(h) Any person indebted to the Corporation may make payment to it in part or in full by delivery to it of its bonds, which shall be accepted for such purpose at face value.

(i) The Board is authorized to make such bylaws, rules, and regulations, not inconsistent with the provisions of this section, as may be necessary for the proper conduct of the affairs of the Corporation. The Corporation is further authorized and directed to retire and cancel the bonds and stocks of the Corporation as rapidly as the resources of the Corporation will permit. Upon the retirement of such stock, the reasonable value thereof as determined by the Board shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States and the receipts issued therefor shall be canceled. The Board shall proceed to liquidate the Corporation when its purposes have been accomplished, and shall pay any surplus or accumulated funds into the Treasury of the United States. The Corporation may declare and pay such dividends to the United States as may be earned and as in the judgment of the Board it is proper for the Corporation to pay.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. I am a member of the committee and I was on my feet seeking recognition to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan, a member of the committee, is recognized to offer an amendment. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] will be recognized later.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I offer an amendment which is at the Clerk's desk, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOLCOTT: On page 7, line 20, after the word "encumbered", strike out the semicolon and insert "and if the mortgagee or seller under purchase money, mortgage, or contract shall not accept the bonds of the Corporation in exchange as provided in subsection (d) of this section, and if the Corporation, within its discretion, finds that the necessary amount of the loan cannot be obtained from ordinary lending agencies, then it is likewise authorized to purchase by cash or otherwise the equity and/or interest of the mortgagee or seller under purchase money, mortgage, or contract, provided that the amount of such equity and/or interest and cash advances does not exceed 30 percent of the appraised value of the property."

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, if there is any criticism which anyone can have of this bill it is that it does not accomplish the purpose expressed in the President's message to Congress on April 13. In that message the President said that the reason for this bill which accompanied his message was as follows:

Implicit in the legislation which I am suggesting to you is a declaration of national policy. This policy is that the broad interests of the Nation require that special safeguards should be thrown around home ownership as a guaranty of social and economic stability, and that to protect home owners from inequitable forced liquidation in a time of general stress is a proper concern of the Government.

Now, we start out on the premise that this bill is going to help the home owner who is hard-pressed by a mortgagee, because if the mortgagor is not hard-pressed by the mortgagee there is no particular reason for this legislation. If the mortgagee is pressing the mortgagor for the payment of the mortgage it is only reasonable to presume that he is that kind of man who will enter into any deal with the idea that he is going to benefit his own pocketbook. I do not think, in a great many instances, the mortgagees will accept these bonds.

So for that reason, where the home owner has paid his mortgage down to within 30 percent of the value which the corporation will place upon the property, the amendment which I have offered authorizes the corporation to purchase the interest or equity of the mortgagee. In other words, it will authorize the corporation to advance the cash by which the operation between the mortgagee and the mortgagor may be terminated, and the mortgagor then may enter into a new obligation directly with the corporation.

As an example, we will assume a man has a home worth $8,000, and that he originally had a $5,000 mortgage on that home. He and his wife and family have skimped and pinched to pay that mortgage down to within a thousand dollars. Is it not good, cold business on the part of that mortgagee to insist upon foreclosure, rather than to take the bonds of the corporation which have a par value when presented to him of $100, and perhaps within 30 days will only have a value of $78? Is he not going to insist upon foreclosure? That is the kind of property we want this corporation to hold as security for its bonds. If we can get that kind of security, possibly we will have something behind these bonds by which they will be made more attractive to the purchasing public, and we will be able to build up a fund by which the purposes of this bill may be accomplished.

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. KVALE. I think the gentleman's amendment is a very important one, and I hope the committee will accept it, but why did the gentleman fix a limit of 30 percent rather than 40 or 50 percent?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I may say that the figure is purely arbitrary. I had in mind that if a man had paid his obligations down to within 30 percent of the valuation of his home, he should be helped. It is suggested as being possibly the most equitable figure we can arrive at and still allow the corporation to do business on a sound basis.

Mr. KVALE. The gentleman probably had in mind that the first mortgage was 50 percent.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. In the case the gentleman cited, it would be to the advantage of the man who held the mortgage to refuse to accept bonds, for the reason that he could acquire the property by foreclosure and thereby enrich his own pocketbook, unless this corporation were authorized to pay that amount in money and save the man's home?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Absolutely; because under this bill the mortgagor is at the complete mercy of the mortgagee, and unless the mortgagee accepts the bonds of the corporation there is absolutely not one scintilla of help which can be given under the terms of this bill to the mortgagor unless this amendment is adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] has expired.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me this amendment makes the bill of some value to those who really need it. Under the bill without this amendment, I cannot conceive any set of circumstances under which an individual might receive any benefit unless his property were so heavily mortgaged that it would be better for him to give the property to the mortgagee.

If the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan is accepted, then the man who has paid his mortgage down to a very small amount will have some chance to have his property by paying cash to the mortgagee.

If this amendment is not adopted, greater incentive will be provided for the man holding the mortgage to foreclose on it. This amendment is in line with what the President said he wanted us to do to relieve the home owners of this country.

We ought not to fix it so that the man who has paid his mortgage down to a small amount can be taken advantage of by the mortgagee demanding his pound of flesh. [Applause.]

Without this amendment we will have no bill that will afford relief to the man whose property is worth four or five times the outstanding amount of the mortgage where the mortgagee refuses to accept the bonds. This mortgagee will demand the sale of the property and will bid it in at the courthouse door at one fifth the value of the property.

If you want to help the home owners of the country, support this amendment. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina: Page 7, line 2, strike out the figure "5" and insert in lieu thereof the figure "4½."

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, briefly, this amendment is designed to reduce the interest rate on mortgage loans from 5 percent to 4½ percent.

I dislike to indulge in invidious comparisons or to even suggest that in our approach to legislation here we should have our minds on any particular class. For myself, I desire to think in national terms and to let my mind's eye visualize the people as a whole. All of us know that many a ship of state has been wrecked upon the rock of favoritism or special privilege. I believe that the entire Membership of this House are keenly concerned in seeing that our great Government treats all alike. About 2 weeks ago we passed the farm mortgage credit bill, which provided an extension to distressed farm mortgagors at 4½-percent interest. This amendment will place all mortgagors on an equal footing so far as the Government can influence their status. It is not my purpose to discuss the general purposes of the bill. I am going to support it in spite of the fact that it does not conform to my idea of the best way to meet the situation which it undertakes to remedy. With the many considerations involved, I am confident that its authors have done the best they could. Both our chairman and the ranking minority member have covered the salient features of the bill in a clear and effective manner.

If administered right and in keeping with the President's purpose, it can be made an instrument of great good and afford splendid relief to the thousands of distressed mortgage debtors who are living in constant fear and dread of the sheriff's hammer. The government that does not protect the worthy home owner during an emergency like this cannot survive or expect to be held in patriotic esteem and respect by its subjects. The home is the greatest institution in the land, regardless of its structure, style, or cost. From it the Nation receives its strength, and to it the Nation may in time of trouble look for its security.

My contention is that the home owner is entitled to every practical advantage which the Government can properly bestow. I maintain that he is entitled to the lowest interest charge consistent with sound financial practice and policy. In my judgment the mainspring of credit legislation should be for his protection. If the Government be justified in granting any privilege, it should be toward assisting the man with a family who wants to live in peace under his own roof. If you permit further dispossession of home owners through foreclosure in this crisis, you are treading a sure path which will lead inevitably to a complete breakdown of what is left of our civilization.

Besides the desirability of providing an equal rate of interest on all mortgages—and I personally would like to see the rate 3 percent, rather than 4½—under the mechanics of this bill an additional service cost of 1 percent would seem to be exorbitant. As many of you know, under the Federal home loan bank bill provision was made to give the banks a spread of 1½ percent to cover service charges and other essential income. If you will examine the present emergency measure you will see that the home owners' loan corporation is to be operated by and under the Federal Home Loan Bank Board. This being true, why is there any need for any additional service charge? Of course, it is admitted that the corporation will incur some expense. But one half of 1 percent on the total amount which may be loaned, and must be loaned if the relief proposed is extensive, will provide an income of more than $10,000,000. Now, it does not take a keen financial mind to perceive that the bonds proposed to be issued cannot possibly be marketed at any time in the near future, and must be used for exchange purposes. This means that the Treasury Department will have to furnish the money, as it is now doing to the Federal home-loan banks at a rate of 2 percent. Then, too, it must be remembered that this is a temporary, emergency corporation and not set up for profit-making purposes. It is therefore conceivable that a borrower through the two systems will pay the service charge of 2½ percent during this distressful time, when literally millions of good men cannot possibly take care of their families and keep their taxes paid.

All of us realize that capital charges constitute the insuperable barrier against an early readjustment to the new level of prices and new order of things. To break this Gordian knot other than by the sword of bankruptcy, the Government should lead the way in favor of a general scaling down of interest charges. [Applause.]

It should also, as soon as this emergency passes, cease forever the issuance of tax-exempt securities. Time, however, will not permit me to launch into a discussion of this feature of our financial system.

I have listened attentively to the criticisms which have been leveled at this bill by the Membership. Some have been just and some have been unjust. I am confident that through this measure the President hopes to be able to attain his objective in stopping foreclosures and providing ways and means to insure to the home owners free ownership of the individual's kingdom on earth. Candor, based upon a thorough understanding of the bill after weeks of study, compels me to say that I hope the laudable objectives can be attained. But to do so will depend largely upon the attitude and ability of the officers in charge and their capacity to drive advantageous bargains with the mortgagees.

Unless the mortgagee will agree to a reduction in the mortgage debt, which he should do under existing conditions, little relief beyond a breathing spell not to exceed 3 years can result to the borrower. The interest rate of itself, so far as reducing the mortgage debt, carries but a modicum of relief.

In my own judgment, I am not so sure but that it would have been better to have authorized the Board to take up worthy, bona-fide existing home mortgages at their present face value by exchanging therefor similar bonds bearing 2 percent interest, with the understanding that the mortgagor would have an extended period of years within which to discharge the obligation. [Applause.]

At this point I desire to call to the attention of the House that on the first day of this special session I introduced House Joint Resolution 54, which was referred to the Judiciary Committee. That bill proposes a 2-year suspension period on all debts secured by mortgage or other similar instrument and also all bonds issued by any State, Territory, possession, county, municipality, or other political subdivision. If there is any obligation which can afford to stand still during this emergency, it is a secured debt. And I know of no better way to impair the obligation of a contract today than to resort to the remedy provided for its collection. If this measure could be enacted into law, it would greatly aid in effectively working out the provisions of the bill which we are now considering. It would also encourage the debtor and creditor to effect a conciliation or compromise of the debt which would be fair to the lender as well as the borrower.

Out of approximately $20,000,000,000 in home-mortgage loans outstanding today, my information is that more than one half of this amount is today in default. I am likewise informed from reliable sources that it is very probable that within the next 6 months more than 60 percent of the counties and municipalities throughout the breadth and length of this great country will be unable to meet their maturing obligations and will go down in default. It is true that the provisions of this bill will assist not only the distressed mortgage debtors, but it will indirectly aid many individuals and institutions deserving assistance that are carrying these obligations, and also many municipalities and counties will benefit by reason of the provisions which authorize the Corporation to make cash advances to mortgagors to meet taxes and assessments.

In conclusion, let me say that, irrespective of the action taken by the House regarding this amendment, I shall support the measure, because I feel that it can be administered in a way to help many who are in trouble today. At the same time, I am conscious of the fact that there will be thousands who will be disappointed and perhaps left out. All of us recognize that no bill will do all that all of us would like for it to do and that there are certain limits beyond which the Government should not and cannot go in financial legislation. In good conscience and equity, I appeal to the Membership to support my amendment.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

My opposition is not to the amendment, but to the rate which the gentleman offers in the amendment, and I think at this time there should appear in the Record, appropriately, a telegram which was sent to me by a former colleague with reference to the farm mortgage bill, and which also applies in equal measure to this bill. With the permission of the Committee, I am going to read it:

If it is true that farm mortgage bill provides for 5 percent interest, I appeal to you and fellow progressives to vote against such damnable provision. Sanctioning by legislation at this late date of a 5-percent interest rate is not only unconscionable but indecent. By voting against the bill you will not only protect the farmer but will be voting for the best interest of the country and the future of our Republic. I am certain that administration and leadership sponsoring this bill have been not only misinformed and misled but deceived. Bankers' advice should not be heeded; they have not only been exposed of their wretched misconduct and selfishness and disregard of public interest but their incompetency as well. They are discredited and are now cringing, seeking to perpetuate a cruel system of exploitation. Congress must not permit them to capitalize the misery of the farmers and the workers from which they can get dividends for the next 40 years. Mark you that bankers will exchange existing mortgages for absolute good assured bonds provided in the bill. Interest rate cannot afterwards be lowered. You will recall my bill which provided for 3 percent interest of which only 2 percent would be paid to holders of present mortgage. At the time bankers with their backs to the wall were only too glad to get such a measure; it was either that then or a complete loss of farm mortgages. The courageous spirit of self and home preservation displayed by the farmers of Iowa will be emulated all over the country unless their interest rate is brought down. If proper protest is displayed now the country will back such action and a low rate of interest can be written into the law. Bankers are chuckling that they are putting something over on Congress and the American people. They are too stupid to see the handwriting on the wall. Stick to 3 percent interest, of which 2 to the mortgage holders as per my bill, which you will find on file and which at the time I can assure you had the approval of persons up to the very highest of present administration.

F. H. LaGUARDIA.

[Prolonged applause.]

Mr. LOZIER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KVALE. I yield.

Mr. LOZIER. Is it not true that under normal conditions the interest rate on money employed in productive industry and in all lines and vocations is tremendously influenced by the rate on Government or semi-Government or quasi-Government obligations; and by leaving this rate at 5 percent, does it not tremendously influence the rate on other loans in all lines of industry?

Mr. KVALE. Inevitably you thereby hold up the entire interest and credit structure. It is not a matter of the saving of a particular amount estimated by taking your entire mortgage blanket of 20 billion and then taking 1 percent of that as the saving to the home owners, it is the effect upon the interest rates and the structure of your entire credit system throughout the Nation.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KVALE. I yield.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I assume the gentleman clearly understands that this corporation is not being set up for the purpose of making money out of distressed mortgage bonds?

Mr. KVALE. Certainly.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment as a substitute for the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CELLER as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina: On page 7, line 2, after the word "rate", strike out the word "of" and insert "not exceeding."

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, the spread that exists in the bill as it came out of the committee is 1 percent. The corporation pays 4 percent for money and gets 5 percent in return. One percent on the potential possibility of loaning the $2,200,000,000 is $22,000,000. Twenty-two million dollars is an excessive profit to make for this home owners' loan corporation.

I agree with the gentleman from North Carolina that the Federal home-loan banks will do all the work. There will probably be no duplication of expense, and therefore, in that light, $22,000,000 will be more than excessive. We ought to reduce the interest rate.

Now, the interest rate for money in sufficient quantities may be reduced even lower than the amount indicated by the gentleman from North Carolina. I think it would be better, therefore, to leave the matter in the discretion of the directors of the corporation rather than to fix it at an arbitrary limit of 5 or 4½ percent. If the profits are sufficient, it may be reduced to 4½ percent or even more.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Is it not the gentleman's experience, based upon his contact with banking corporations and knowledge of Government agencies, that when a maximum rate is written into a bill, a rate less than that is rarely, if ever, extended to the borrower?

Mr. CELLER. I do not think that can be stated in reference to an instrumentality of the Government. I do not believe that if they make a loan as the result of this spread that they would exact from the home owner, whom they are sworn to relieve, an amount not consistent with the profit they are making.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Does the gentleman understand that all the money now in the coffers of the home-loan banks in the United States has been borrowed from the Government at 2 percent and is being loaned to building and loan associations at 5 to 5½ percent? Now, the gentleman surely does not think that another 1-percent profit for operating expenses should be allowed with its additional burden on the home owner? Such a service cost seems exorbitant to me.

Mr. CELLER. I do not think the gentleman from North Carolina appreciates or apprehends the force of my amendment. I do not put it at 5 percent. Let it be a sliding scale. It may go lower, it may go to 3 or even 2½ percent. Let there be a discretionary power in the hands of the directors. I say let the interest rate be "not exceeding 5 percent."

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I agree with the gentleman so far as providing a plan which offers a chance for a rate lower than 4½ percent. Let me say here I have the utmost faith and confidence in the leadership of the present Federal Home Loan Bank Board under the supervision of Mr. Stevenson. I am also a staunch supporter of the system. If properly administered, it will become a great and beneficent institution. It is underlaid with wonderful social and economic accomplishments. At the same time I admit that up to now, for reasons which I shall not enumerate, its usefulness has been dwarfed and only partially made effective. As a discount system it should one day equal the Federal Reserve System. There is power for good in it.

Mr. CELLER. I do not know anything about D.D., but the gentleman, I think, ought to accede to my amendment and give them a chance to reduce it below 4 percent if they can really do it.

Mr. LOZIER. Will not the gentleman offer his amendment as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina, not to exceed 4½ percent?

Mr. CELLER. I will accept that amendment. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment so that it will read "not exceeding 4½ percent."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to modify his substitute amendment by striking out "5 percent" and inserting "4½ percent." Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the modified amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Modified amendment by Mr. CELLER, as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina: Page 7, line 2, after the word "rate" strike out the word "of" and insert "not exceeding 4½ percent."

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. There is not a Member of this House nor a citizen of the country outside of this House who would not like to see the debt-burdened people of the Nation relieved of interest charges as far as it is possible to do so. But the question before this House is a practical one. It is easy to talk about reducing interest rates, and it is desirable to do so as far as we can. But more important than the reduction of interest on loans is the proposition of being able to secure funds with which to discharge debts in order that home owners and their families may not be turned out of their homes and into the streets. That is the situation which we are trying to relieve. It is not a mere question of interest rates. Many of these people cannot pay the present rates. These rates now run up to 8 and 10 percent and even higher. Many of them cannot pay 5 percent, and those who cannot pay 5 percent, of course, cannot pay 4½ percent. We have a different proposition in this bill from the provision carried in the original home loan bill to which the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HANCOCK] refers. Under the original home loan bill, property eligible for loans cannot be accepted for loans above 40 percent of its value.

The gentleman talks about the original home-loan bank system and of the interest rates paid by those banks, but the facts are, as has been pointed out here repeatedly, the original home-loan bank system down to this hour has proven wholly inadequate to grant the relief so much needed by home owners of this country. The two propositions are not in any legitimate sense related. The bill now under consideration is an emergency piece of legislation. The corporation to be organized is separate and distinct from the original home-loan bank system. It is intended to render a service entirely different. Under this bill a home owner may obtain a loan up to 80 percent of the value of his home. It is far more important that the home owner get the largest possible amount in order to save his home than it is that the interest rate be reduced by a mere trifle.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. In just a moment. It is considered necessary to have a spread of 1 percent in order to administer this emergency system with this liberal valuation provision and to accomplish the purpose for which it is intended. This is the opinion of all who are to be charged with the duty of carrying out the law. If we reduce the interest on the mortgages, we will accentuate the difficulties anticipated by many Members that will confront the administrators of this law in the effort to exchange bonds for mortgages.

Back of those loans not only is the interest to be guaranteed by the Government but the basic protection of these bonds is the security back of the loans, plus the additional protection of the $200,000,000 initial capital of the corporation. This bill has been carefully worked out. There is no one who is not just as anxious as my friend to reduce interest rates. We should all like to do it, but what we want to do above and beyond all things else, as far as we can within the limits of this legislation, is to save the homes of the people. If you hamstring this board as this amendment would do, you will cause many applications of distressed home owners to be turned down, and many citizens in danger of losing their homes will be unable to obtain loans. That is what is involved in this situation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. STEAGALL. If I may have 1 minute more, I will yield. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Is it not the judgment of the chairman of our committee that none of these bonds will be sold to the public?

Mr. STEAGALL. I do not know that they will be sold. That is not contemplated. It is expected that they will be exchanged for mortgages.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Is not the gentleman willing to admit that these bonds are to be used primarily to exchange for mortgages?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Then what difference does it make about the interest rate?

Mr. STEAGALL. Gentlemen have argued here repeatedly that it is going to be impracticable to secure exchange of these bonds for mortgages in order to accomplish the purposes of this act, and every time you strike at the security back of those bonds you have made it more difficult to negotiate the exchange for a mortgage that will save some citizen's home. That is the real object to be accomplished by this legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has again expired.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words. I have not had anything to say with reference to this bill, but it occurs to me that this amendment, as the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL] says, strikes at the very vitals of what the Government is trying to do with reference to saving the homes of this country. I cannot refrain, therefore, from expressing my views with reference to these two amendments which are pending. I agree with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL], and certainly he expresses what is in the heart and mind of every Member of this House, that we want to give the very lowest possible rate of interest to those people who owe this money. There is no question about that, and if the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] had left his amendment as he originally introduced it, providing that it should not exceed 5 percent, I would have gladly voted for it.

Now, gentlemen, let us not possibly destroy this bill, as you may do as we sit here, merely for what the gentleman from Alabama says is a trifle in interest. The gentleman has called attention to the fact that this bill undertakes to give the mortgagor now an opportunity to receive money up to the extent of 80 per cent of the value of his property, something, we know, that he cannot now do from private interests. You know and I know that in many instances people are now paying upon their homes interest amounting not to 6 percent but in some cases 8 and 10 and even 12 percent, of which I have heard. I am entirely in sympathy with what the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HANCOCK] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] are seeking to accomplish. They are seeking to help the home owners, as we all are.

I do not want to see this interest any higher than it should be, but we cannot afford to run the risk of making it impossible to carry out the purposes of this bill by lowering the rate of interest to a point beyond that which the Board thinks is necessary in order to carry it out.

Now, we talk about 4-percent bonds. The mortgagee is expected to take those bonds. Is that not a fact? He takes them at 4 percent interest. What security has he for his bonds? The Government guarantees the interest, and he must look to the property itself to pay the principal; and yet, up until yesterday, if I remember correctly, bonds bearing 3½ percent interest, bonds of the Government itself, for which the Government is responsible both for the principal and interest, were selling at less than par. So there is something in what these gentlemen say with reference to the possibility of the mortgagee's not taking these 4-percent bonds.

Now, what must be paid out of the 1 percent? All expenses of administration must be paid; all losses that may be incurred by the Board upon the property upon which it lends money must be paid. I do not know whether it will require 1 percent or not; neither do you gentlemen know whether it will require 1 percent or not. If it does not, then I do not want to see them charge 5 percent. I want to see them charge only that amount which is necessary to economically carry out this law in letter and in spirit, in the interest of the home owners of this country, and to enable them to save their homes; but I fear that if we undertake to change this rate of interest which has been approved by the Home Loan Bank Board, which has been carefully considered by gentlemen just as patriotic and just as anxious to serve the people as you and I, we may endanger and destroy just what we are trying to do in the passage of this bill.

What does one half of 1 percent mean upon the greatest amount of loan that can be made? It only means $50 per year. That amounts to something, of course, but I would rather see this home-loan bank charge even 5 percent than run the risk of destroying this bill and the purposes for which we are passing it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] has expired.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the proforma amendment. I rise to endorse what the chairman of the committee and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] have said. If the gentleman from New York [Mr.

CELLER] had not withdrawn his original amendment and changed it from not to exceed 5 percent to 4½, I should have voted with him; but as it is, I shall now move as a new amendment to insert the words "not to exceed" on page 7, in line 2, before the word "five", making it read "at the rate of not to exceed 5 percent."

Mr. CELLER. The gentleman offers that as a substitute to my amendment?

Mr. LUCE. No; as a separate amendment; as an independent amendment.

Mr. CELLER. The gentleman will offer it?

Mr. LUCE. I do offer it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. LUCE. No, Mr. Chairman; I offer an amendment to the section.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order that the amendment is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment, as a substitute for an amendment, pending. The Clerk will hold the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts until the pending amendment and the substitute therefor are disposed of.

Mr. LUCE. Then I hope that the House may vote down the pending amendment in order that my amendment may be considered. Furthermore, I desire to add this observation: That we may legislate here as to what interest we will ask the people to pay, but we cannot by legislation compel the lender of money to lend at a lower rate than he sees fit to charge. The basic point in this matter is the price at which you may sell the bonds. We all know the grave uncertainties that confront us in the next 3 years. The price of money in that time may rise or it may fall. The prudent course is to leave this to the judgment of the board, by imposing a maximum in the bill—4 percent upon what we borrow, 5 percent upon what we lend—and trust this Board, which will undoubtedly last at least 3 years in its present control, to get lower rates for borrowing or make lower rates for lending as the opportunity may come. Therefore I hope the amendment will be defeated and that my subsequent amendment may be adopted.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the substitute amendment, which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HEALEY in lieu of the Celler amendment: Page 7, line 2, after the word "rate", strike out the word "of" and insert "not exceeding."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the substitute offered by the gentleman from New York for the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, my amendment to the substitute is the same as the original amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] at a rate of interest not to exceed 5 percent.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEALEY. I yield.

Mr. LUCE. The gentleman is offering to amend the Celler amendment in its present shape; and the effect of his amendment would be to make the language read: "Not to exceed 4½ percent."

Mr. HEALEY. Not to exceed 5 percent.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment be read for the information of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HANCOCK] for the information of the House and the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

There was no objection.

The Clerk again read the Hancock amendment and the Celler substitute amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY].

The Clerk again read the amendment offered by Mr. HEALEY to the substitute amendment.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I think the parliamentary situation is that the first amendment, the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina, was for 4½ percent. The gentleman from New York offered a substitute amendment providing that the rate not exceed 5 percent. The chairman of the committee then amended the substitute to change the rate to 4½ percent.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asked unanimous consent to amend his substitute and make the rate 4½ percent.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEALEY. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I take it the parliamentary situation is we have first to vote upon the amendment to the substitute, which is to the effect that the rate shall not exceed 5 percent.

I believe this is quite consistent with the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts. It is consistent with the remarks of the gentleman from Tennessee to the effect that you will have a sliding scale according to the market price of the bonds, but that the interest shall in no circumstance exceed 5 percent.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEALEY. I yield.

Mr. LUCE. If the interpretation just given by the gentleman from New York is correct, it will accomplish what I meant to accomplish by a subsequent amendment. As I understood the Chair to state the question, my colleague has simply inserted the words "not exceeding" in front of "4½."

Mr. HEALEY. My amendment provides that the interest rate shall not exceed 5 percent.

Mr. LUCE. I have no desire to offer amendments merely for the honor of having offered them, and I am pleased to yield to my colleague from Massachusetts.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment to the substitute amendment offered by myself, and do so planning to take merely a minute or two to again call to the attention of the Committee that the home owners' corporation is a temporary proposition. It is being set up with the idea of meeting this present emergency. It is to be operated by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board. Still under the bill it is proposed to charge the borrowers 1 percent above the interest rate they pay on their bonds, which every informed student of finance knows cannot be sold until long after the urgent need for the funds has passed. Therefore the money must, as anticipated by the bill, be furnished by the Treasury.

I am getting sick and tired, as a working Member of this House, being led, so to speak, with a ring in my nose. [Applause.] After working for weeks on a bill to have a Member, even like the distinguished, able, and affable leader, stand up here and suggest that a member of the committee favoring and supporting the legislation is trying to wreck the bill is displeasing. He surely could not mean to convey such impression. He is entirely incapable of being unfair.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I yield.

Mr. BYRNS. I am standing with the chairman of the gentleman's committee, the ranking member of the committee, the gentleman from Wisconsin; and I understand every member of the gentleman's committee save the gentleman himself and one other—I know my friend the gentleman from North Carolina feels as I do toward the distressed home owner and is actuated by the best motive.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Now, let me remind this body that this is a representative form of government. There are three distinct branches of it. We are trying to go along harmoniously and like plans whether they fit in with our ideas or not. Let me also say here and now that I am 100 percent behind the administration. I am even willing to bury temporarily definite convictions of long standing and submit gracefully to being called a rubber stamp, but, my God, are we to embalm our bodies and chloroform our minds? Cannot a man think out loud in this House any more, and especially when he is conscientiously trying to perform a duty and service to his country? [Applause.] Has he got to be condemned for that procedure, or perchance accused of disloyalty? Are we not here for debate to insure the wisdom and justice of laws? These are impersonal observations that I must get off my chest. This policy should be abandoned and efforts for good accredited rather than discredited. We are all, I feel, working for the same end and each man's honest views should be accorded respect.

Mr. BYRNS. Is not the gentleman a little sensitive? I never accused him of trying to wreck this bill. I did not accuse the gentleman of trying to wreck it.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I regret that I so interpreted the gentleman's statement.

Mr. BYRNS. Your interpretation was entirely wrong.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I believe I am right, and I am trying to have my view considered on its merits, unprejudiced by the implication that it would cause wreckage to the bill.

Mr. BYRNS. I simply said that I feared the effect of the gentleman's amendment would be to wreck this bill.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I gladly accept my friend's explanation and abhor the misunderstanding.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY] to the substitute offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] for the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HANCOCK].

The amendment to the substitute for the Hancock amendment was agreed to.

The substitute for the Hancock amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The Hancock amendment, as amended by the substitute, was agreed to.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri: Page 7, line 17, after the word "cash", strike out the words down to and including "encumbered" in line 20, and insert in lieu thereof the words "to home owners."

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, my amendment strikes at the very heart of this question. You have an opportunity now to say whether you desire to make a direct cash loan to the home owner or whether you want to go along in the way that the bill provides, which I fear will only be a help to the one who holds the mortgage, if to anyone.

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HANCOCK], a member of the committee who has studied this question for some 5 weeks, tells you that the bonds are not going to be sold. If that be so, what value is the bill? Suppose the mortgagee refuses to take the bonds, and the gentleman from Michigan has said that he will probably not take them. Who is going to take them?

Is there a man in this House who will deny that the laws of the various States of this country do not prohibit building and loan associations, prohibit savings banks, and prohibit insurance companies from purchasing securities of the character described in this bill? I pause for any Member of this House to cite any law which will permit the building and loan associations, the savings banks, or the insurance companies to take these bonds where the interest alone is guaranteed by the Government. No one seems to contradict this statement, and if it be true, who is going to take the bonds and where is the relief coming to the home owner?

My amendment seeks to do what I have been trying to do on this floor for several years.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. Does the gentleman think the mortgagee will take the bonds in preference to the mortgage he holds?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I do not.

Mr. KELLER. Why not?

Mr. DONDERO. Because it is not guaranteed by the Government.

Mr. KELLER. But it is not taxable.

Mr. MOREHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. MOREHEAD. I do not thoroughly understand the gentleman's amendment. Will the gentleman again explain it?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. My amendment provides that the loan can be made direct to the home owner and it shall not exceed 80 percent of the present appraised value of the property. It is the same amendment I offered to the present home loan bank law.

The question is whether you want to make a direct loan to a home owner or whether you do not want to make a direct loan to the home owner.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Where are you going to get this cash that you are handing out?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. You secured it for other purposes. You loaned money direct to the farmer to buy seed to plant and the security is a crop, if he gets it. You loaned money direct to the farmer to buy cattle, if he had feed, and your security was the cattle, with no telling what was going to happen to the price of cattle. You loaned money direct to the farmer to purchase feed for his cattle, and all the security you had was the cattle.

If a man's home and the ground it is on are not better security than that, I do not want to have anything to do with such a bill. The home is better security than anything the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has as collateral for loans.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Where are you going to get this cash?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Where did you get it to lend to the railroad companies, where did you get it to lend to the insurance companies, where did you get it to lend to the other great corporations? Where is the real foundation of the country if it is not in the home? The Government still has credit.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. The thing you want to do is to print greenbacks.

Mr. HOEPEL. May I answer the gentleman from Oregon?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. With pleasure, if you desire.

Mr. HOEPEL. We can get $1,000,000,000 from the postal savings fund at 2 percent, if the gentleman wants to know, which is now being lent to the bankers at 2½-percent interest.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. As I have stated, here is a chance to decide the question, once for all, of whether or not you want to do business direct with the home owner. Never mind handing him any more gold bricks or extending false hopes. If you want to do something for him loan him the money to save his home direct. [Applause.]

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the result of adopting this amendment would be the dropping of the average interest rate in this country by 1 percent.

There are 11,442 building and loan associations, with assets of eight billion four hundred and seventeen million and odd dollars. These associations are not the property of the rich. They are the property of people in moderate circumstances. Many members of the associations would be classed as very far from rich. This proposal in its ultimate result would cost the members of these associations, people of moderate means, $84,000,000 a year by lowering the interest rate. If it reduced the rate in savings banks in the same way, it would add about the same amount of money to the loss, chiefly of wage earners and others with small resources. Also it would in some degree increase the cost of carrying all life insurance.

This is a proposal to lower the inducement to save, to lower the inducement to gather together the money of the masses for their own welfare. As the gentleman said, this will go to the heart of the bill, and if this amendment is adopted it will go to the heart of the thrift of the people of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. MCGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, let us carefully observe what is really done by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri. I hope the Members will look at the bill, page 7, line 15:

The Corporation is further authorized for a period of 3 years from the date of the enactment of this act to make loans in cash.

Now, where is this new corporation that is being set up going to obtain money with which to make loans in cash? Under the terms of the bill it takes $200,000,000 from the Treasury and the rest of the money is obtained by selling bonds at 4-percent interest, of which the Government guarantees the interest but not the principal.

I can see how it is possible for this board to dispose of 4-percent bonds which the Government only guarantees the interest where mortgage holders are willing to exchange their mortgages for bonds in this corporation. Why, because the man who holds the mortgage may feel that the mortgage is not any too secure and be glad to exchange it for 4-percent bonds which the Government will guarantee the interest.

As noble as may be the purpose of the gentleman from Missouri, if you adopt this amendment what does it mean? That the corporation will loan to individuals in cash, but if you do that with this bill you break faith with these people, lead them to false hopes, because the corporation is not going to have the money to loan to the people.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Are you not breaking faith when you say you are going to loan the money—have you any assurance that you can sell the bonds?

Mr. MCGUGIN. You are going to break faith when you say that you will loan money to individuals if you have not got the money to loan.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. What assurance have you that they can sell these bonds?

Mr. MCGUGIN. That is what I am telling you; that is why your amendment will not work.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCGUGIN. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. Does the gentleman think that the mortgagee should be put in any different class from the people who refuse to buy the bonds because they are not guaranteed by the United States Government?

Mr. MCGUGIN. I do not understand what the gentleman means.

Mr. DONDERO. If you cannot sell the bonds to the people because they are not guaranteed, are you going to ask the mortgagee to take them in place of a mortgage?

Mr. MCGUGIN. He may take his choice between keeping his mortgage or exchanging it for these bonds. I really doubt that they are going to do it, and that is why I think the bill may be impractical. Here is what the truth of this thing is. If you want to make these loans, be fair enough to make some provision for this corporation to obtain the money. There is only one way to do that, and that is to place a provision in the bill that the Government will guarantee the principal and the interest; and if you do not do that, then do not hold out to the people of this country that you are going to lend them money when this corporation cannot obtain the money to loan them, because all the power you have given to the corporation to obtain money is to try to sell the bonds on which the Government guarantees only the interest and not the principal.

Mr. KELLER. Is the gentleman going to offer such an amendment? If not, I shall be glad to offer it.

Mr. MCGUGIN. I should be very glad to let the gentleman offer it. If you provide that the Government guarantee the payment of the principal of these bonds, you have not done a thing that was not done in the Reconstruction

Finance Corporation, because every dollar that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation borrows the Government guarantees the repayment of, principal and interest. [Applause.] The bill providing for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation authorized the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to borrow money on its bonds and guarantees the repayment of the bonds, principal and interest, and in turn the Reconstruction Finance Corporation loans the money to those institutions which are the beneficiaries under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kansas gets up here daily waving his hands, and in a vociferous manner shouts "When are you going to do it, and how are you going to do it?" I sit and listen to him sometimes until my very insides growl. I say that the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] is right. It provides for direct loans by the home owners' loan corporation created under this act, and if this bill is what the proponents claim it to be they should have no objection whatsoever to this amendment. One of the most disheartening and terrible things committed by recent Congresses has been the enactment of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act. The small-home owners throughout the country were led to believe that this measure was passed for their benefit to give them some relief from mortgage foreclosures and from forfeitures of real-estate contracts. Today we have the sad confessional spectacle of the senior members of the Banking and Currency Committee plainly stating that at no time was it ever intended that the small-home owner or those who had lost their homes would ever get any relief, direct or indirect, from the Federal Home Loan Bank Act. They now bluntly tell us that the measure was passed for the relief of the building-and-loan associations throughout the country who were suffering for the reason that their assets were frozen; and, to add insult to injury, they admit that in essence this bill follows the same course although couched in different terminology.

I sat up until late studying the provisions of this bill, planning on putting amendments thereto that it might equitably reach the destitution and dire need of many of the people of the State of Washington, as well as those of the other States of the Union, but I am reconciled to the fact that to press these amendments now would be a useless gesture unless the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] is adopted. I feel certain that our President did not have such a bill as this in mind when he sent his message to Congress asking for relief and protection for the small-home owner, and no member of the committee has dared state that the President approves this bill in its present form.

Coming back to answer the question of the gentlemen from Kansas as to where we are going to get the money in the event that this amendment is passed, let me say that if we give the small home-owner the same rights through this corporation which we are giving the bankers today we will have no difficulty whatsoever in obtaining the money. The chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee sits here today and I ask him to deny that under the 1931 Glass-Steagall amendment to the Federal Reserve Act the banks can take bonds, their own bonds or Government bonds, and deposit them with the Federal Reserve banks, which will in turn issue to them Federal Reserve bank notes, which they in turn use as legal tender; and, as far as the people are concerned, they are legal tender. If the mortgagees refuse to accept the 4-percent bonds provided for in this act in exchange for the mortgages they now hold, then certainly the home owners' loan corporation can deposit these bonds with the Federal Reserve System and get Federal Reserve notes for them, can they not? Is that money?

Mr. MCGUGIN. Can you do that under the terms of this bill?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. It does not have to be in this bill. This amendment was passed in 1931 for the banks to use it in this manner, and there is no reason why the Federal home-loan bank cannot do the same with the United States bonds at its disposal.

Mr. CELLER. Where is the gentleman's authority for that statement that they can go to the Federal Reserve bank and do what the gentleman says?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Oh, ask the Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. CELLER. Where does the gentleman get his authority?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Ask the Chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee. The gentleman thinks that because I am a new Member that I do not know what I am talking about, does he?

Mr. CELLER. No, indeed, I do not. I have the greatest respect for the gentleman's knowledge, but I do wish the gentleman would give us the chapter and phrase of the authority. If the gentleman wants to ask the Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, he can do so.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I will say that it is a matter of fact. I refer to the Glass-Steagall amendment to the Federal Reserve Act of 1931. It is a matter of common knowledge, and if the gentleman from New York does not know it, then he does not know what is going on in the Federal Reserve System.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. In the home loan bank bill passed last year there was a provision providing for the expanding of the currency in the sum of $995,000,000. They there permitted the Government bonds bearing interest up to 3 1/4 percent, as I remember it, the same privilege that consuls have now. They have the privilege of depositing them and receiving new currency.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Yes; new currency. You did it for the banks, but when one suggests that it be done for the little-home owners you hear cries of "greenbacks" or "fiat money." The thing that bothers me about this so-called "home owners loan bill" is that they constantly talk about the poor little-home owner, and still the heads of the committee will not deny that the little-home owner cannot get a loan unless it first meets with the approval of some building-and-loan association and through it. It is the same tactics they used before the last war to instill the hatred for the so-called "Huns" by telling gruesome stories of how the German soldiers ravaged Belgian maidens and were running around with Belgian babies on their bayonets. In order to get this measure through they come out and talk about the poor little-home owner, when in fact this bill is nothing more or less than out-and-out relief for the bankers and the mortgage companies.

They call it a home owner's relief bill, but to do so they do violence to the English language. The amendment of the gentleman from Missouri is absolutely in order, and again I reiterate that if they cannot get the money according to the so-called "regular scheme of things by way of appropriations", then let them use the same scheme that they used for the bankers under the Glass-Steagall amendment of 1931—have the bonds deposited and give the people Federal Reserve bank notes with which to pay their mortgages.

No one can deny that this money can be made absolute legal tender for the payment of debts, both public and private, and if the mortgagees refuse to accept it, it will be just too bad for the mortgagees. I think anyone who has any knowledge of law, or has been in a court room, will recognize whereof I speak.

Again, I want to point out that this present bill is nothing more or less than relief for mortgagees. It proposes to do nothing more than give to the holders of mortgages Government bonds bearing interest at 4 percent per annum, interest guaranteed by the Government of the United States for mortgagees which these mortgagees feel doubtful about. Is there a reasonable-minded person within the hearing of my voice who thinks for one minute that any mortgagee will accept these bonds in lieu of a mortgage that is sound and secure? I say that they will not.

It is my sincere hope that this amendment will be adopted. If it is not, then many of us will be put in the same position in which we were put upon the farm mortgage relief bill, being compelled to vote for it because it will give some relief to a small percentage of select-home owners, for I cannot put myself in the position of voting against any measure as long as it will give a little help, but I feel absolutely certain that if this bill passes without this amendment providing for direct loans to the small-home owner that the small-home owner's condition generally will be worse 6 months from now than it is today unless other measures are passed to counteract its evil effect. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by my colleague the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN]. While it embodies a wise public policy and its adoption would tremendously augment the benefits that would come from this legislation, I recognize the difficulty of engrafting it onto the pending bill, because, while its purposes are wholesome and benevolent, it is not in harmony with the real purpose and intent of the bill we are considering, and unless this measure is materially amended in other paragraphs, the Cochran amendment could not be easily correlated with the structure around which this act is built. If this amendment is adopted, it will be necessary to rewrite and radically alter the provisions for financing this legislation. It is regrettable that the authors of this bill so constructed and fashioned it as to make it practically impossible to provide for direct loans to home owners. [Applause.]

I speak deliberately and seriously when I say that this bill does not meet the expectations and demands of the American people. It does not offer the home owners the type and degree of relief to which they are entitled. Even if sympathetically administered its operation will be disappointing to the home owners for whose relief it is supposed to be enacted.

In essence it is more a bill for the aid and relief of the owners of mortgages on homes than for the relief of home owners. It does not give the home owner direct access to the relief agencies it creates; and only by indirect action and by long, tedious processes can the individual home owner approach the throne of grace and crave the help this measure is supposed to afford. Any home owner relief act Congress may pass will be disappointing and wholly inadequate unless it makes provision for the individual home owner to deal directly with the home owners' loan corporation, the agency created by this act, without the intervention of building and loan associations and other loan organizations. [Applause.]

This bill as written provides an agency by and through which the holders of mortgages on homes may find a market for their securities, but there is no provision under which a home owner may apply for or secure a loan from or through this home owners' loan corporation to save his home from sacrificial foreclosure sale. The one outstanding purpose of this measure is to provide an agency through which banks, building-and-loan associations, life-insurance companies, and mortgage companies can exchange their mortgages on homes for bonds issued by the Government agency hereby created. These bonds bear 4 percent interest, but the home owner pays the corporation 5 percent as the bill is written, and not to exceed 5 percent if a proposed amendment is adopted.

When the home loan bank bill was pending in the last Congress, a large part of the Membership of this body was displeased because it made no worthwhile and workable provision for granting direct loans to home owners. True, it contained a milk-and-water provision for direct loans to home owners, but this section was administered in such an unfriendly and unsympathetic manner that it became a dead letter.

Now the home loan bank bill was a good measure for building-and-loan associations, banks, mortgage companies, life-insurance companies, and other holders of mortgages on homes, and for that reason its enactment was justified, but it was not in reality a bill for the relief of the home owner in the true sense of that term. Only incidentally did any substantial benefits accrue to the home owners under that act. It postponed some foreclosure sales but the mortgagees and not the mortgagors were the chief beneficiaries of that act. When the home loan bank bill was pending, the proponents of the measure opposed liberalizing amendments and argued the bill would be wrecked if the Membership of the House did not accept it "as is", and that amendments that would have put teeth in the measure would provoke a veto.

Mr. STEAGALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOZIER. Not now, but later if I have time. Well, we passed the so-called "home-loan bank bill", and what has been the result? As I said, it helped the owners of mortgages on homes tremendously, but only an insignificant moiety of its benefits found their way into the pockets of the home owners. No one will seriously contend that it brought any substantial relief to the home owners of the Nation. It was a bill essentially for the relief of those holding mortgages on homes, to refinance home-mortgage companies, and to furnish an organization that would finance the mortgagees and not in any sense a measure for the aid or relief of the home owners. So far as affording relief to home owners, the home loan bank bill was a delusion, and while not so intended, was, in effect, a confidence game, if you please, that Congress played on the confiding, sorely distressed, debt-menaced home owners of America. In the home-loan bank bill the people did not get what they expected, what they were promised, or what they were entitled to. You cannot again fool the home owners of the Nation. [Applause.]

If you pass this bill without amendment, without a clear-cut provision for direct loans to the individual home owner, without prescribing a formula by which the humblest home owner in the land can appeal directly to the home owners' loan corporation for relief, then the myriad thousands whose homes are about to be sold on the block at sacrificial prices will justly condemn Congress for having sold them another legislative gold brick.

Something has been said about the philosophy of the pending bill. There is sound and unsound philosophy. Insofar as this measure fails to afford substantial relief to the home owner and denies him the right to appeal directly to this Government agency for a loan, the measure embodies an unsound philosophy; a harsh philosophy that denies aid to the individual home owner but pledges the faith, funds, and credit of the Government for the relief of the mortgagees; a cynical philosophy that furnishes organized groups a mart in which they may exchange their mortgages for bonds issued by a Government agency, the interest on which is guaranteed by the Government; a philosophy that says, "We will come to the relief of the building-and-loan association, bank, loan company, and insurance company, but we will 'turn thumbs down' on the individual home owner who applies to us direct for a loan to save his home and salvage a little part of the earnings and accumulations of a lifetime." [Applause.]

If the House refuses to amend this bill as has been suggested, it will still have some merit and I will regretfully vote for it, not because it is what I want or what the home owners are entitled to but because it, seemingly, is the best and only measure we can get. I repeat, while this bill will afford substantial and deserved relief to the holders of mortgages on homes, it is so framed as not to grant comparable aid to the mortgagors. I warn you, you cannot continue to fool the home owners of America again with half-baked legislation. You will signally fail to have done your full duty if you pass this measure without incorporating therein a workable provision under which the individual home owner may receive loans direct from the home owners' loan corporation, the agency created by this act. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LOZIER] has expired.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I am sure my good friend the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LOZIER] does not wish to be unfair to the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency or to any member of the committee. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact, which he will probably remember, and if he does not the RECORD will substantiate the statement, that the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency did not make the insistence in this House, when the original home-loan bank bill was under consideration, attributed to him by my good friend the gentleman from Missouri. I will say to the gentleman, as I said to his colleague from Missouri, that my misgivings with reference to that legislation were on a parity with the misgivings of my good friend who has just addressed the House.

I made no statement in this House that that bill was adequate to meet the difficulties in which the home owners of this country found themselves at that time. I am sure if the gentleman will reflect he will agree that that legislation was passed under very different circumstances from this, certainly so, as far as the Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency is concerned. I want to say also that the Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency reserved the right in the committee to amend that bill, and it was amended in one of its most material aspects on the floor of this House, upon motion made by the Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency. So the chairman did not insist that the original home-loan bank bill should be swallowed without change. My good friend the gentleman from Missouri is mistaken.

Mr. LOZIER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. LOZIER. Is it not true that upon other amendments offered the gentleman argued that the structure of the bill should not be changed, and that that bill should be passed practically in the form in which it was submitted?

Mr. STEAGALL. If the gentleman desires to spend any more time in matters of history, which have nothing to do with this legislation, my position during that legislation was not very different from what the gentleman's position seems to be toward this legislation, although I finally voted for the bill.

Mr. LOZIER. As I may vote for this one.

Mr. STEAGALL. Now, I want to say this, and it should be made clear, there is not a line in this bill that provides for any aid for any building and loan association. There is a provision in the bill which authorizes the Treasury to aid, in the amount of $100,000,000, in setting up local home-loan associations that may make direct loans to home owners in communities that have no organizations that have access to the loaning facilities of the home-loan bank system. The $200,000,000 corporation and the use of the bonds of this corporation are limited to direct aid to home owners. There is not a line in the bill authorizing aid to building and loan associations.

This bill, as I have attempted to make clear to the House, is an entirely different measure from the original Home Loan Bank Act. This is a separate measure, an emergency measure, and its sole purpose is to afford direct aid to home owners who are in danger of losing their homes.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I have been very much interested in the discussion as to the salability of these bonds. Were the Government to guarantee the interest on these bonds for an indefinite period, I do not think there would be any trouble in disposing of them; but if the Government guaranty of interest is limited to a few years, I think there may be.

With the provision for 4-percent interest and an indefinite guaranty they would readily be disposed of, because today men with money would invest it in anything which would bring them a return of 4 percent, because they are today unable to put their funds into business of any kind in which they can turn a dollar over and at the end of the year have even the dollar left.

I believe this bill is going to help more directly the home-loan banks and the banks which are trying to get rid of their mortgages than it is the home owner. But I feel that if we are going to do anything to save the individual who is going to lose his home we will have to adopt this amendment.

I feel that this bill is going to do more to give relief to banks and relieve the tension of the bankers than it is to enable the home owner to try to protect himself and his home.

I am opposed to the Government in business, but here is where I am going to do a little talking for the Government in business, because if aid is going to be extended to these owners of small homes the Government will have to get into this business of trying to save their homes. The banker dares not loan for fear the depositor will draw out his deposit; then he must close his bank or the Comptroller of the Currency will close it for him.

Now, speaking as a banker, 10 years ago the best security we could get for the investment of funds for a bank was a mortgage on a home, a mortgage on a farm, or a loan to some manufacturing establishment which had a plant, machinery, and equipment. Today if a man tries to present this kind of collateral to a banker he is turned away. The banker says, "I cannot grant a loan on such security."

I am in sympathy with the banker, but I am in sympathy with the country a little more than with the banker, and I think if we are going to do the greatest good for the country we will have to adopt this bill, which is contrary to good business for the Government in ordinary times—but this is an emergency.

I want to say to the bankers of America that if they do not change their attitude on granting loans to home owners, granting loans to farm owners, and granting loans to manufacturers who put up their industry as collateral, they will after a while find themselves in the deepest trouble they have ever been in. We will find the bankers coming back to Congress within the next 5 years asking the repeal of this legislation, for they will find that the best collateral, the best security they have, has gone away from them.

Time after time when a boy you heard your grandfather talk about the day when you could buy land for $20 an acre which today is worth $200 an acre. Within the next 5 years the story may be repeated, and the story will be repeated many, many times.

When the time comes that our homes, our farms, and our industries are not worth anything, then God help this country. I say it is about time we granted relief to these people who want to protect their homes. If an honest valuation of the property is placed on all applications for loans on today's value, the Government cannot lose. We must have honest men administer these funds—ones who will not be influenced by politicians or sympathy.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. If the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri is adopted, will we not be in substantially the same position we were in last year when we adopted the home loan bank bill to provide for direct loans to the home owners without making any provision for these loans?

Mr. RICH. While in principle I am opposed to the granting of direct relief, yet I do not see how the owners of small homes in this country can get the relief they need to protect their homes otherwise, and we should have adequate security for the loan if wisely administered.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I am in sympathy with the gentleman's position, but how can direct relief be extended when no provision is made to give them that relief?

Mr. RICH. If we will guarantee these bonds or partially guarantee them for an unlimited time we will sell these bonds; do not worry about that. However, a time limit of a few years presents a different proposition. As I have said, if the Government will guarantee these bonds for an indefinite period they would make a wonderful investment for endowment funds of any kind, and I think no trouble would be experienced in disposing of the bonds.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit a unanimous-consent request.

I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman move that the Committee rise now and meet in the morning, in order to give the Members an opportunity to debate this proposition further?

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I may say that I have had an amendment on the desk for over half an hour and should like to have 5 minutes on the amendment.

Mr. STEAGALL. Then I shall make the request 30 minutes.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I should like to have 5 minutes.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the chairman of the committee what his program is?

Mr. STEAGALL. First, I want to see if the Committee will agree to limiting the debate on this section and all amendments thereto to 30 minutes.

Mr. SNELL. Does the gentleman intend to have all of that debate tonight, or is he going to move that the Committee rise and have the debate come tomorrow?

Mr. STEAGALL. I shall move that the Committee rise, if we can get this agreement.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I shall object unless I am permitted at least 5 minutes' time. I have not had any time on the bill, and I am very much interested in this amendment.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I have an amendment at the Clerk's desk which is not a pro-forma amendment, and I should like to discuss it for 5 minutes.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to shut off debate, but will not 30 minutes' time be sufficient?

Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SWANK) there were—ayes 123, noes 32.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DRIVER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill (H.R. 5240), authorizing loans to home owners, and had come to no resolution thereon.

HOME LOANS

Mr. GLOVER. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Speaker, the bill now before us for consideration is one of great importance. It is a bill to provide emergency relief with respect to home-mortgage indebtedness and to refinance the mortgage so that the home may be saved. In this time of depression many persons have lost their homes, when there was only a small balance due on them, because they could not be refinanced when the balance was demanded. I have had many letters coming to my office pleading for something to be done so the home could be saved, and I am glad to support this measure that will give relief to many persons.

If every person were now out of debt, it would be easy to start back on the road to prosperity. Debts cannot be paid now under present conditions. They were made when our country was prosperous, and when the panic came and the price of commodities went down to less than the cost of production it became impossible to pay. The only sensible thing to do is to extend this time of payment and reduce the rate of interest until conditions can be changed.

There are two prominent causes that have produced the condition that we find ourselves in. One is the tariff bill known as the "Smoot-Hawley bill", and the other is the money question. Bills are now pending and I hope will be passed before the close of this session correcting this evil. Our foreign trade is reduced until we have practically none. After the passage of this bill other nations passed retaliatory legislation against us. As a result of this neither of the nations can prosper.

The sensible thing to do is pass a bill at once providing for reciprocal trade relations with other countries so that we can sell our surplus crops. We cannot consume all we produce in this country of some commodities, and we must find a market for them in other countries. We now have 10,000,000 bales of cotton on hand that is holding down the price, which should have and would have been marketed if we had the proper trade relations with other countries that need it. They are now using the short lint cotton grown by other countries, because they cannot under present conditions trade with us as they formerly did.

The single standard of gold in the United States when other countries were on a silver standard has been, in my opinion, our greatest trouble. Since the action by President Roosevelt in taking us off the single gold standard, it leaves France as the only large nation trying to maintain it; and they are today coining more silver than ever before and will soon be forced off the single standard.

It has been my contention since I have been in Congress that we should have a double standard of both gold and silver, so that we could trade with all the nations of the world. Our Constitution provides for that, and we should go back to it. No one wants fiat money or an unsound currency. The ability of the Nation to redeem its obligations is what makes its credit good. No nation doubts the ability of the United States to fully redeem every obligation it has made or will make.

It is hoped that in the monetary conference, soon to be held, the nations of the earth may once for all settle this question and give us a stable currency where all the nations may trade with one another.

The United States is the richest nation on earth and yet we have 12,000,000 men out of employment. The report recently made by one of the departments stated that we have 4,000,000 families in the United States receiving aid, either from the State or National Government or charitable institutions. This is no fault of theirs and they cannot help it. What they are longing for is that the time will soon come when they can get work where they can care for themselves. We have a very small percentage that would not work if they could get it.

It is expected that many obligations may be scaled down in amount before they are refinanced. If this can be done it will be a saving to the one who owes the debt. We have passed a bill to refinance farm mortgages which will aid them and this will aid the home owner who is not engaged in agriculture and will give a much-needed relief.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, Mr. STRONG of Pennsylvania was given leave of absence for a few days, on account of illness.

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, bills of the House of the following titles:

H.R. 4225. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Allegheny River at or near Parkers Landing, in the county of Armstrong, Commonwealth of Pennsylvania; and

H.R. 4332. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Allegheny River, at a point near the Forest-Venango county line, in Tionesta Township, and in the county of Forest, and in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 11 minutes p.m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Friday, April 28, 1933, at 12 o'clock noon.

Mr. REED. I wish again to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. DAVIS] on account of illness.

Mr. BACHMAN. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. McKELLAR] is detained from the Senate on account of the death of his brother, Mr. R. L. McKellar.

Mr. McNARY. I wish to announce that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL] is necessarily detained from the Senate.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce the absence at the present moment of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], occasioned by conferences at the White House touching matters international. He will be in the Senate shortly.

I desire to announce that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] is necessarily detained from the Senate.

I also wish to announce that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. MCGILL] is necessarily detained from the Senate on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

THE JOURNAL

On motion of Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas, and by unanimous consent, the Journal for the calendar days of Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, April 25, 26, and 27, was approved.

JUDGMENT AGAINST PAN AMERICAN PETROLEUM CO.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to Senate Joint Resolution 13, and calls the attention of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] to it.

The amendment of the House of Representatives to Senate Joint Resolution 13, authorizing the Attorney General, with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Navy, to release claims of the United States upon certain assets of the Pan American Petroleum Co. and the Richfield Oil Co. of California and others in connection with collections upon a certain judgment in favor of the United States against the Pan American Petroleum Co., heretofore duly entered, was, on page 3, line 3, after the word "laws", to insert:

Provided, That the authority herein granted is permissive only, and shall not be construed as a declaration of approval by Congress of the compromise herein authorized to be made, and that said authority shall not be exercised by the Attorney General unless in his judgment said compromise shall appear to him to be for the best interests of the United States.

Mr. NYE. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

FUNCTIONS OF THE FEDERAL RADIO COMMISSION (S.DOC. NO. 46)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Chairman of the Federal Radio Commission, submitting, pursuant to Senate Resolution 351, Seventy-second Congress, a report of the functions and activities conducted under the jurisdiction of the Commission, the statutory authority therefor, and the total annual expenditures thereon; also a list of employees receiving compensation of $5,000 or more per annum, which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a petition from Wirt Franklin, president of the Independent Petroleum Association of America, Oklahoma City, Okla., praying that the entire program of recommendations for action by the Federal Government, agreed upon by the Committee of Fifteen, composed of representatives of 5 majors in the oil industry, 5 independents, and 5 oil-State Governors, be embraced in the provisions of one bill, as an emergency act, to rehabilitate the oil industry, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate two petitions and a letter in the nature of a petition from sundry citizens of the State of Louisiana, praying for a senatorial investigation of alleged acts and conduct of Hon. HUEY P. LONG, a Senator from the State of Louisiana, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate 5 memorials, 2 letters, and a telegram in the nature of memorials from sundry citizens of the State of Louisiana, endorsing Hon. HUEY P. LONG, a Senator from the State of Louisiana, condemning attacks made upon him and remonstrating against a senatorial investigation of his alleged acts and conduct, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FESS presented 150 letters from workers in the Air-Way Electric Appliance Corporation, of Toledo, Ohio, expressing appreciation to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] for his vote against the so-called "Black 30-hour week work bill", and stating that, under the conditions prevalent in Ohio, their interests can best be served by not limiting the employer and employee to "any unreasonable maximum" of working time, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a letter from F. Reibel, Jr., assistant to the president of the above-mentioned corporation, stating that any coercive methods were scrupulously avoided in connection with the above matter, and also that the officers of the company "as individuals share in the expressions of these 150 workers", which was ordered to lie on the table.

COST OF EDUCATING MIDSHIPMEN AT ANNAPOLIS

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, as a member of the Board of Visitors of the Naval Academy, I have had occasion recently to have some correspondence with the Navy Department in reference to the cost of educating midshipmen at Annapolis. I think the information is informative and helpful. I ask unanimous consent that the correspondence may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

There being no objection, the correspondence was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

APRIL 14, 1933.

HON. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Pursuant to your request for data as to the cost of educating midshipmen at the United States Naval Academy, I am pleased to transmit herewith a copy of data prepared by the Superintendent of the United States Naval Academy under date of November 3, 1932, which presents the data as requested by you.

You will note that items (a), (b), (c), and (d) have no relation whatever to the number of midshipmen at the Naval Academy. On the other hand, items (g), (h), and (i) have a direct relation to the number of midshipmen at the Academy, and items (e), (f), (j), and (k) have also a relation to the number of midshipmen but do not vary directly in proportion to the number, as there is a certain overhead that must be maintained with a very small number of midshipmen, and this overhead does not increase proportionately with the number of midshipmen. The direct appropriation for the maintenance and operation of the academy, items (e) to (k), indicate that the cost of educating one midshipman during the fiscal year 1933 was $1,862.09. This figure excluded items (a), (b), (c), and (d), but it does not represent the sum that could be deducted from the Naval Academy appropriation on account of a decrease in the number of midshipmen, for, as previously pointed out, it is necessary to maintain a certain overhead which does not vary proportionately with the number of midshipmen.

As you know, it is necessary that there should be a definite number of appointments allowed at the Naval Academy for each Senator and Representative. At present this number is three, although there are three classes there which entered when Members had four appointments. The classes graduating in 1933, 1934, and 1935 are therefore much larger than the classes which will graduate subsequent to that time. Last year Congress passed a bill authorizing the commissioning of half of each class so long as the total number of officers was in excess of the number authorized by basic law. As a result there should be a gradual decrease in the total number of line officers, and by 1937 or 1938 the number should be reduced to 5,499. Three appointments a year should just about meet the attrition, that is, the losses that the Navy will suffer, and under any circumstances it will not be possible to commission any excess, and the Navy will thus have the pick of the graduates of the academy, and those who are not commissioned will form a most valuable reserve that would be available in time of war. Two appointments per year would not produce a sufficient number of graduates to meet the attrition which will normally pertain, and the Bureau feels that the number of midshipmen at the Naval Academy should not be reduced below the present number of three for each Senator and Representative.

Commander Shafroth will personally deliver this letter and will be prepared to discuss the matter further with you, if you so desire.

Very truly yours,

F. B. UPHAM.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the bill (H.R. 4589) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 48) thereon.

Mr. BRATTON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 1131) to amend the probation law, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 49) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BULKLEY:

A bill (S. 1542) for the relief of sundry building and loan associations; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 1543) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes", approved July 1, 1902, and amendments thereto, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 1544) for the relief of certain disbursing officers of the Army of the United States and for the settlement of individual claims approved by the War Department (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. REED:

A bill (S. 1545) for the relief of Edward F. Smith; to the Committee on Naval Affairs;

A bill (S. 1546) granting a pension to Clara Dempsey; and

A bill (S. 1547) granting a pension to Anna E. Spence; to the Committee on Pensions.

OWNERSHIP OF STOCKS AND BONDS BY MEMBERS OF CONGRESS AND FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to introduce a joint resolution relating to ownership of stocks, bonds, and so forth. I have introduced a similar resolution in 2 or 3 Republican Congresses and made no progress with it. I wish to try it again in a Democratic Congress. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be received and referred, as requested.

The joint resolution (S.J.Res. 46) relating to ownership of stocks and bonds of industrial, railroad, mining, banking, shipping, oil, and other corporations, firms, and partnerships by Members of the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America and by employees of the Federal Government and their relation to such corporations and firms, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO THE COMMITTEE ON PATENTS

Mr. WAGNER submitted the following resolution (S.Res. 63), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Patents hereby is authorized to employ an assistant clerk to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate at the rate of $2,400 per annum during the Seventy-third Congress.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. REED. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. When the Senate took a recess last evening the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] had the floor.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator from New York yield to me for a statement in the nature of a question of personal privilege?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, in this morning's Philadelphia Ledger, and, possibly in other newspapers, there is a long account of an open letter which purports to have been written to me by a Philadelphia lawyer named Newbold, reproaching me with having taken part in organizing an institution called "The Republican Associates", or some such name. Mr. Newbold is no more concerned, apparently, with the proprieties than he is with the facts, and so he publishes his letter before I actually have received the original copy.

Mr. President, not only did I have nothing to do with the organization of any such institution as "The Republican Associates", but I have no knowledge of its purposes other than as statements have been published in recent days, with a list of its officers. Not only had I nothing to do with its organization, but I have not been invited to join it, and, so far as I have any knowledge of it, I have no desire to receive such an invitation. I am perfectly content to remain an ordinary Republican, and do not desire to join any clique or faction within the party.

DEGREE OF BACHELOR OF SCIENCE FOR NAVAL ACADEMY GRADUATES

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, in behalf of the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], Chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and myself, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 20, the bill (S. 753) to confer the degree of bachelor of science upon graduates of the Naval Academy.

Let me say in explanation that one half, or about 150, midshipmen are to graduate within a month from the Naval Academy who will not be commissioned and will be forced to enter civil life. This is the first instance of this unfortunate happening. Unless this measure is passed by the Senate and House promptly they will not have the benefit of its provisions which provide for the conferring of the degree of bachelor of science. It is recommended by the Navy Department and approved by the educational institutions of the country, which pass on the general educational standing of the several colleges.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Massachusetts if this is an emergency measure?

Mr. WALSH. It is decidedly so in the opinion of these disappointed graduates.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Superintendent of the United States Naval Academy may, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe, confer the degree of bachelor of science upon all graduates of the Naval Academy.

REMOVAL OF LIMITATIONS ON NATIONAL BANKS

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 45, the bill (S. 1415) to amend sections 5200 and 5202 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, to remove the limitations on national banks in certain cases.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, is that the measure referred to yesterday by the Senator from Ohio to which I then made objection?

Mr. BULKLEY. This is the bill which I explained yesterday and which the Senator from Oregon asked to have go over.

Mr. McNARY. I did so until I could confer with some other members of the Committee on Banking and Currency. I am advised that they have no objection; in other words, they approve it. I have no objection to the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5200 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(9) Obligations representing loans to any national banking association or to any banking institution organized under the laws of any State, or to any receiver, conservator, or superintendent of banks, or to any other agent, in charge of the business and property of any such association or banking institution, when such loans are approved by the Comptroller of the Currency, shall not be subject under this section to any limitation based upon such capital and surplus."

Sec. 2. Section 5202 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"Ninth. Liabilities incurred on account of loans made with the express approval of the Comptroller of the Currency under paragraph (9) of section 5200 of the Revised Statutes, as amended."

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States submitting nominations were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

RELIEF OF AGRICULTURE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 3835) to relieve the existing national economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON], as modified, to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, in as brief a manner as possible I desire to explain my vote on the Thomas amendment. It seems to be one of the characteristics of every debate on a currency proposal that it arouses in some the hope of the millennium and in others the forebodings of ruin.

In my opinion, there is no mysterious quality in gold nor any magic in bookkeeping which can make a nation suddenly rich or poor, as by the rubbing of Aladdin's lamp. Since 1792, when Congress first defined the gold dollar, to this day our monetary system has gone through various stages and we have enjoyed prosperity and suffered depression alike in each of those stages. It is safe to assume that the pending amendment will not accomplish all the miracles which some of its advocates proclaim, and I am certain it will not spread the general havoc which its opponents profess to dread.

It is not unusual in the consideration of an important proposal that they who oppose it should seek to condemn it in the eyes of an indiscriminating public by fastening to it an unpopular name. On this occasion the charge of inflation has been hurled against the entire amendment. Mere words, however, have ceased to frighten people who have already suffered the agonies of 4 years of depression. Particularly, I may say, the public is quite immune to the threats uttered by the discredited doctors of despair who in the past administration watched the Nation grow weak and faint under their eyes and almost permitted it to perish. It seems to me that the cry of inflation comes with rather poor grace from the very men who fathered and nursed the most frenzied inflation this country had ever witnessed and impoverished our people not through the relatively slow processes of the printing press but of the much faster ticker tape.

Let us keep before our eyes, Mr. President, the compelling fact that we are not debating this question as an exercise in abstruse economics. This amendment is pending here today because millions of citizens, residing in every State of the Union, have seen their endeavors of a lifetime rendered valueless, their businesses collapse, their homes foreclosed, their jobs vanish. They demand relief from the tortures of prolonged persistent and relentless depression.

Sometime I speculate on the strange paradoxes which enter into the problem we are now considering. The United States today holds $4,313,000,000 in gold, more in fact than it has ever had. Despite this great hoard of precious metal the United States is off the gold standard.

Money in circulation amounts to $6,068,000,000, an amount which is $643,000,000 more than a year ago and almost a billion and a half more than the total outstanding at the height of the 1929 boom. Despite this apparent plenitude the demand throughout the country is for more currency.

Each of the countries of the world, including our own, is encircled by tariff walls of a height hitherto undreamed of, all designed to stimulate their industries and raise prices for their domestic producers. But prices today are lower than ever, profits have disappeared, and enterprise is almost completely paralyzed.

Underneath these apparent paradoxes is a well overflowing with human tragedy washing away standards of living, dissolving the values civilization has painfully created, spreading everywhere the spirit of rebelliousness against an order of things which makes the prevailing cruelties possible.

The men, both in and out of this Chamber, who advocate inflation are not interested, as I see it, in currency for its own sake. They are concerned with prices. They see no hope of recovery as long as prices continue to decline, and they propose to check that decline and to reverse the downward course of prices by dealing directly with the measure of value. Whether we approve or disapprove of the means selected in the pending amendment, it seems to me to be clear beyond dispute that the objective of obtaining a rise in the price level at the present time is altogether sound. In truth, until I listened to the extraordinary remarks of the Senator from Pennsylvania on last Friday, I had not heard the proposition seriously questioned.

To me it seems self-evident that no more invigorating tonic could today be administered to ailing business than the assured prospect of rising prices. It is the basic premise of any action for recovery. The only question open to debate is whether the method chosen in the pending amendment is well calculated to accomplish its purpose.

It has long been my conviction that the only kind of price rise which is productive of prosperity is that which has its origin in an effective demand for commodities created through the resumption of investment and restoration of employment. It is for that reason that I have continuously advocated the initiation and stimulation of sound projects, both public and private, which would create a demand for commodities, open opportunities for employment, and necessarily enlarge the requirements of credit. In the light of these general principles I propose briefly to consider the Thomas amendment.

Four separate proposals were combined in that amendment as originally presented. Not one of them is mandatory. Whether any one or more is to be put into operation is left to the discretion of the President.

The significant fact, it seems to me, is that neither the "open-market" section nor the silver provision, nor even the so-called "greenback" provision involves any sharp departure from the currency policy of the United States as now expressed by law.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. KEAN. I should like to ask the Senator whether he does not think that the capital levy, which is practically the first proposal of the amendment, is not a departure from anything we have ever had before?

Mr. WAGNER. I do not think it is a capital levy at all.

Mr. KEAN. May I explain what I mean?

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator may do that in his own time, but not in my time. I have heard the argument made, and I think it is very unsound.

Open-market purchases of United States obligations by the Federal Reserve banks are not only permissible under existing law but have at times been extensively used. Today the Federal Reserve banks hold $1,837,000,000 of such securities. In this regard the amendment does no more than authorize the means whereby assurance can be had that if an open-market operation is initiated it will be seen through to a degree which may make it effective. The Reserve banks are, of course, private institutions. No attempt is made to coerce them. The amendment facilitates open-market operations, should the banks agree to enter upon them, and it proposes an alternative course of action should agreement fail.

Even the so-called "greenback section" is not the unbridled recourse to inflation which some would have us believe. Three important safeguards have been established which sharply differentiate it from printing-press money: First, the National Budget will be balanced and this currency is not to be issued for the payment of current expenditures. Second, the use of these notes is strictly limited to the retirement of the interest-bearing obligations of the United States, so that every dollar put out into circulation is not a net addition to the currency, but a substitute for a Federal Reserve bank note that might otherwise be issued. Third, the United States notes must be retired from circulation within 25 years. The funds for their retirement can come only from taxes. Under these circumstances it seems to me rather fanciful to raise the alarm, to shout inflation, and to point a shuddering finger at the German experience.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. COUZENS. What would the Senator say as to the effect which the adoption of the Robinson amendment would have upon that section of the bill? In other words, the Senator from Indiana has a proposal to give to the President power to pay the soldiers' bonus out of the $3,000,000,000. Should that amendment be adopted, of course, that would destroy the section of the bill to which the Senator is referring.

Mr. WAGNER. Undoubtedly; and that is why I am going to vote against that amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. It would destroy it only to the amount of the issue of currency necessary to pay the certificates.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; that is true. That, however, is a very large sum.

Mr. NORRIS. That would be somewhere in the neighborhood of two billion.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; and the limit of issuance of currency here is three billion.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. COUZENS. Of course, it would leave very little over the payment of the soldiers' bonus for the purpose of retiring outstanding Government bonds.

Mr. WAGNER. Of course—practically an insignificant sum, in my judgment.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator think that under the greenback provision, as it is generally referred to, there is very great opportunity to get this money out among the people?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; I do.

Mr. BORAH. When Government obligations are paid off, those who hold the Government obligations will put the money they get back in the banks.

Mr. WAGNER. And the banks will loan it out.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; the banks will loan it out according to the practice of the last year and a half. [Laughter.]

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, we ought not, after all, to judge this provision as if it were the first change in our currency system since the enactment of the Federal Reserve Act. Under the Glass-Steagall Act, the Borah amendment to the Home Loan Bank Act, and the emergency banking legislation of the present session, the amount of currency that may issue is virtually limitless. The power is now lodged in the Federal Reserve banks to issue currency not only against gold and eligible paper but against Government bonds and any and every type of collateral. All that is proposed in the sections of the amendment which I have considered is that a policy which is now permissible under the law shall, in the discretion of the President, be put into effect.

The direct effect of these steps would be to increase bank reserves, and thus to exert a powerful force for the liberalizing of the lending policies of the banks. If that effect is achieved, it will stimulate enterprise and promote employment. I do not close my eyes to the dangers of overexpansion, but these are dangers which can be guarded against, and the Banking and Currency Committee amendment provides the means—an amendment—by the way, offered in the committee by the ex-Secretary of the Treasury, the junior Senator from California [Mr. McAdoo]. In comparison, the dangers of doing nothing are infinitely greater.

I return now to the third provision of the amendment, the section looking to the revaluation of the dollar.

There can be no question that it is that section of the amendment which has caused the greatest concern in this Chamber. I confess that I myself have felt grave doubts of its desirability. After considerable deliberation, however, I came to the conclusion that the doubts must be resolved in favor of the legislation.

We do not, by this provision of the amendment, undertake to fix the details of the action to be taken with respect to our national currency. This amendment is a broad grant of power. It lodges responsibility in the President. I am quite convinced that we are far more likely to secure wise action if that power be not restricted and not confined to narrow channels. The situation today is universally recognized as an emergency. No one knows at this moment what may be required of us next week. None of us here has that prophetic knowledge to enable him to speak with finality of the future. This is not the time to tie the hands of statesmanship.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator on the amendment has expired.

Mr. WAGNER. I will speak on the bill.

Attention has been called to the fact that business would be subjected to some uncertainty until it was known whether the President would exercise this authority and to what extent he would exercise it. Mr. President, business cannot possibly be subjected to more uncertainty than confronts it today. The knowledge that the President is endowed with the broadest charter of powers to promote the recovery of American economic life is not a source of uncertainty but of confidence. I have unlimited faith that with the powers conferred upon the President in this legislation he will act wisely, patriotically, and in the interest of the people of the United States. The American people share that faith—and it is only in an atmosphere of confidence that recovery can thrive.

Mr. President, I have avoided the question of the merits or demerits of the ultimate modification of the gold content of the dollar. It seems to me futile to consider that question in the abstract. Like armament, like tariffs, so gold ratios have primarily an international significance; and the meaning and value of any action taken in respect of them depends, in the last analysis, upon whether the action is taken through international cooperation or competition.

Currency debasement practiced by an individual nation has precisely the same effect as the tariff. It means the importer must pay more in terms of his domestic currency. It is wider than a tariff, because it applies to the free list as well as to the dutiable list. Necessarily it involves a reduction of imports; and the invariable consequence of that has always been a reduction of exports.

The gold standard has broken down not because of any inherent deficiency but because of the intense economic nationalism which has been madly raging throughout the world. The gold standard was an international standard. It fitted into a world of international trade. It could not work—it had no purpose, in fact—in a world gone mad with competitive tariffs, embargoes, quota systems, and exchange controls.

We have reached the point where an important decision must be made—a decision far more important than simply one affecting our domestic currency. Today all of the nations of the world are rapidly dragging each other down to lower and lower levels of poverty. Abandonment of the gold standard, revaluation of gold, inflation of paper currency, expansion of credit—these are at best temporary protective devices in a world of shrinking opportunities. Of themselves they cannot restore that necessary international economic cooperation which the world requires for its prosperity and peace. In my judgment, the fate of civilization as we know it depends upon the degree of economic disarmament which the World Economic Conference accomplishes.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I observe this morning another warning has been sent to the people of the United States, urging that they bring in their gold and advising them that criminal prosecutions will be instituted if they do not do so.

Mr. President, as I understand, we are off the gold standard; and I do not understand why American citizens should be harassed and threatened with criminal prosecution for refusing to return their gold when we as a nation are off the gold standard. Is it consistent to put men in the penitentiary for keeping that which the Government has rejected? It is difficult for me to understand why that policy is being pursued. More difficult than that, however, is it for me to understand the right of a government to insist upon its people bringing their money and depositing it in banks and other places where there is no security and no safety and no assurance that they will ever get it back.

If the Government is going to insist that the people bring in their money, the Government ought to provide a safe place for them to deposit it, and assurance upon the part of the Government that when they want it they can get it.

Suppose the head of a family, contemplating the uncertainties of the future financially and economically, has preserved and has placed where he thinks it is safe a certain amount of gold or a certain amount of gold certificates and has, in a sense, provided it as an insurance against adversity and unfortunate days: Why should the Government insist that he bring it in and put it in banks that may fail? The ordinary rights and privileges of the people are rapidly disappearing.

If the Government is not prepared to say that deposits in banks are to be guaranteed and made safe, I think it is unfair and unjust and, moreover, unconstitutional, to insist that people bring in their money and put it in unsafe places.

If we are going to pursue the policy of punishing those who see fit to save, in their own way, against an unfortunate day, it is the highest duty of the Government to guarantee bank deposits; and I venture to say that only through such a program will this money ever be gotten out of hoarding or out of hiding. I am now speaking of guaranty of bank deposits in relation to this demand that the people bring in their money and put it in the banks. I regard this demand in the light of the present attitude of the Government as cruelly unjust. I know the Government is interested in having this money circulate, but it is, or should be, interested in protecting the earnings and savings of the people. The people should not be driven to take all the risk and suffer all the loss.

We have in this country at the present time, something like $8,000,000,000 of bank deposits tied up in closed banks. One of the most effective ways by which we could provide for inflation on the basis of equity and justice would be for the Government to take over these deposits and pay the depositors. It would put in circulation some four or five billion dollars which would go immediately into the pockets of the people, and among those who most need this money. It would get the money out among the people.

In view of the experience of the people during the last few months—and $5,000,000,000 of this money has been frozen since the 1st day of March—what right has the Government to ask the frugal citizen who may have his money in his sock or in a safe-deposit box to remove it and put it in banks where there is no security behind it?

So far as I am concerned, Mr. President, if I had $5,000 in gold, I would defy the Government to come and get it, unless and until the Government had provided a safe place for me to deposit it. This is still a free Government and under a free Government the people are entitled to fair treatment. I deny that the Government has the constitutional power to punish me for using my own in a way which is in the best interest of those for whom I must care.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. Has the Senator investigated at all the power of the Government to require any such deposit by its citizens of gold they may have on hand—that is, I mean, the legal power? The morals of the situation the Senator has well expressed.

Has the Senator investigated, and has he reached any conclusion as to whether or not the Government has the power to say that a man with a few thousand dollars' worth of gold must deposit it in some bank, or be stamped as a criminal, and tainted the remainder of his life?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have investigated it, and I am glad the Senator asks the question. I do not think the Government has power to prosecute me for putting my money in a place where I think it most safe to put it. I think we are proceeding under a pure threat, and we have no authority except the authority which rests on the fact that the people fear to come in conflict with the Government.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. FESS. I had assumed that there had been some legislation authorizing this. I do not remember that there was, but I cannot understand why there should be any such procedure unless there was such legislation.

Mr. BORAH. Of course there is legislation; but what authority have we for passing such legislation?

Mr. FESS. I do not recall what the legislation is.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. The legislation possibly is the banking law, which first we passed here, which not only had certain restrictions in it but which as well ratified, approved, and confirmed all that had been done prior to that time, and one of the things done, I think, was the issuance of a demand that gold be deposited under certain conditions.

Mr. FESS. That was the emergency bill.

Mr. BORAH. That was the first violation of the Constitution this session. That was the beginning, the end of which is not in sight.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Is it not true that the Government does in substance guarantee deposits in the Postal Savings banks of the country?

Mr. BORAH. To a limited extent.

Mr. COSTIGAN. To the extent of limited deposits; yes. Is not the real question which confronts us, then, whether the guaranty shall be of deposits under Government control, or in private institutions without effective safeguards? Does the Senator from Idaho favor the guaranty of all bank deposits, regardless of whether the banks are sound or unsound?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, while this emergency exists I would favor a guaranty of bank deposits. I do not know that I would favor it as a permanent policy. I would unhesitatingly favor it so long as the Government is demanding that the people bring their money out and put it in the banks, because at this time the people do not know what bank is safe and what bank is not safe. The earnings of the people must be made safe.

I go further and say that the Government is now under a moral obligation to take care not only of the deposits which have been frozen of late, but the deposits which may be made in the future. Every effort has been made, persuasive and otherwise, to induce the people to place their money in the banks. We have been told that it is necessary for the preservation of our financial system that they do so. Shall the people do so, in view of past experience, without having some guaranty from the Government which insists upon their doing so? It is unfair, unjust, and I think, furthermore, unconstitutional; but the latter proposition is not very important apparently.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, does the Senator think that the citizen would be compelled even to take the guaranty of the Government and give up that which he holds?

Mr. BORAH. I had not thought about that. I am thinking of the citizen who would cooperate with the Government if the Government would assume its proportion of the responsibility in case there were an accident after the deposit was made.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. REED. It seems to me that when one speaks of a temporary guaranty of bank deposits he ought to consider the possibility of ending that temporary guaranty. It seems to me that if we authorized a temporary guaranty we never could take it off, because the day before we tried to take it off, the banks would be exposed to such a run that it would break half of them. I do not believe we could enter upon the plan without intending to make it permanent.

Mr. BORAH. If it were necessary to make it permanent in order to make it effective, I would favor making it permanent; but, in my opinion, we could deal with it as an emergency proposition, the same as we are dealing with other things as emergency propositions; and in ordinary times, after conditions have been reestablished on a firm basis, the people would have no occasion for making runs upon the banks. There would not be that fear which exists at the present time and which has existed for the last year and a half or 2 years. I am of opinion that it would be, to limit it; but I certainly would not ask the people to bring their money out and put it into banks unless the Government is willing to make them safe in doing so, and I venture to say they will not do it.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. KEAN. I should like to ask the Senator this question: Suppose the Senator has $100 in $20 gold pieces and deposits it in the bank today, and this amendment is enacted, and the President changes the gold content so that the dollar would be worth 50 cents. The people who deposited that money as of today have made, in the rise of exchange, 13 to 14 percent, but if that happens they will lose 50 percent of their money.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I understand what the Senator is driving at.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. FESS. The interest in the matter of the guaranteeing of bank deposits seems to be growing Nation-wide, and I am coming to the conclusion that something will have to be done; but the question of how broad it is to be, whether it is to include the banks which would stand an investigation and be pronounced sound, and would exclude the others which would be pronounced unsound, is one that must be seriously considered.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, when we came to the details as to what the measure of guaranty should be, that would be a matter of discussion and debate and the exercise of judgment; but what I am contending this morning is that if we are to insist upon the people putting their money in the banks the Government ought to secure and guarantee their repayment.

Mr. FESS. I am in full agreement with that.

Mr. BORAH. I am led to say these things this morning by reason of this news item, although I have been thinking of the matter for days. A man wrote me he had gathered together sufficient, he thought, to carry his family through this emergency, as he believes, and he is called upon now to put his money into a bank. Next week he may be utterly a pauper by reason of doing so. Either the policy should be entirely changed and the citizen should be left unmolested, unthreatened, and unembarrassed to pursue his own course, or the Government should guarantee that when he puts his money in a bank he can get it out.

Mr. FESS. I am of the opinion that some form of guaranty will have to be resorted to; otherwise there will not be sufficient confidence on the part of the people to get money into the banks.

Mr. BORAH. We are asking the people to have confidence in the Government, and to have confidence to do this and to do that. Should not the Government now exhibit some interest in the people's security?

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. DILL. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that money up to a limited amount may be deposited in the Postal Savings bank and the Government does guarantee the deposit.

Mr. BORAH. That is, to a limited amount.

Mr. DILL. Up to as much as they accept, they guarantee. I remind the Senator that I have been making some effort for the past few years to have the Postal Savings banks opened to checking accounts, so that people could and would use them.

Mr. BORAH. I am familiar with the Senator's effort, and, as a general principle, am sympathetic with it; but there is considerable objection to that, for the reason that the banks claim that it would be undermining the banks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BARKLEY in the chair). The Senator's time on the amendment has expired.

Mr. BORAH. I will reserve my time on the bill.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I just want to say, in response to what the Senator from Idaho has just stated, that the matter could be handled very simply so that the banks would still have all the money passing through their hands which they now have, if, when the money were presented to the Postal Savings bank, and designated as a checking account, the checks could be used on the bank where the Postal Savings bank keeps its money, and therefore it would not be necessary to set up a new clearing house or have additional clerks employed by the Government. I submit that unless we are to make the banks of this country safe, at least for the small depositors, then the Postal Savings bank ought to be made available to the small depositors as a safe place for their money.

I am in full sympathy with everything the Senator has said about the policy of compelling people under fear of punishment to bring their money into a bank when there is no assurance that it will not be lost in a bank failure within a few weeks.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, while it does not have anything directly to do with the pending amendment, the subject which has been discussed for the last 15 or 20 minutes is exceedingly interesting, and very important, in my judgment.

I do not believe that the Government of the United States, even though backed up by a legislative enactment authorizing it, has any right, or that any law passed by Congress can give any right to anyone, to require any citizen to deposit his money anywhere, whether it is gold or any other kind of money. It has no right, as a matter of law, and I think as a matter of morals also, to do that, even though it orders the money put in a place where the Government itself guarantees its repayment. The principle of law is just the same, I think, whether the place where the citizen is required to put his money is safe or unsafe. That does not enter into the legal proposition at all, as I see it.

Mr. President, we are all interested in the money of the country being in circulation as much as possible. We are all interested in having money deposited in the banks or other institutions where the business of the country can be freely carried on. Whether we call it a guaranty or whether we call it an insurance of deposits, in my opinion, perhaps after we have regained prosperity, we are going to find it necessary to pass some such law. Not within the lifetime of any man or woman who lives now will we be able to drive out of the minds of the people the fear of the loss of their money, even though they are depositing their money in a bank that is properly run, honestly carried on, and financially sound, because, though I am not criticizing the order, and I think the President was justified in making it, we have found in recent days that the right to get one's money out of a bank does not necessarily depend upon the bank being sound, does not depend even upon the wishes or the desires of the men who are operating the banks. The recent moratorium closed all the banks.

The citizen leaves his money in a bank because of confidence, and a belief that when he wants it he can go and get it without notice, that he can draw a check on it, and that when the check is presented to the bank it will be honored in full, if the depositor has the money there to meet it. No matter how patriotic we may be, no matter how anxious we may be to carry on that system, when we know that there is a possibility of our being unable to get our money out of a bank, regardless of the bank's fidelity, its stability, or its financial standing, there never will come back, until the history of the present is entirely forgotten, the confidence necessary to maintain a banking system in the country which will perform the functions performed by the banks in the past, unless some additional assurance can be given that will bring about confidence in the depositors that they will be able to get their money at any time they want it. Nobody is to blame for it, so far as I know; I am not finding fault with anybody or with any order which has been made, but I am presenting, Mr. President, what I believe to be an actual fact, that unless there shall be enacted a law which will give to the depositor the confidence, necessary in any system of banking, that he can get his money when he wants it, we never can go on in the future, within a great many years, at least, as we have done in the past, because we realize what has happened.

I desire to digress to say, Mr. President, that while under proper restrictions and limitations I believe it is going to be necessary for some law of that kind ultimately to be passed, I would not now favor a law—it seems to me it would be unthinkable to pass a law, for instance, that would guarantee deposits in the banks that are at present closed, or in the banks that are now open, except under a provision that would require complete supervision of every bank that enjoyed the benefit of the insurance or the guaranty of deposits.

We, as a government, could not afford, and no insurance company could afford as a corporation, to guarantee the deposits in any bank unless we had some supervision, some control, over the activities and the methods of doing business of that bank. Some provision of that kind, it seems to me, must be contained in any law designed either to guarantee or insure deposits, much as such a condition is desirable to bring about the confidence that is necessary to keep in circulation the money which ought to be deposited in banks and which ought to be subject to check.

In my judgment, the public ought not to concern itself with a guaranty of time deposits, for instance. I do not believe we ought to guarantee a contract made between a bank and a depositor by which the depositor is going to get interest on his deposit. It is a contract, perfectly legitimate and perfectly proper; but the Government, for the protection of the people, as I look at it, has no more right to guarantee payment under such contracts than it has the right to guarantee the payment of a loan made by one individual to another. We are interested as a people, the Government is interested, unless we devise some other way of conducting business, that the banking institutions of the country should be open and that the people should have enough confidence in the banking institutions so that they would not be afraid to deposit their money in the banks. The public has that interest; it is our method of doing business; and until we devise a better one it will continue to be the method of doing business. So the Government, as a whole, has an interest in the solvency of every bank and in keeping the banks in such condition that they will be able to pay the money which is deposited in them and which is subject to check. It is the money which is deposited and is subject to check which, under our system, the banks keep in circulation; and so long as we have that system the Government itself, and every State government and every individual in the country, whether they have money in banks or not, have a direct interest in the security of the deposits of the banks; and unless they have that confidence we shall never be able to go back and do business on the same basis on which we have done it in the years that have passed.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Justifying the statement the Senator is making, it is of interest to note that the total bank clearances of the country in a normal year are about $800,000,000,000. When we compare that with the physical currency we have, we immediately realize the vital importance that bank credit currency and exchange have in the transaction of our business. Since they all rest upon banking confidence, it seems to me that the Senator is wholly justified in laying down the proposition that there will be no recovery until we have built a solid concrete foundation under the banks of the Nation, so that depositors may have every right to believe in them.

Mr. NORRIS. I thank the Senator from Michigan for his suggestion.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. NORRIS. How much time have I left, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska has 4 minutes left on the amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I merely want to ask the Senator a question. The Senator talks about restoring confidence in the banks and about rigid supervision by the National Government. We hear much about supervision by the National Government, as though that would guarantee the security of banking and the safety of banking. As a matter of fact, all national banks have been under the supervision of the national-bank examiners and the National Government, and bankers have told me that if it had not been for the supervision of the national-bank examiners who come in and state that certain paper must go out and that the bank must buy some other kind of paper, the banks would not have had to close.

Mr. NORRIS. Some people do not believe in it, because they say it is a form of socialism, but if we reach the conclusion that bank deposits must be guaranteed or insured, if follows as night follows day that we cannot guarantee any bank which is organized under a "wild-cat" scheme, but if the Government is going to guarantee deposits—and an insurance company would be in the same fix—it can only afford to guarantee deposits in banks that are under supervision. We will make mistakes; there will probably be bank examiners who will throw out paper they ought not to throw out; we will never get a perfect system; but I cannot conceive that the Congress should pass a law to guarantee deposits unless the Government had some control over the banks where the deposits were placed. I think that will follow. I do not believe anybody would vote—it seems to me no one would—to compel the Government to guarantee deposits in any bank or any institution with which the Government had nothing to do and about which the Government had nothing to say as to how the bank should be operated or what kind of loans it should make.

I think we can improve upon the past in regard to the loans of which the Senator from Minnesota speaks. It has been disclosed—it was brought out in the first instance by the Senator from California as a result of the investigation he made as to foreign loans—that some of the national banks have been dishonestly operated; it has been shown how they have sent word over all the country to smaller banks which believed in them, which had confidence in them, inducing those smaller banks to buy a certain line of securities which the larger banks had for sale, which securities proved to be worthless, and some of which were known to be practically worthless at the time the larger banks were selling them and getting them off their hands. That is an evil, everybody concedes it to be an evil, and we must rectify it by proper laws. I think it can be done.

We will never, as I said, make conditions perfect; there will always be some losses here and there, but the right kind of banking system, it seems to me, can be brought about under the proper kind of laws that Congress shall pass that will reduce the losses to a minimum, restore confidence, bring money out of stockings, bring money out of safety deposit boxes, and put it in the banks where it will be subject to check so that the business of the country may go on without molestation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Nebraska on the amendment has expired.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I have discussed this same subject so long and so frequently that I certainly do not intend now to repeat myself, but I want to bring my own record up to date, in the purview of this morning's debate.

I have upon numerous occasions indicated to the Senate how the Michigan banking situation is a laboratory demonstration of the precise necessity to which the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from Nebraska have been adverting.

Until the Federal Reserve Banking System and the Treasury Department in the first instance shall liberalize their treatment of the banking institutions of the country, and then, upon the other hand, until there shall be this fundamental Federal insurance or guaranty to put complete and justified confidence in the depositor himself, there will be no chance for American economic recuperation.

We have been struggling, along the line of this discussion, in an endeavor for 10 weeks to get the Michigan banking situation into effective and satisfactory form. Repeatedly we have been rebuffed. I will read now from a Detroit newspaper of Tuesday, April 25, just a few sentences from Governor Comstock, commenting upon the fact that once more all the Michigan proposals, based upon Michigan State law passed expressly to serve this emergency, have been rejected by the Federal Reserve Bank and by the Treasury. He is commenting upon the entrenched demands of these high authorities for complete liquidity in reopened banks and upon their rejection of all long-range planning upon this score. This is what the Governor says, and I submit that he is justified in his comment, as he confronts the spectacle of 250 closed Michigan banks, most of which we believe could have safely opened long ago on the so-called "Michigan plan basis"—

This means wholesale liquidation, instead of wholesale rehabilitation of our banks. I am forced to the conclusion—

And this is a comment, it is illuminating to say at this point, by a Democratic governor—

I am forced to the conclusion that President Franklin D. Roosevelt does not know what his Treasury Department and the Federal Reserve Board are doing. The President's inflation plan cannot go through if this plan of bank liquidation is carried out. The bank plan is the absolute antithesis of the President's inflation plan.

That is the bald truth, if it ever was stated in this world. A deflation bank policy and an inflation currency policy absolutely neutralize each other.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FLETCHER. Can Congress take such jurisdiction over State banks as to have this sort of proposed guaranty or insurance apply to State banks?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am not speaking at the moment of insurance and guaranties; those are the subsequent and ultimate propositions. I think it is possible to put such insurance at the disposition of State banks on a self-sustaining premium basis. I am speaking about the immediate policy under the emergency banking legislation that we have passed, which is supposed to be of some use in helping banks to reopen; and I am stating that, at least, so far as the Chicago Federal Reserve district is concerned there has been no resultful cooperation whatever in connection with our Michigan plans. There continues what appears to be an obdurate insistence upon 100-percent liquidity, whereas, I again respectfully submit, this means needless loss to all concerned.

Referring to the proposition in the interchange between the Senator from Nebraska and myself, so long as $800,000,000 represents the normal total of annual clearing-house exchanges in the United States, as compared with only $6,000,000,000 of currency, we confront the inevitable proposition that, except as we deal with the $800,000,000,000 factor, namely, the banking functions, we cannot hope to correct the money stringency by dealing exclusively with the $6,000,000,000 factor, which is the physical currency factor. Therefore, I am rising to concur completely in the suggestions of the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Idaho to the effect that, in the long run, the restoration of a justified depositor confidence can do more for the recuperation of business and the betterment of the economic situation than any other possible factor to which we could dedicate ourselves, because depositor confidence is prerequisite to the normal flow of normal bank-credit currency.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will my colleague yield? The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to his colleague?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am glad to yield.

Mr. COUZENS. May I ask my colleague if the procedure of the Treasury Department and the Government now is not exactly opposite to what was proposed in the last days of the Hoover administration when we passed a resolution through both Houses at the urgent insistence of the Treasury Department to permit banks to operate on a partial-payment plan? That policy was adopted by the Congress unanimously. It was started under the Hoover administration and immediately the bank holiday came and it has not operated on that basis since. In other words, I want to concur in what my colleague has said about the ruthless deflation policy applied to the banks. Had the banks been permitted to operate under the joint resolution passed by Congress, in which we provided for cooperation of the Comptroller of the Currency with the State banking commissioners, this condition would not have existed.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I agree with my colleague completely. When a legislative program was undertaken subsequent to the banking holiday, the first and insistent demand from the Treasury was for the so-called "Couzens resolution", which would permit the Comptroller of the Currency at his discretion to allow national banks in a given State jurisdiction to live under any plan that the State legislature might create for the State banks in that jurisdiction. Under the able sponsorship of my colleague that joint resolution went through both Houses of Congress. Why was it sought if there was not an initial purpose to permit States on their own legislative initiative to help themselves if they could? Why did the new administration abandon all such procedure?

So far as the State of Michigan is concerned, we created a formula under which we could have helped and saved ourselves. For many sterile weeks we have been trying to open these banks on a partially impounded basis, which would give the depositor maximum values and would give scores of otherwise bankless communities the speediest and the surest service. Yet up to this living minute there has been no helpful cooperation—at least so far as results are concerned in connection with our Michigan plan—either from the Treasury Department or the Federal Reserve.

So I submit the comment of the Governor. I renew my own testimony. I say again, that in the final analysis, after you reopen banks, you must guarantee or insure deposits. Thus, and not otherwise, you will deserve the public confidence, which must precede normal banking and a normal flow of bank credit currency which is the medium of exchange in which more than 90 percent of our business is done.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, there has been for many years, a discussion of guaranteed bank deposits, and I have a great deal of sympathy with it. The foundation of the banking system is credit. Bank deposits are money loaned to the banks by the depositors. The larger the deposits in the bank, the more the bank owes. What the bank has borrowed from its depositors is invested in loans and securities. I believe we overlook the fact that these banks have been loaded up, as other people have been loaded up, with securities upon which interest cannot be paid. They have made loans that turned out to be bad; they have made bad investments. They are in the same boat with citizens who have bought securities of all kinds. Guaranty of their deposits by the Government is to underwrite their paper and may prove a serious obstacle when understood by the taxpayer.

When we talk of the banking situation we should, in my opinion, discuss it only from the standpoint of how those security issues are choking everyone; either because they are worthless or because of the overhead charge on industry those overcapitalized capital structures are choking business. The question is, How are we going to liquidate this situation? That is the reason and the only reason I have for voting for the pending bill because there are only two ways to liquidate, either through wholesale bankruptcy or through some sort of orderly inflation.

Keynes, the eminent British economist, said 3 years ago that the friends of inflation had better be careful or they would cause a world-wide revolution. Gold is said to be a commodity, but gold is something more than a commodity. It has been given a special status as a commodity by virtue of law. By that special status it has been made the one commodity for the purpose of paying debts. It is not only subject to the ordinary law of supply and demand, as is the ordinary commodity, but it is subject to the special economic law placed upon it by Congress—that it shall be legal tender for payment of all debts and obligations. It is because of the amount of credits which are floated payable in gold that we have this overwhelming demand for gold.

Mr. President, I should like to ask the Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency a question concerning the pending amendment. It has to do with the reduction of the gold content of the dollar possibly by 50 percent. Assuming that the President should do that under the powers granted him by the amendment, that would mean that anybody who now has an ordinary $20 gold piece or 20 gold dollars would then have just twice the number of gold dollars. Is there any provision in the amendment or in the law by which that extra number of gold dollars may be taxed? It seems to me it should be done.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. There is nothing in the pending amendment, as I recall, that provides for such taxing. It has been suggested in connection with some legislation which has been heretofore offered. It seems to me it would be a very good idea to tax up to 100 percent any profit made by those people who get the benefit of the reduction in the gold content of the dollar, if there is any such reduction. But there is nothing in this amendment to take care of it. That is a matter of legislation which may hereafter be presented. If such a measure is hereafter proposed to the effect that any contract, public or private, calling for the payment of gold dollars of any given weight or fineness shall be fully satisfied if paid in lawful money, then such measure should provide that any such gold contract, through the payment of gold dollars of the present weight and fineness, instead of in other lawful money, shall yield a profit, such profit should be declared to be subject to a tax of 100 percent thereof, and the proceeds of such tax shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. On yesterday I thought I would have an amendment prepared and I sent for the legislative counsel to have an appropriate amendment drafted. As I understood him, he informed me that the committee had thought that the matter was covered in the last four lines on page 4. Upon reading those lines this morning I could not understand how it did cover that matter and that is the reason why I have propounded my question to the Chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee.

Mr. FLETCHER. Will the Senator read the last four lines to which he refers?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. They merely provide that "such notes and all other coins and currencies heretofore or hereafter coined or issued by or under the authority of the United States shall be legal tender for all debts, public and private."

If the committee feels that that has anything to do with the other provision, I should like to have it explained; otherwise I shall have an amendment prepared providing for a 100-percent tax upon any profits that might be made by hoarders or holders of gold or by hoarders of gold who have exported their gold to other countries in order that they shall not have this undue benefit from legislation enacted in a national emergency.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I say to the Senator I think that question should more properly come up later? I would not now feel warranted in supporting such an amendment, which I am afraid would confuse or involve the proposition in a way that might interfere with the purposes of the pending amendment. I am quite in sympathy with the Senator's thought on the subject, but I do not think it should be incorporated in this pending amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Unless some provision is made to have such profits taxed, I do not see how I can vote for the amendment. I do not see how the Congress of the United States can afford by legislation to give an additional million dollars to the man who has hoarded a million dollars. It seems to me that under the provisions of the amendment that is what he would have in gold under the new dollar.

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course, the Senator realizes that is the limit provided for here. I have no idea that that authority would ever really be exercised. If it should be, there will have to be future legislation. Perhaps Congress must enact laws providing for a permanent monetary policy, and then would arise the question which the Senator has in mind. It does not seem pertinent to the pending measure.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. If the content of the gold dollar were reduced 25 percent, he would have that much profit. It seems to me some amendment should be attached to tax whatever profit is made by virtue of the amendment.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, we have heard a good deal about the banking situation in general and about the banks of Michigan in particular, and that the administration has done something to injure them. I do not rise to defend the administration because I do not know what the permanent policy of the administration is going to be with reference to banks. There is only one trouble with the banks in Michigan and that is the same trouble we have with the banks in South Dakota. They have made loans in good times and found the values of property have been shrinking, so they have lost part of the depositors' money. There is a gap and they have not been able to fill it. There is a loss and they have not been willing to admit it. Some of these Michigan bankers appeared before the Banking and Currency Committee a year ago, when the argument was made daily that the small unit bank was weak. The Michigan bankers put a great deal of emphasis on the fact they were not weak; they were strong because they were hooked up in large groups or long chains. The keenest minds of the committee were misled into believing that those were invulnerable institutions because they were so connected. The speeches made on the floor of the Senate, as disclosed by the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, will show that the committee members were misled by these bankers.

We now have a situation where one bank in Michigan has an enormous gap. Their admitted loss runs into ten or twelve million dollars. Other banks are affected by the same causes, and the State of Michigan is almost without banking facilities. Now, most of this gap must have been there a year ago, when the bankers appeared before the Banking Committee, boasting of their strength and advocating the branch-banking system as being stronger and more desirable than the unit bank. It is the result of a shrinkage of earnings, a shrinkage of values, a shrinkage of securities. There are only three ways to meet it. We can inflate the currency all we like, but there are only three ways to meet it fairly. One way is to fill the gap with money. Another is to scale the deposits and get a correct balance sheet. The third is to keep on kidding ourselves and to put some limit on the withdrawal of deposits, so the banker can pretend that all is well, and it will take him a long time to dribble out the little cash that he can raise. He can save his face and avoid the double assessment that comes with the closing of the bank and maintain his position in banking circles and in society by kidding himself. But we have one of those three things to do.

With all due regard to the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS], I knew that he offered his resolution in good faith and with hopes that it would be a solution of the situation. I remember very distinctly that the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] said then that the danger is that it would spread to every State in the Union, and it did, and we got the bank moratorium. No; I am for bank guaranty, or, rather, for bank insurance; but if we are for bank insurance we must recognize and conform to insurance principles.

First, anyone who writes life insurance does not go out to the graveyard and write life insurance on corpses [laughter], which is what we are asked to do here; or, as the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Gore] says, he does not go out on the battlefield and insure the dead. We must recognize and conform to insurance principles. As I understand, the first two rules of insurance are these:

First, you must not underwrite any risk you cannot pay. Therefore you must know the amount of the risk you are underwriting. Who knows what that amount is today, if we are going to guarantee all these loans made in boom times, which is the only way some of these banks can be kept open?

The second rule is this, based on long experience: Nobody insures for full value. The insurer will let the other party carry a little of the risk, so that he will have a responsibility in the matter, so that he also will have something to lose, and therefore will not get too reckless.

Oh, yes; we are told that we will have inspection; we will have supervision; we will protect ourselves by doing that. Since when did that idea develop? Has not every bank been examined about twice a year and certified as to its solvency all the time? Can we get any better examination than we have had?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. NORBECK. I do.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Does not the Senator think that, in the present condition of the banks of the country, for the Government to guarantee all the deposits of the banks would be a good deal like insuring against horse stealing after the horse was stolen, or starting a life-insurance company during an epidemic of Asiatic cholera?

Mr. NORBECK. I fear that is the case. I believe in bank insurance. However, we cannot start in and guarantee dead things or poor loans. We must find a period when the bank loans are safe, when there is value to property. If we are ever going to start bank insurance, we shall have to start on a healthy situation; and then it would no doubt be possible to carry it along, unless we should have another national disaster like the period we are now passing through—the worst in a hundred years.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President—

Mr. NORBECK. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. I am very much interested in the views expressed by the late chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee. The present chairman, the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], myself, and one or two others, have tendered from time to time measures looking to the guaranty of deposits. I ask the able Senator now occupying the floor, when those efforts were made, were not letters sent to the Banking and Currency Committee, either as private letters or otherwise, from the department of authority that obstructed everything looking to the protection of the deposits? And now, since the Senator from South Dakota has stated his views as to the manner in which this should not be done, will the Senator be so good as to state, from his experience, in what manner the Senator suggests it can be done?

Mr. NORBECK. I do not know any way to put life into a dead body. [Laughter.]

Mr. LEWIS. Let us assume that this is a sick body, badly wounded, but which can recover.

Mr. NORBECK. Then it ought to be patched up. I repeat what I said before, that there are only three ways to meet this situation:

First, fill the gap. Let somebody make up the losses.

Second, scale the deposits, so that we have an honest balance sheet.

Or, third, keep on "kidding" ourselves as to the solvency of the bank.

Mr. LEWIS. Taking either view, which agency does the Senator suggest shall make up the deficiency, or do the "kidding", as he calls it—the Federal Government, the State government, or those who robbed the banks?

Mr. NORBECK. Of course it is a popular term to say "robbed the banks", and we know many bankers who have robbed the banks; but the economic situation which came on here has had an influence that we cannot ignore. When values shrink to a small part of the former values, necessarily there is a loss. Sometimes it is due to dishonesty on the part of the banker, but very often it is due simply to an inability to forecast the future of things. Bankers let the loans run, hoping for an upward movement of earnings in values.

Mr. LEWIS. Take the illustration the Senator gave in a very able speech lately on this floor, where the bankers used the money of their depositors to speculate in the stock of companies of which they themselves were the owners. The Senator would not call that a mere inability to forecast the future.

Mr. NORBECK. Not at all; but if those were the only banks with which we had trouble, we would find more banks open than we do today. The Senator knows in Illinois many honest bankers who have had to close their banks—I know many in South Dakota—because when the security will not pay the amount of the loan, there is a loss. Somebody has to sustain it. I know that bankers are reluctant to close banks.

I remember a small bank in South Dakota where the State department said to the banker, "You are running behind. Your capital is impaired. You will have to cut down your expenses, or you will have to close." The banker said, "How can I cut down my expenses? I need my salary to live on. My brother needs his salary. My son-in-law needs his salary." The whole family needed their salaries, and they could not close the bank. They were living on the depositors' money [laughter], "kidding" themselves. That banker would like to have a moratorium so that he could pay out just a little to the depositors and keep his bank going a long time.

Mr. LEWIS. We lawyers often hear of the old lawyer who, coming home and finding that his son had closed out an estate, said to him, "Why should you do such a thing, when the family has been living on that estate for all these years?" [Laughter.]

Mr. NORBECK. Yes; the eminent Senator from Illinois knows the situation and is sincerely interested in a remedy.

Mr. LEWIS. But I ask the Senator, what has he to suggest?

Mr. NORBECK. To deal honestly with the question; to inventory the assets of the bank according to the present situation, and tell the depositors honestly what the assets are. That is the first step, instead of saying to the depositors, "You can have only part of your money today, and you can have some more next month, or next year." The bank could then be reopened on the basis of the actual value existing at the present time.

Mr. LEWIS. Would there be no provision made, then, to give the depositor back his money? Remember it was his money.

Mr. NORBECK. There are only two ways to liquidate a bank. One is for the depositors to liquidate it, and the other is for a receiver to liquidate it. If the value is not there, there is no way to put it there, unless somebody is willing to put it in.

Mr. LEWIS. That is why I ask the able Senator, would he suggest that the Federal Government shall assume to try to protect these depositors?

Mr. NORBECK. No; I do not think the taxpayers should go and make up the bad loans that the banker made, nor do I think it is possible for the taxpayers to carry the burden necessary to rehabilitate all these banks at this time. I think the losses are so large that the taxpayers are not able to make it up.

On the other hand, I believe in it. I believe we should start right. If we start wrong we will just have one more blow-up. I believe that when we get over this depression, and get on an even keel, and values are equalized, bank insurance is a proper thing.

Mr. LEWIS. That would indicate, then, that the present depositors who have lost their money shall have all their money lost, and probably shall be dead and buried before anything shall be done in another generation looking to what the Senator calls a rehabilitation.

Mr. NORBECK. The Senator used the expression "the depositors who have lost their money." Yes; they will continue to have it lost unless somebody makes it up for them. The Senator will agree with me as to that. Does the Senator suggest that the taxpayers should make it up for them?

Mr. LEWIS. I suggest that the Federal Government, having held itself out as watching and protecting these banks, and having allowed these people to deposit in institutions that went under the name of national banks, should take steps to recover that money for the depositors where it has been wrrenched from them by the officials of the Government.

Mr. NORBECK. The trouble, I believe the Senator will agree with me, is that to rehabilitate all the banks in which there have been losses will take more money than the Treasury can stand. We talk as though there were no limit to the Treasury. The fact is, however, that the Treasury also has a limit.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NORBECK. I do.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator has expounded this apparently mysterious and intricate question with a clarity that would do credit to a great banker and a great financier; but certainly the Senator could not assent to the proposition, and did not, that in the case of State banks, with which the Federal Government has no concern whatever, and never did have any concern, because values have shrunk and losses have been sustained by depositors, the taxpayers of the United States should be compelled to pay those depositors in State banks.

Mr. NORBECK. I am afraid the taxpayers are not able to pay them all.

Mr. KING. There is no moral obligation and no legal obligation upon the part of the taxpayers of the United States to pay the depositors of some bank in the Senator's State, or some bank in the State of the Senator from Illinois, where that bank has failed simply because of the misconduct of those in charge of the bank or because of the loss in the value of securities. That is one of the inevitable things that occur. Men have lost their all, though they have not had it in banks, in legitimate business because of the shrinkage in commodity prices and in assets.

It seems to me the Senator's position is absolutely sound, that we cannot guarantee dead bodies.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I cannot agree with the statement made by the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] that the pending amendment—the Thomas amendment—is the most important piece of legislation in 6,000 years. Nevertheless, I do believe it raises questions of grave importance. Therefore I ask the indulgence of the Senate to place upon the record briefly my attitude toward some of the aspects of this problem.

Inflation is not a new device. It has been employed through all history, and in many crises various governments have resorted to it. I think it will be generally conceded by historians that the Revolutionary War could not have been conducted without resorting to inflation. I think it will likewise be generally conceded that neither the North nor the South could have financed their operations during the Civil War without a resort to inflation. Inflation has come to have a bad name, Mr. President, like many other powerful medicines, because too frequent use or an overdose may have a harmful effect upon the patient.

From the beginning of this crisis there have been, generally speaking, two schools of thought concerning it. One school of thought might be termed the deflationist school.

They have argued from the beginning of this depression that we might permit these economic forces to run their course. They have contended that the economic factors out of balance would gradually come to rest; that through foreclosures and bankruptcies the debt and capital structure could be written down, and that upon this basis there could be builded a slow and painful recovery.

The other group might be termed the inflationist school. They have taken the position that in a highly organized industrial and agricultural society the readjustment period during deflation becomes too painful; that the human suffering involved is too great for vast sections of the population to bear; that at some point in process of deflation millions of persons no longer will absorb punishment, and that they then take matters into their own hands to obtain relief if they cannot secure it from their Government.

During this period of deflation, of course, what is fundamentally going on is a change in the ownership of property. So far as I am personally concerned, I have never believed that we could successfully carry out deflation to its logical conclusion. I have been convinced that before the deflation could run its course, the people by some means would arrest it.

It is perfectly evident, Mr. President, that in many sections of the United States that point has already been reached. In State after State in this Union it is today impossible to foreclose a mortgage upon a farm. The farmers, weary after these 13 long years of suffering, have taken matters into their own hands, and they have suspended the civil process of law.

For more than 2 years I have advocated inflation, but an inflation based upon a program to put people back to work and thus to restore mass purchasing power; for, if I may make bold to say so, I think that those who rely upon inflation alone to remedy conditions such as now confront us have become too enamored of the quantitative theory of money.

They overlook two important factors in our economic situation. One is that it is not only the amount of currency in circulation, but it is the velocity with which it circulates that counts. Secondly, they have overlooked the fact that in the United States we are much more dependent upon bank deposits or bank money than we are on actual currency in circulation. At the end of June 1932 we had about $42,000,000,000 in bank deposits and about five and a half billion dollars of currency in circulation. In other words, if we think of bank deposits and money in circulation together, they bear the relationship of about 90 to 10.

Mr. LEWIS. What does the Senator mean by 90 to 10, may I ask?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. We are dependent about 90 percent upon bank deposits or bank money and about 10 percent on money in circulation.

There are several indexes of the velocity of circulation, but one index which I think is significant is that which shows the total amount of debits to individual bank accounts in 141 cities for which we have statistics. It seems quite obvious that the general business turnover is the best index of the velocity of money circulation, since every transaction gives rise to a transfer of money in either currency or in bank credit.

During the period 1922 to 1929 the velocity of bank-money circulation increased more rapidly than the volume of such money. The figures of the debits to individual accounts were the following, per month:

Thirty-six billion dollars per month in 1922.

Fifty billion dollars per month in 1926.

Seventy-eight billion dollars per month in 1929.

During the past 3 or 4 months they have dropped to $25,000,000,000 per month.

Taking the Federal Reserve Board indexes as a further indication of the depth which this depression has now reached, its index of industrial production, adjusted, in February stood at 64, a point only slightly more than one half of the 1929 maximum of 125. This is the lowest point in recent history at which the index of industrial production has stood in the month of February.

Factory employment and pay-roll employment, adjusted, stood in February at 59.4, less than 60 percent of the July 1929 high of 102.8.

The adjusted index of freight-car loadings stood in February at 54, only a little more than one half of the figure normally attained in February in predepression years, when it usually ranged from 91 to 99.

The bank debits, outside of New York City, which is the index reflecting business activity outside of that financial center, stood at 52.7 in February, contrasted with 86.6 in February 1931, 109 in February 1930, and 124.1 in February 1929.

The index for the construction industry reached 18 in February of this year, lower than at any time since these indexes have been compiled by the Federal Reserve Board. This figure is in contrast with 79 in February 1931, 104 in February 1930, and 118 in February 1929.

Mr. President, there are two objections which I have to the general theory upon which the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma is based. One is that it is entirely permissive in character; it does not provide for any definite or specific amount of inflation, nor does it provide for the achievement of a particular economic objective through inflation. The second objection which I have to it is that it is inflation alone. It does not provide for any increase in the total purchasing power of the people of this country.

May I say that there is grave danger in the employment of inflation as a device by itself, for we must not forget that the purchasing power, the income, of the people of the United States has been deflated by one third to one half since 1929. Wages, salaries, incomes of all sorts and descriptions, have been deflated during this period.

If we attain the objective which the inflationists per se contend will flow from the exercise of the power granted in this amendment, namely, a sharp increase in commodity prices, what have we done to those who are upon fixed-income bases? What have we done to those who have had their wages ground down until today it is not uncommon in the textile industry for women to be working 56 hours a week for $2 a week?

We will have decreased their ability to buy. In other words, millions living in the urban communities, as well as upon the farms, have been put through the wringer of deflation once. If we employ the device of inflation without a corresponding provision for increasing purchasing power and for speeding up spending then, assuming that commodity prices do rise sharply, we will have only succeeded in putting them through the wringer a second time during inflation.

Furthermore, do not forget the danger of the lag in time between the rise in commodity prices and the time when it will actually put purchasing power into the pockets of the farmer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time on the amendment has expired.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will take my time on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized for 15 minutes on the bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, if wheat goes up tomorrow; if corn, if hogs, if cotton, if tobacco go up tomorrow, relatively speaking, there will be little of those commodities in the hands of the actual producer. We must wait for actual purchasing power to be distributed to the masses of the farmers through an increase in commodity prices for the marketing of the crop to come afterward. In the meantime, by a sharp rise in commodity prices we will likewise have diminished the ability of those who live in urban communities, as well as those who live upon the farms, to purchase commodities. In other words, I raise the question as to whether or not that lag in time to which I have just adverted may not be more than overcome by the sharp decrease in the ability to buy of those who live in the urban as well as the rural communities during the period following immediately after a sharp rise in commodity prices.

Mr. President, the point which I am trying to make is that I subscribe wholeheartedly to the theory of a controlled inflation, but, in my judgment, if we are to make that experiment successful, it must be an integral part of a program to distribute purchasing power, to create opportunities for work, and to purchase materials. In other words, what we are in crying need of at this hour is something to force the spending of money in the United States.

We have more currency in circulation today than we had in 1929. It is the velocity that has fallen off, and we cannot secure velocity through the employment of the inflationary device alone, unless we are willing to carry it to the point where we cause a flight from the dollar into tangible goods, and, so far as I know, there is no person in this Chamber advocating such an inflation at this time.

I was in Germany in 1923, when her inflation had gotten out of control, when it had become a wildcat inflation. I saw the people rush from the factories, when they were paid off, into the stores to buy goods which they did not need in order that they might secure tangible goods before the currency depreciated in their hands. I talked with taxi drivers in the city of Berlin who told me they had 12 pairs of shoes and 14 suits of clothes at home, only because they wished to translate their everdepreciating currency into tangible goods.

I assume that there is no person who now seriously contemplates any such inflation as that in this country. Therefore, I say again that if this controlled inflation is to be successful it must be combined with a gigantic program to put the people of the United States back to work, to distribute purchasing power, to pay out the money for the purchase of materials, to increase transportation through the hauling of those commodities and those materials.

Mr. President, because other countries have experienced a wildcat inflation which has proved disastrous does not deter me from being willing to try the experiment. I believe that currency inflation can be controlled if there be the will to control it. Great Britain has been operating on controlled inflation ever since September 1931. Sweden has a managed currency, which thus far has worked very well, so far as any information I have been able to obtain about it is concerned. Therefore I am perfectly willing to take this first step, as provided in the pending amendment. But I am willing to do that because I am convinced that the second and more necessary step, in my opinion, will be forthcoming, namely, the adoption of a huge program to provide purchasing power, work opportunities, and the stimulation of industry, through a gigantic program of construction to put people back to work.

I predicate my belief that such a program will be forthcoming upon the utterances made by President Roosevelt in the 1932 campaign. I did not determine that I would support President Roosevelt until he stated in his Commonwealth Club speech and in his speech at Atlanta that he recognized that there was only one way out of the depression, and that was to restore the purchasing power of the masses of the people of this country. I did not ask him to write a bill over the radio in a campaign; but his statement convinced me, as I think it did millions of others, that Candidate Roosevelt saw the crux of this problem, and that he had the courage to announce his position upon it. I have faith now that he will carry it out.

Mr. President, I am in hearty sympathy with the statements made by the Senator from Idaho, the two Senators from Michigan, and the Senator from Nebraska. In 1929 there were $56,000,000,000 of bank deposits in the United States; in 1932 they had shrunk to $42,000,000,000—a deflation in this form of purchasing power of $13,000,000,000.

It is generally conceded that there has been, as a result of the emergency bank crisis, a further deflation in this form of purchasing power, namely, bank deposits, amounting to $5,000,000,000. My own opinion, Mr. President, is that it is larger; I believe that before the bank crisis shall be over there will have been an additional eight to ten billion dollars of bank deposits wiped out; but taking the semi-official estimate, we find that since 1929 bank deposits in the United States have been wiped out to the tune of $18,000,000,000. Therefore, Mr. President, I am not afraid to try a controlled inflation. I come back, however, to the original statement of my position. I am ready to take this first step, but by the same token I am likewise determined that we shall take the second step. Unless we combine inflation with a program to put people to work, unless we increase the total purchasing power of the people, this experiment will prove a tragic failure. We must guard against making life more difficult for millions of people in the United States.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas obtained the floor.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield in order that I may suggest the absence of a quorum?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Copeland	Johnson	Reed
Ashurst	Costigan	Kean	Reynolds
Austin	Couzens	Kendrick	Robinson, Ark.
Bachman	Cutting	Keyes	Robinson, Ind.
Bailey	Dale	King	Russell
Bankhead	Dickinson	La Follette	Sheppard
Barbour	Dieterich	Lewis	Shipstead
Barkley	Dill	Logan	Smith
Black	Duffy	Lonergan	Stelwer
Bone	Erickson	Long	Stephens
Borah	Fess	McAdoo	Thomas, Okla.
Bratton	Fletcher	McCarran	Thomas, Utah
Brown	Frazier	McNary	Townsend
Bulkeley	George	Metcalf	Trammell

Collidge	Hebert	Pope

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ninety Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the debate has taken a wide range this morning. Subjects not relative to the pending amendment have been discussed. They are of very great importance. My purpose is to limit the remarks now to be made to the consideration of the amendment that is before the Senate.

For many years the subject matter of the pending amendment has been discussed in the Congress of the United States. Various measures have from time to time been advanced. That there is among veterans a demand for anticipation of maturities of adjusted-compensation certificates no one acquainted with public opinion can deny. That demand heretofore has been organized. Large groups have advanced on the National Capital and camped upon the grounds immediately surrounding this building for the avowed and express purpose of compelling the immediate cash payment of adjusted-compensation certificates.

During the course of this debate statements in the nature of threats have been made, implying that political danger menaces those who do not find it consistent with their duty to attach to a farm relief bill a measure obligating and requiring the Government of the United States immediately to pay approximately $2,400,000,000, which, under the terms of existing contracts, will not mature until 1945.

One who has, as I believe all of us have, a full appreciation of the splendid valor that was demonstrated by the men who wore our uniform during the great World War, would be loath, if conditions permitted, to deny any reasonable request that might be submitted by our veterans; but, Mr. President, I am constrained to oppose the amendment of the Senator from Indiana and to state, within the brief limit of time within which I am permitted to discuss the subject, some of the reasons which impel me to take that position.

The first two paragraphs of this bill, known as the "currency-inflation provisions", are intended for the express purpose of enabling the Treasury to make provisions for maturing Treasury obligations. It has been overlooked during this debate that throughout the last few years, with the authority of the Congress, Government corporations, as well as the Treasury itself, have been issuing enormous quantities of short-time paper; and that these short-term notes may only be refunded or refinanced through the instrumentality of the banks. We have created and assumed literally hundreds of millions of dollars of obligations in an effort to stimulate employment, in an effort to maintain the banks in operation for the benefit of the depositors, in efforts to revive and revitalize business in our great land, and we are now confronted with and must face the problem of making provision for the refunding or absorbing the obligations thus created.

The first section, as is well understood, contemplates agreements between the Secretary of the Treasury and the Federal Reserve banks by which the latter will accept or purchase the obligations of the United States referred to. Some question has been raised here as to why the Government does not require the banks to take these obligations. I think it is not within the power of the Government to require by law a private institution to discount any obligations. If the first provision shall not operate successfully, if the Federal Reserve banks shall refuse to purchase the obligations of the United States Government, there may be recourse to the issuance of Treasury notes, the limitation in each case, both with respect to the first provision and with respect to the issuance of Treasury notes, being $3,000,000,000.

I shall not at this time attempt to enter into a discussion of the subject of inflation. That there is a measure of inflation in the provisions referred to none can deny. As to whether it is properly safeguarded there is doubt in the minds of some. Let it be pointed out, however, that if Treasury notes are issued an annual sinking fund of 4 percent is provided for the purpose of retiring the notes, and they will be retired within a period of 25 years.

The adjusted-compensation certificates do not mature until 1945 and that maturity was based upon a valuable consideration. It was 25 percent, I believe, that was added to account and to compensate for deferring the payments. It is proposed now, at a time when every possible effort is being made to overcome a deficit which threatens the credit of the United States, to anticipate obligations which will not mature for a period of 12 years and to refuse to permit the Government to have even the opportunity of refunding obligations which are now maturing.

Some question has been raised during the course of the debate as to the attitude of the President of the United States touching this amendment. I am authorized to say for him that he is unqualifiedly against the amendment. He believes that the incorporation of the amendment will reverse the policy of the pending bill and defeat the purpose in mind to secure an arrangement by which maturing obligations of the Government may be provided for.

I cannot enter into a prolonged discussion of the subject for the reason that my time is almost exhausted. There has been no reference of the amendment to any committee. It is presented here from the floor. No one has attempted to determine what will be the effect of the amendment upon the credit of the United States.

There is no legal obligation on the Government to anticipate the payment of the adjusted-compensation certificates. These certificates were worked out carefully under the law, and they do not mature until 1945. If times were prosperous, if conditions permitted, if there were not already great deficits in the Treasury, one in a spirit of generosity might be prompted to anticipate the maturity of these obligations. But how can we involve the Government in substantially a new debt of $2,400,000,000 under present conditions? Of course, it may be said that these certificates in time must be paid.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. My time is very limited, and I prefer not to yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. I merely desire to invite the Senator's attention to the fact that the amendment as now presented leaves it wholly discretionary with the President.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I am glad the Senator interrupted me. The President is opposed to the amendment, and I think it is safe to say that if the discretion were vested with him he would not exercise such discretion. To be entirely frank with the Senate, I think it is unfair, under the circumstances I have stated, to shift the burden of responsibility to the President of the United States when it is well known and stated on the floor of the Senate that he does not seek this discretion, that he does not believe the amendment should be adopted.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Arkansas said the President does not seek the amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. He is opposed to it.

Mr. CONNALLY. He does not want it?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. He does not want it. He is strongly opposed to it. He regards it as exceedingly objectionable.

What is to be accomplished except to relieve Senators from the present pressure incident to an attempt to inject into this bill a subject which—

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, did not the Senator announce on the floor that the President was opposed to the silver amendment some few days ago?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Did I make the announcement?

Mr. LONG. Yes; I think the Senator did.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I think I made no announcement on the subject.

Mr. LONG. Did not the Senator state to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] that the President was against the 16-to-1 silver amendment? I think the Senator made the announcement.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What of it?

Mr. LONG. We voted it into the bill. The Senator himself voted to give the President that power after the President had announced he did not want it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator well knows that has no point in this discussion. The amendment which was finally agreed to relating to silver does give the President a discretion, but it does not attempt to fix the ratio of 16 to 1 or any other ratio. The statement I made was with relation to an entirely different proposition, and the Senator from Louisiana must understand it.

Mr. President, I think I have made clear the attitude of the President on this subject. It is foreign to the general subject matter of the legislation. Those who wish to defeat the legislation may be justified, if they favor the pending proposal, in giving it support; but if they wish to make some provision by which the Treasury may have the opportunity to take care of its maturing obligations, then, in my judgment, they should vote against the pending amendment.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. I have been very much interested in the argument of the Senator from Arkansas. I realize the safety of his leadership and his patriotism and integrity in all matters. But since I have to disagree with his argument—

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I hope the Senator will remember that my time is limited.

Mr. LOGAN. I shall not interrupt the Senator further.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, how much time have I remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 3 minutes more on the amendment.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Arkansas be given more time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. No, Mr. President, I do not request an extension of time, because the limitation was imposed at my suggestion, and I do not think it would be fair for me to ask or accept an extension unless I am willing to grant it to everyone else, which would have the effect of destroying the very agreement which I labored so hard to secure.

Mr. LONG. I was not undertaking to accommodate the Senator. I believe he is laboring to use 15 minutes to justify his position.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the Senator from Louisiana has volunteered a statement. The Senator has a habit of getting smart here on the floor, and he has a habit of quoting the Scripture. I think I will give him a little Scripture: "How long wilt thou speak these things, and how long shall the words of thy mouth be like a strong wind?" [Laughter.]

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I will take a few moments' time to state my position upon the pending amendment. In order to make my position clear I must recount briefly the history of the so-called "bonus proposal."

In the session of the last Congress which adjourned in July 1932 Representative PATMAN, of Texas, introduced the so-called "bonus measure" in the House of Representatives. I introduced the same bill in the Senate. During that session the House passed the so-called "Patman bill", and it came to the Senate for action. When the bill reached this body I did what I could to get the measure before the Senate for consideration. The Senate Committee on Finance cooperated to have that done. The bill was reported out promptly, and after a full and free discussion a vote was had. That vote was adverse to the Patman bill. The bill received in this body but 20 votes.

After the vote was taken but before it was announced, the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] changed his vote from "yea" to "nay", and I did likewise. I changed my vote, I may say, for the express purpose of being in a parliamentary position to enter a motion for reconsideration. Immediately upon the vote being announced, I entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill had been defeated, whereupon immediately a motion was made to reconsider the vote forthwith and to table that motion, and upon a roll call that motion prevailed and the motion to reconsider was tabled.

Mr. President, I think that the veterans, at least of my State and of some of the other States, are not in doubt as to my position upon the payment of the bonus. I worked for the bonus bill last year. I still have a conviction, inasmuch as others who had dealings with the Government during the war period have been paid practically all amounts claimed to be due them, that the soldiers likewise should be paid at the earliest possible date.

I introduced the so-called "inflation amendment" to the pending bill, which suggests a program for increasing the amount of money in circulation. The program embodied in the pending inflationary amendment, as I understand, has the approval of the administration. The senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] has resurrected the so-called "Patman-Thomas bonus bill" of 1932 and offered this resurrected bill as an amendment to my so-called "inflation amendment." In brief, the Senator from Indiana seizes my proposal of the last Congress and offers the same as an amendment to my pending inflation amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The Senator is substantially correct. However, the method of financing it is, of course, entirely different.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I shall point that out to the Senate.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. May I ask the Senator from Oklahoma if he will give his view as to the constitutionality of the bonus amendment as it now stands, which proposes to give uncontrolled discretion to the President to determine whether or not it shall be paid?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I shall not be diverted to the question of the constitutionality of the proposal. I have not considered the matter from that standpoint. I am now considering the matter from the standpoint of policy, and policy alone.

The two amendments are exactly similar save in the method of payment. The Patman-Thomas proposal was to pay the soldiers by the issuance of Treasury notes, but the Treasury notes were to be backed by a certain form of bonds. The pending proposal changes that from payment based upon bonds to a payment direct from the Treasury as contained in the last section of the amendment. The principle, however, is the same.

The end, if not the purpose, of the Robinson amendment is to embarrass me by placing me in the position of either being forced to accept one of my former proposals as an amendment to the inflation proposal or to reject such proposal and vote against one of my proposals when it is sought to attach it to another of my proposals.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Of course, the Senator understands there is no intention on my part to embarrass him in the slightest degree. The only interest I have in the matter at all is to get the bonus paid to the veterans while they need it. That is the only object I have in view.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Let me say to my colleagues in this body here today who were here last June and July and let me likewise say to the veterans of the Nation, to their families and friends, that I am just as strong for the payment of the soldiers bonus today as I was last June and July; but before we vote to accept the Robinson proposal we should, in my judgment, analyze the conditions which confront us at this hour.

At Pittsburgh last fall, the President—at that time a candidate—stated that he would favor the payment of the bonus just as soon as the finances of the Treasury would permit. That was a proposal that he made to the Nation; and upon that statement, and upon that platform, he won his unprecedented victory.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Has the Senator there the quotation from the President's Pittsburgh speech?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I have not. I am quoting it from memory.

Mr. LONG. My recollection of that speech was about like this: He repeated his statement made in April 1932. He said this:

"I said in April that it was not sound sense for the Government to pay more out of its Treasury until its expenditures keep pace with its income, and that we could not pay out at this time the amount of money that the bonus would involve; but", he said, "I am advocating the legalization of beer to put money in the Treasury."

I do not think the statement was anything other than that.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, Government finances are in a worse condition today than they were when that statement was made in Pittsburgh. I am advised that the President does not now think it advisable to undertake the payment of the bonus, and that if such an amendment should be adopted the whole program for inflation would be placed in jeopardy.

Personally, I have worked long and hard to have this program of expansion of the currency applied as a measure of relief for the existing distress so universally current throughout the entire country. If such a program is applied and it works as contemplated, then the veterans, their families, and their friends will share in such relief. If the plan is defeated through a veto, then the veterans and their families and their friends will be denied the benefits which we hope will accrue to all our people through the adoption and the proper exercise of power conferred by this amendment.

Because the President does not want the additional power and responsibility, and because such power, if conferred, would not be exercised, I must express the hope that the amendment be rejected.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I feel that the ex-service men should be paid the debt that is due them. From shortly after the war I have advocated the readjustment of the compensation of the ex-service men. That is a matter of history. I have fought for that position throughout the whole time that it was an issue. I voted to pass the legislation over the veto of the President. I still think that the adjusted compensation was right, that its enactment into law was an expression of that fact, and that the debt is due these soldiers.

I was opposed to the issuance of the compensation certificates. I opposed it on the floor as an improper borrowing of money from those who were unable to make the loan. I have voted since that time for cashing those certificates.

I realize fully that millions of ex-service men in this country feel that they have been done an injustice in being deprived of the money that was due them, and which the Congress of the United States, by almost unanimous vote, determined was due them. I think it was unjust. I realize today that millions of them cannot understand why the Government should not pay that debt now. It is not surprising to me that they cannot understand it. It is almost impossible for anyone to understand the situation that exists in this country or in the world. With the enormous amount of wealth we have in our banks, the tremendous amount of natural resources we have in the country, and the great surplus of foodstuffs and clothing that exist here, it is certainly impossible to understand why 13,000,000 men and women should be idle, why probably 13,000,000 more depending upon them should be suffering from a lack of food and clothing; and yet that is a fact.

Some of us—perhaps all of us—have come to the conclusion that industry such as manufacture never can be helped by the loan of money until there are purchasers for manufactured products. Many of us have come to the conclusion that we must help the buyer before we can start the wheels of industry. We have come to the conclusion that all new wealth comes from the ground, either in the form of agricultural products or in the form of minerals. We have come to the conclusion that when those new products of the earth which continue to come out find a market for more than it costs to produce them, then we will establish the buying power which will start the wheels of industry and the employment of men.

That is the chief aim of this administration. Its chief aim is to raise commodity prices in this country, and particularly the prices of our largest commodities, which come from the farm and from the ground. We know also that our laborers are a large part of our domestic purchasers; but our laborers who are now idle are idle chiefly by reason of being discharged from factories, and they cannot go back to the factories until the farmers of this country can start to purchase.

So, having agreed on a program that the first thing to do is to lift the commodity prices of this country, and particularly agricultural commodity prices, we must hold our minds upon that point.

That program has been carefully worked out by the President of the United States. He announced it during his campaign. He has stood steadfastly by it all the time. We must trust someone. We must trust some leadership. We may have a hundred leaders in this country, possibly of equal ability, but if they are going in opposite directions, we shall have a divided force which cannot carry out any program.

So far as I am concerned, I have absolute confidence in the President. I have absolute confidence in his program. There are a great many things that he would like to do simultaneously with it, as I should like to have him do a great many things simultaneously with it; but I cannot forget that of the 13,000,000 idle men in this country, at least one third are ex-service men. If that is the case, then possibly two thirds of the ex-service men are not in the idle class. They may be earning a living, and they may not be suffering to the extent that the other 13,000,000, one third of whom are also ex-service men, are suffering. We propose to distribute the proposed inflation through the raising of commodity prices and employment. Our ideal is employment; and, as was said by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] just a few minutes ago, all of this program is useless, it is futile, it is worthless, unless we can furnish work for the millions of idle people in this country, that their purchasing power may be restored and increased. The price of farm products cannot be successfully raised without putting these 13,000,000 in a position to purchase.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President—

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The principle of this so-called "bonus" legislation is not even closely related to that proposition.

It is true that service men are out of employment and suffer with the rest; but the whole theory back of paying the so-called "bonus" or "adjusted-service pay"—which averages about a dollar a day, or a little more, for the length of time in the service—is that we may liquidate and discharge a debt, an obligation which the Government admitted in 1924 that it owes these veterans. If it is a debt, an obligation that it owes, it has been due since the day the armistice was signed, November 11, 1918, and is not due in 1945. It is overdue. [Applause in the galleries.]

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I move that we have order, and that the Presiding Officer admonish the occupants of the galleries.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to admonish the occupants of the galleries that it is strictly against the rules of the Senate to give any demonstration of approval or disapproval; and if it is repeated, the Chair will have the galleries cleared to the extent of the violation of the rules.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I still see no difference between the Senator from Indiana and myself with regard to this whole problem of the ex-service men from start to finish or his statement that the bonus is due and should have been paid long ago. What I am discussing is a program that the President of the United States worked out long ago and is now carrying out. It is the order in which these things shall be done.

We are providing for an inflation of the currency. The program carries with it an inflation for the purpose of increasing commodity prices in this country. It is my opinion that should we now pay in cash the debt which we owe to the ex-service men of this country and fail to raise commodity prices, that money would be but a temporary assistance to them, and when spent it would work its way back into the banks and the vaults and the safe-deposit boxes and be hidden again, because money is not coming out of the banks, it is not coming out of the safe-deposit boxes, until there is a steady, orderly, and continuous rise in commodity prices.

Therefore I say that we must follow a program. The program has been laid out. I cannot for one moment conceive that there is in the heart and the mind of the President, any more than there is in my heart or mind, a purpose to do these soldiers an injustice or to postpone for a single day longer than it is necessary the absolute payment of that debt. I believe that they will be happier if they assist their own unemployed—for one third of the unemployed are ex-service men—and assist the farmer in raising his commodity prices, so that it may soon be brought about that the President will find a surplus in the Treasury of the United States and the money with which to pay these ex-service men in cash what is owed them.

Mr. President, I realize that any Senator on this floor who has taken the position I have taken ever since the war, who has taken the position before his constituents I have taken, who is a recognized friend of the ex-service man and in sympathy with him as I have been and am now, stands a chance of being misunderstood, stands a chance of retaliation; but I say that in these terrific times, when destruction not only faces governments, but people in business and on the farm are facing bankruptcy, it is the duty of everyone here to take the consequences of doing his honest duty and following his judgment as he sees it.

I believe that today prosperity is approaching in this country. I believe that the program of the President is going steadily to raise commodity prices to a level where there will be a profit. I believe that he is going through with a great program of public works which will take the suffering, idle people of this country and put them to work, and I believe that when that prosperity comes—and I believe it will come soon if the President's program is uninterrupted—then, as was evidently the President's intention when he spoke at Pittsburgh, he will carry out what all of us believe to be a duty and obligation of this Government and settle once and for all the monetary debt we owe to the soldiers of the country—because we can never pay to them the debt of gratitude this country owes them.

I regret so much even to appear to speak against the desires of a great number of soldiers of this country, yet in my heart, in my soul, and in my judgment I am confident that the President has the right program which, if he is unobstructed, will work out not only for the benefit of all the people of this country but will bring about the restoration of the soldiers of the country and the payment of their debt more quickly than anything else could do it.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I do not know that the amendment that is proposed is of the best terms to meet the present situation; but since I witnessed during the early years of the depression, and the more acute years of the depression, and see at the present time no effort or interest apparently on the part of those who are the leaders in either the House of Representatives or the Senate, to make any provision whatever to assist the veterans of the World War during this crucial time, I am going to vote for the amendment that is proposed. I will do so with no particular expectation of its being adopted, but I want it distinctly understood that I think the case of the veterans is worthy and should be considered. They have been deserving of consideration during the past 3 years, but they have not received that attention and justice which I feel they deserve at the hands of Congress.

In all of the legislation that has been enacted during this session there has been nothing beneficial to the veteran. He has suffered so far the brunt of the economy program. About $400,000,000 have been taken off the compensation that was to have been paid to the soldiers. With some of them their compensation, probably, should have been reduced. In at least some instances they probably should have been stricken from the roll entirely, but to strike from the benefits to which Congress had previously said these veterans were entitled, the sum of $400,000,000 at one stroke was certainly not very kind consideration for the veterans of the country.

I believe in economy; I believe we should have adopted a plan of economy; I have always worked and voted for economy; but, to be frank about the plan and the system, I am not in sympathy with the ruthless way and manner in which it was applied to the veterans of the country as the very first decided move under the plan for economy.

I know the kindly feelings of the President, and appreciate them. I voted for the economy bill, having every confidence in him. But the Economy Act in that particular was not administered by the President; it was administered by the Veterans' Administration and the head of the Veterans' Administration. As far as legislation is concerned, for 3 years, the soldier has been the forgotten man.

Mr. President, let us consider the matter of assistance granted under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act. The administration of the law was as generous as seemed necessary in the beginning toward assisting railroads. It has been as generous as seemed necessary from the beginning in the assistance of building and loan associations, and every character of security held by corporations and by banks. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has been generous in the making of loans for so-called "self-liquidating projects"; but we have not seen anything written into any of these laws under which the soldier could even borrow money upon his compensation certificate—a security representing a Government obligation, a certificate which was issued to him by the Government of the United States.

Mr. President, I am not making any complaint, but I feel a very serious disappointment that, in all of this plan for taking care of the depression, and for the alleviation of the hardships being suffered by the people, there has been no legislation whatever brought forth or suggested for the direct benefit of the veterans of the country, and I do not think they should be ignored. They have good security, and should be authorized to borrow money. They have better security than much of that behind the $2,000,000,000 which has already been loaned by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to the insurance companies, the railroads, the banks, and other corporations of the country. Yet one is accused of disloyalty if he says that the veterans in all this picture, in all this great scene of distress and despair in this country, are entitled to a cash bonus or to loans on his certificate which the United States Government has given them. I am for any reasonable plan to help the veterans to get relief on their compensation certificates.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I will yield, but I do not want to lose any of my time, which is limited to 15 minutes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I just want to suggest to the Senator that he is quite right. Nothing has been done for the veteran during the 3 years of the depression, but much has been done against him. Even his vested rights have been taken from him, after they had been established in him by the Congress, without consulting him in the slightest degree, and after he has adjusted his life to living according to those rights and benefits.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Of course, I know we had to effectuate economy, but I think that even under the economy bill it is very pathetic, that it is a tragedy beyond the imagination of the most imaginative, to reflect that the first groups and the first element of our citizenry in all this country who had to be the first stricken under the economy act were the veterans who had fought for and defended the Nation in the hour of its peril.

Mr. President, I feel that some consideration should be given to them. Of course, this matter has come up rather hurriedly, and some other plan might have been worked out. We are working on a farm-relief proposal, and I am heartily in favor of what will help the farmer; but this is not the first time that I have witnessed in this body a plea for the defeat of some amendment which someone favored because some certain amendment was attached to it. I have seen splendid amendments defeated upon that excuse in many instances. Had any effort been made heretofore during the last year and a half or two years to make any equitable and just settlement with our veterans, then, of course, I might respond a little more, and be appealed to a little more, when I am told, "Just do not vote for this." You will never get a chance, my friends, to vote for anything in behalf of the veterans unless conditions change very much if you do not vote for something in the nature of an amendment to some other bill, and I am going to support the amendment.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I just wanted to make this remark to the Senator: After condemning the railroads for their bad practices we passed a law to help them get out of trouble. After condemning the banks for their robbery we passed a law to get them out of trouble, and now we cry over the veterans but take $400,000,000 away from them.

Mr. TRAMMELL. That is true. The people who fought for the Nation, who suffered for the Nation, and never under God's sun have harmed the Nation in any respect, were never guilty of doing anything that would tend toward undermining the institutions of the United States, the defenders of our Government, whom we all cherish and love, who have been faithful and loyal to the flag both on the battlefield and in peace—those people are punished, probably on account of their patriotism, on account of their loyalty in war and in peace. They are forgotten on account of their loyalty and their patriotism in time of war and in time of peace.

Mr. President, these veterans were not only faithful, they were not only the able defenders of the United States in the greatest war of all history, but following the war, taking them as a group or class, there has been no more patriotic group of citizens than the veterans of the Great War. In fact, I have found them in the main more zealous and more energetic in defending the principles of our American system of government than any other group of citizens. Yet some Senators here say they must not even be considered. I do not say that we should have to pay them at this moment the $2,000,000,000 all in a lump, or anything of that character, but my disappointment is that they get no consideration from Congress.

Mr. President, as far as my position is concerned, I think that the best remedy at the present time, and under the present financial conditions, would be to authorize them to obtain loans without interest upon the face value of their adjusted-service certificates. Give them that recognition, and the security which the Government would receive would be worth 100 cents on the dollar, whereas much of the security that has already been accepted, and is in the hands of the Government agencies, is not today worth more than 70 or 75 cents on the dollar, and upon some of it we will never realize at all.

I think it is desirable to make secure every class of industry. The Government is willing to advance large sums of money for that purpose, at least in some direction. We are expecting to authorize shortly expansion for the purpose of raising money for the objects mentioned in the bill, and while it is a little irregular to adopt an amendment of this character on a measure of the kind pending, it would be discretionary with the President; and my own feelings and sentiments are strongly in favor of doing something toward making some adjustment with our veterans, not only as a recognition of their services, not only as a tribute to them and as an expression of our gratitude to them, but as a matter of justice, and that recognition at this time can only be expressed by adopting the amendment which is suggested and which leaves the matter purely in the discretion of the President.

Congress has not been at all timid about giving all kinds of discretion to the President. I myself have voted for practically all the bills extending arbitrary powers, even the unreasonable powers to the Secretary of Agriculture which are granted by this very bill. So that there is nothing that is at all inconsistent in authorizing the President in this measure to consider the question of a cash compensation to our veterans. I would rather have the amendment also provide that the matter of authorizing loans upon the certificates might also be considered.

In the main, our veterans are about in the same condition as are our citizens generally. I find a great many of them who are in sore distress for the necessities of life; I find a great many of them out of employment; and they are certainly as worthy of consideration from the standpoint of security. Certainly the soldier deserves as much and more than anyone else.

No nation, it is said—and I think it is true—has ever survived—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired on the amendment.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I merely want a few minutes more on the bill.

No nation has ever survived permanently that became absolutely forgetful and unappreciative of its soldiers. I recall from my youth, when a small chap around the family fireside, I was taught by my good mother and father to respect and honor the men who had gone to the front to fight for their country in its hour of peril; and the lessons of those days have since followed me, I am thankful to say to the honor of those good parents, down to the present day. I believe that a nation should not only be appreciative of and honor its soldiers, but in the present crisis that they should certainly stand upon an equality when we are trying to overcome the depression which exists. So far in Congress for the last 2 or 3 years I have not seen that the soldier stood on an equality even with the average citizen. I hope, therefore, we may adopt this amendment and at least accord that recognition. Then the conferees may probably be able to frame some amendment or provide some adjustment which will, at least, be of assistance to our veterans who are in need, who are in despair, who have their Government security but cannot use it, because the Government does not authorize it to be used for the purpose of their obtaining funds.

I am just as much in favor of the pending bill, generally speaking, as is the average Senator, and I am sorry to vote for an amendment that some of the Senate leaders do not desire to have placed on this particular bill, but I have found out that, as a rule, if the majority favor a certain policy and adopt a necessary measure in the nature of an amendment that the principal cause to which it is attached is never defeated on account of an amendment. The conferees between the two Houses then try to work it out in an equitable way so as to preserve the principle and the best features of the measure.

I should be glad to see this amendment adopted and at least considered by the conferees. As I say, if adopted, it will do no more than authorize the President to pass on the question. We did not hesitate to authorize the President to place in force all character of regulations in regard to economies; we did not hesitate to do the most unusual thing I ever heard of in a legislative body, namely, to pass legislation which provided that funds which had been appropriated for certain governmental purposes should, if not already obligated, be diverted and used to carry on the reforestation plan. The Senate and every Member of the other House who voted for that plan authorized the taking, if it had not been contracted for, of every dollar appropriated for public roads and for public buildings and all character of public improvements and diverting it to reforestation work. We were then willing that the people back home, who are carrying on road construction by the thousands in many States, should have their road funds taken from them and put into the reforestation scheme. We are already beginning to feel the results of that action in some States. I know in my own State that such action will diminish, I have been told by good authority, employment in the State by about 5,000 in about 3 or 4 months. If it shall not be adjusted, there will be about 5,000 fewer people employed.

I have also heard from other States and, as a matter of fact, I have been told by officials who know as well as anybody could that our action in transferring the appropriation from the road fund to the reforestation work will result in a complete winding up of the road construction along about September and the throwing out of employment of about 400,000 men. Some have been willing to vote such authority, which will probably have results of that character; I do not see why we should not vote authority in this instance.

Of course, I am hopeful that the situation to which I have referred will be corrected by further appropriations for road construction, but there has not as yet been any effort made toward getting further appropriations for such construction. Where work is already started they have begun to cut down the number of employees; they have already ceased making contracts that involve a large amount of road construction and a large amount of employment. That has all been done. I am hopeful, I repeat, that that will be corrected by legislation; but I mention it as one instance showing how we have voted to delegate authority to the President to transfer public funds even from projects that Congress thought were proper when they authorized the appropriation.

So, Mr. President, I have no fear and no apprehension about voting to authorize the President to make the adjustment provided by the pending amendment as he feels disposed to make it, and I am going to vote for the amendment and hope he will help the soldiers.

Mr. HATFIELD obtained the floor.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, the Presiding Officer of the Senate, in discharge of his duty, had occasion to support the motion calling for order in the galleries. The attendants at the doors located one or two or more of those who had participated in the active applause disturbing the debates.

Mr. President, I am sure they were gentlemen or ladies who were accustomed to attend the other House, and, recognizing that there was a privilege of applause there, fell into an enjoyment of it here, without an intent to disturb the debate. The Chair was right in being impatient, for such demonstrations had been transpiring frequently. I now move that the Chair announce to the attendants at the door that those who created the disturbance unintentionally, as we feel they did, if with an understanding now that our rules do not allow such demonstrations, shall be permitted by the attendants to return to their seats in the gallery, upon the understanding that they will accord obedience to the rule as announced by the Chair at the time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Inasmuch as the Chair did not order the galleries cleared and the attendants escorted the ladies and gentlemen out of their own accord, the Chair will say that it does not require a motion, but the Chair is willing to put the question on the motion. [Putting the question.] The motion is agreed to, and the attendants and doorkeepers will readmit those who were escorted out, if they can be located.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Indiana if he will tell us whether or not the amendment which he has offered makes it compulsory upon the part of the veterans to accept the payment of their certificates, or is it optional?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. It is entirely optional. The Senator wants to know whether or not a veteran, in case this amendment should be adopted and should become the law, would be forced to accept immediate payment for his certificate? He would not be, if that is the question, because it is necessary that the veteran make application for payment of the adjusted-service certificate, and that application must be acted upon before he may receive payment. So it is entirely optional with the veteran.

Mr. HATFIELD. Do I understand correctly that the Senator has accepted an amendment that leaves it within the discretion of the President as to whether or not any part of the service certificate shall be liquidated or paid at the present time?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Yes; I reluctantly accepted that suggestion yesterday. I was anxious to make the provision mandatory, so that out of the $3,000,000,000 provided in this so-called "inflation bill" we might pay this debt to the veterans immediately, in full, and that the Secretary of the Treasury should be directed to issue notes for that purpose; but I did not desire to be obstinate, and there were those in sympathy with the measure who felt that they could vote for it if it were made discretionary with the President. Since that was the whole theory on which the other provisions of the bill were written, making it discretionary whether the President should exercise the powers given or not, they did not like to have any exception made in this instance. So, notwithstanding the fact that I felt that it ought to be mandatory, that the veterans need the money now, and that it ought to be paid immediately, in deference to those who are in sympathy with the amendment and felt that only thus could they vote for it, and in order to secure additional strength for it, I consented to that change.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HATFIELD. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, aside from the merits or demerits of this particular measure, it would be a healthy thing if Congress itself would really do something instead of delegating all its powers.

Mr. HATFIELD. If it would do something in a mandatory way.

Mr. BORAH. The Congress is coming to be—I will not use the word that is on my lips—but it is really coming to be almost ridiculous. In every movement we make we shun our responsibility and step aside from our obligations and impose that which we ought to do upon somebody else.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATFIELD. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I should like to suggest to the Senator who has just spoken that I am in thorough agreement with all he says; I think he is exactly right; and I was sorry to have to yield in this instance. I felt we should go ahead and insist that the adjusted-service certificates be paid. I also felt, after canvassing the situation, that we could not secure enough votes to get them paid. It is results I am after; that those people who are hungry may be fed and those who need clothing may have money with which to buy clothing; and I felt that perhaps we could get some result in this way. So I accepted the change because of that, and because we had not enough strength to adopt the amendment without making the change.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President—

Mr. HATFIELD. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. It was at my suggestion that the Senator from Indiana agreed to this change. I suggested it, not that I preferred it but because I was told by several Senators that they would support the amendment in this shape. As the Senator from West Virginia probably knows, we have been doing our legislation by abdication rather than by act of Congress, and I did not feel that, except through the abdicating process, I could get enough help to feed the soldiers. That was the only reason for the suggestion.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HATFIELD. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. If the Senator will permit me further, the very distinguished Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] also felt the same way about it. He felt that the measure ought to be consistent throughout; that since the power given in other particulars is discretionary with the President, we ought not to make an exception in this instance; that one way he could support it and the other way he could not. I was anxious to have his support, if possible, as well as that of every other Senator on the floor.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, on June 7, 1932, I voted against the soldiers' bonus bill for the reason that I felt that the soldier should be paid in sound money. Now that we have definitely decided that we are going to embark on inflation for our monetary system in this country, I see no reason why I should not vote for the adoption of an amendment giving the soldier the right, if he chooses, to accept fiat money in full payment of his certificate. Frankly, I have always felt that the certificate should be paid in gold dollars of 23.22 grains of pure gold each, for the service the soldier rendered to the American flag, the reputation that he established upon the field of battle. But now that the opportunity will not come to us at any time in the near future whereby we can pay the soldier in this kind of sound money which we have always had in America, I shall not hesitate to give the World War veteran an opportunity, if he chooses, to accept fiat money in payment of his service certificate.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum and ask a roll call.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Copeland	Johnson	Reed
Ashurst	Costigan	Kean	Reynolds
Austin	Couzens	Kendrick	Robinson, Ark.
Bachman	Cutting	Keyes	Robinson, Ind.
Bailey	Dale	King	Russell

Connally	Hayden	Pittman
Coolidge	Hebert	Pope

Mr. LEWIS. I beg to announce that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. MCGILL] and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL] are absent on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ninety Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I want to make a brief reply to some remarks made about the bill, particularly by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN]. The Senator from Arkansas does not particularly express the desire so much as does the Senator from Nevada for the immediate payment of the bonus. The Senator from Arkansas rather appears to oppose the amendment on the same ground as does the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS]; that is, that the amendment does not belong on a farm relief bill. The Senators from Arkansas, Nevada, and Oklahoma have forgotten what the bill is. Let me state what it is.

The bill deals with the size, age, and limit of a litter of hogs. It deals with the leasing of land; the making of tariffs up and down; the marketing of crops; the levying of taxes; the granting of permits to plant, sell, lease, or buy; the manufacturing of commodities; the buying of farm crops for the benefit of the farmer; the remonetization of silver; contracting with the Federal Reserve Board for currency; the powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; devaluation of the gold dollar; giving the President authority to issue currency; settlement of international debts; international trade agreements. In fact, before we ever get to the bonus, the bill has assumed proportions which it seems could be better described by a few words from Macbeth if we were to undertake to describe the bill as now here and as now arranged. For a brief description which might be somewhat in point as a description of what the bill is even without the bonus provision in it:

Round about the caldron go;
In the poison'd entrails throw.
Toad, that under cold stone
Days and nights has thirty-one
Swelter'd venom sleeping got,
Boil thou first i' the charmed pot.
Double, double toil and trouble;
Fire burn, and caldron bubble.
Fillet of a fenny snake,
In the caldron boil and bake;
Eye of newt and toe of frog,
Wool of bat and tongue of dog,
Adder's fork and blind-worm's sting,
Lizard's leg and owlet's wing,
For a charm of powerful trouble,
Like a hell-broth boil and bubble.

[Laughter.]

I shall not read further. There is nothing that has not been thrown into the pot of this bill—so much so that the Constitution is practically remade and unmade as a result of it.

As to the bonus, we are undertaking to authorize the President to do what the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] said he is capable of doing. The Senator from Nevada labored to tell us that the President is wise, sagacious and trustworthy; but when we come to authorize the President to settle the matter of taking care of the soldiers for whom the Senator from Nevada and all of us shed tears, when we try to authorize this good man, this sagacious man, this trustworthy man, to deal with the problem of helping those for whom Senators are crying, then they are unwilling to risk the President and inform us that the President is unwilling to have himself risked with the proposal.

It is the only time since we met in this extraordinary session of Congress that we have found anybody here urging that the President does not want any authority and that we ought not to give him authority. It is the first time, I mean, that we have asked authority for the President that it has been disputed. It is said that it is in order that we shall not confuse the bill. It is not for that purpose, as will be seen if Senators will only look far enough. It is not for any purpose that I can see—because it certainly is not expressed on the floor—except that if the soldiers' bonus amendment is put on the bill it means an actual inflation of the currency and a distribution of it.

It is true that it is proposed that the President shall be authorized "in his discretion". Someone has said here that the provision is practically mandatory. Why would it be any more mandatory on the President to issue this money for payment of the soldiers' bonus than to issue it for other purposes?

Up to this time we have been deflating. Deflating out of whom? Out of the people of the United States. We deflated 400 millions out of the soldier. We wept over him, we cried over him, and we prayed over him, but we took $400,000,000 out of his hide. We wept over the wage earner, cried for him, prayed for him, but we took $100,000,000 out of his hide. Then we denounced the bankers. We put up institutions to give them more currency. We denounced the railroads and then passed special laws to allow them to go through receiverships. We denounced other big masters of finance and big institutions, but with every denunciation that has been heaped upon the heads of the big men we have gone forward with some program to take out of the hide of the little man and give to those for whom we have created every kind of special blessings under the law.

We owe the bonus. We have to pay it. We have to pay it in 1945. Whether we vote for this amendment or not the bonus has to be paid. Are we going to go back from the Democratic Party to the people saying that we have inflated for everybody except the soldiers, that we have already taken away from one third up to as high as one half of the revenue that has been given to the soldiers by solemn act of Congress, taken it away from them by the so-called "economy bill", and that then we have devalued the gold dollar and inflated the currency to where the 65 cents that he had left is worth only 32½ cents?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I think the Senator is referring to the battle-scarred veterans who received their wounds and injuries and disabilities at the battle front. From untold thousands of others we have taken everything, 100 percent. Is that clear to the Senator? We have taken 100 percent from any number of them.

Mr. LONG. I am speaking of the class that we have hurt the least. The battle-scarred and battle-wounded veteran has given up 35 percent under the nefarious and iniquitous economy bill that we put through Congress. We greased it in order that it might go through like chain lightning. But we come along to a bunch of others who did not have wounds and battle scars and we take from 50 to 75 and even a hundred percent of everything that has been voted to them by the Congress. We have taken from 35 to 100 percent away from men who left their work and went to the front, and now we come along here to devalue what they are getting now. If it is 50 percent or 25 percent left them, we propose to cut it in two and make it 25 cents out of the 50 cents and 12½ cents out of the 25 cents. Yet we must pay the bonus.

I have heard this cry, that "We must do justice by the soldier, but it cannot be done on this bill", ever since I came to Congress. Every time the question comes up Members say, "Oh, I believe in treating the soldier justly", and I am not able to make eloquent perorations such as are made by those who are against this amendment, but they sound something like this: "They fought our battles; they slept in the trenches; they faced the bullets, and then went forward at the call of democracy"; but after finishing those eloquent perorations their votes are always "no." There is never an amendment that comes up here in such a shape, manner, or form that they can vote to do justice by the soldier.

If these gentlemen do not like the amendment that the Senator from Indiana has offered, why do they not get up an amendment of their own? They have had enough time in which to do it.

So that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] may know my position, I am not proposing that the Government shall go out and take any money away from any other enterprise. Here is a difference in the Robinson amendment, which I fear none of us have studied up: We have provided, by the first section of the Thomas amendment, that $3,000,000,000 of currency can be exchanged by the Federal Reserve banks for bonds of the Government that are now outstanding. The holders of those bonds may exchange them for currency, or they may not. If they do, the $3,000,000,000 in currency would probably go to the banks, and it would depend upon the banks as to how far they are going to put it out and as to what they are going to put it out for. The chances are that it might be put out for other obligations of a similar character, and we actually might get very little inflation from the first $3,000,000,000.

Instead of putting in this provision that we are going to take up the obligations of the Government that are held by the banks, what we propose to do by this amendment is that the obligation that the Government owes the soldier shall be taken up with the same currency. It is not proposed to issue one more dime of currency. It is not proposed to issue one more copper cent's worth of obligations of the United States. The only difference is that the money will be put in the hands of 3½ million soldiers, from whom we have recently taken the very lifeblood on which they are now surviving, and from whom we are going to take, by our inflationary process, 50 percent of the value of the compensation that is allowed to them under the Executive order of the President.

I submit, Mr. President, that there is no sound view against the payment of this soldiers' bonus. I never thought we would have to apologize for presenting a claim of the soldiers of this country.

I do not understand the policy of the President of the United States. Why is it—the Senator from Arkansas tells us that this is true—that the President of the United States is resisting and crying aloud not to be entrusted with the authority to pay the bonus of the soldiers out of this inflated currency? Why is it that he is crying aloud for authority over the banks, over debts, over tariffs, over everything, from the top of the sky to the bottom of the earth? What is the justification for giving him authority to regulate all of these other affairs and still having him—so we are told by the leader on this side of the Chamber—resist being given the authority to pay the bonus to the soldiers?

I cannot quarrel with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS]. I think he is wrong. I think he is just as wrong as he can be; but he has made a very valiant fight here for the soldiers' bonus. He has made a very valiant fight for the inflation of the currency. We know him to be absolutely sincere. The Senator feels that inasmuch as he had offered a bonus amendment before, and inasmuch as the administration has endorsed what he now is submitting to Congress, he is naturally bound by it. But the Senator from Oklahoma would not be here with this amendment now if it had not been that he and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] and myself and others defied an ultimatum from the White House some time back. Did we not have an ultimatum delivered here that the President did not want the Wheeler amendment adopted? And we did not pay any attention to it. We went by a majority of 4 votes on this side of the Chamber in favor of the Wheeler amendment, and it took the Republican Party to keep us from enacting it into law that day; and it was only a few days later when the White House came along with an inflationary program. That is why the Senator from Oklahoma is here with this amendment now. He would not have had the opportunity to come here with the administration's indorsement except for that showing made here; and now we are told by the Senator from Nevada that we have to follow the President in his program, that he has a program mapped out. Well, he did not have that part of it mapped out. We mapped it out for him and then it came back here.

In other words, we are told to follow along on the program; that it is going to come out all right. At the same time we are arguing in favor of a program that never would have been before the United States Senate if it had not been for the fight that was made here for the Wheeler amendment, which brought this thing to a showdown. We had to inflate the currency, and I say that we have three and a half million soldiers of this country, a large part of whom were on the point of starvation even before the economy bill was passed. I say that since we have taken away from them what we have, many of those soldiers and their wives and children and some other people dependent upon them are in destitute circumstances today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Louisiana has expired.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, nothing of which I can conceive would give me greater pleasure than to be able to vote for any measure for the improvement of the condition of the ex-service men of this country.

With many of the men with whom I soldiered, many of whom are holders of these adjusted-service certificates, I enjoy a relationship and feel an affection which I do not believe could be closer and deeper if they were my blood brothers. But, Mr. President, I feel too deep an affection for the ex-service men of this country to be willing to vote to delude them with false hopes and illusory promises, to raise hopes in their breasts which are certainly doomed to disappointment.

The President of the United States has announced, through the majority leader in this body, that he will not put into effect the permissive powers—and they are permissive, not mandatory—granted to him by this amendment. I am not willing to delude, to fool the ex-service men of the United States in order to afford an opportunity for Senators and Representatives who voted for the economy bill, when they did not believe in it, to try to square themselves with some of their constituents by voting for this amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. CLARK. I do.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Will the Senator vote for the amendment if it is made mandatory?

Mr. CLARK. No; I will not.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Then it makes no difference to the Senator whether it is discretionary with the President or mandatory?

Mr. CLARK. The President of the United States unquestionably will veto the bill if it is made mandatory. I will say to the Senator from Indiana that I am not willing, for political purposes, to undertake to put the President of the United States in a hole for a measure that I know cannot be made effective over his opposition.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. There will be no politics in it. If the amendment is adopted and made mandatory, the veterans will receive the money. I understand the Senator to be unwilling to vote for this bonus proposal either way.

Mr. CLARK. I will say to the Senator that I intend to vote against the bill anyhow; but I am not willing, for partisan or political purposes, to undertake to put the President of the United States in a hole on a measure that he does not favor, and vote for an amendment that will make him veto the bill if it is put in.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I want the Senator to understand that so far as I am concerned there is no politics in it.

Mr. CLARK. I acquit the Senator of any political intention, because he has been very consistent in his policy all the way through.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. It is a question only of getting money to these deserving veterans and of liquidating a just debt.

Mr. CLARK. I will say to the Senator that there is no man in this body or any other body who is more anxious to take care of the deserving veterans than I am; but I am not willing, on a measure of this sort, in order to allow Senators and Representatives to apologize to some of their constituents for their votes on the economy bill, to adopt an amendment simply for the purpose of putting the President of the United States in a hole.

Mr. President, I stated to my constituents in the course of my campaign that I was in favor of the payment of the adjusted-service certificates as soon as the condition would justify it, and that I would vote against such payment until such time as the condition of the Treasury would justify it. I do not believe that the present condition of the Treasury will justify such payment, and I do not believe that any Member of this body can honestly and fairly say that he does.

The passage of this amendment, in view of the President's announced position, is simply to invite a march by another "bonus army" similar to the expedition whose visit to Washington last year was the occasion of one of the most tragic and disgraceful incidents in the history of the Republic.

Mr. President, it is not necessary for me to indulge in idle gestures to prove to the ex-service men of the United States my very deep interest in and concern for their welfare. Therefore I shall vote against this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana and other Senators called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll. The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LEWIS (when Mr. MCGILL's name was called). I am directed to announce that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. MCGILL], being absent on official business, is paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL], who also is absent on official business.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. NORBECK. On this question I have a pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDING]. If he were present, he would vote "nay." If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea." I withhold my vote.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]. I am informed, however, that if he were present he would vote as I intend to vote. I therefore feel at liberty to vote, and vote "nay."

Mr. HEBERT. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER] is unavoidably detained from the Senate on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 60, as follows:

So the amendment of Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana to the amendment of Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], as amended.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I send to the clerk's desk an amendment, which I desire to offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Washington offers the following amendment:

On page 4, after line 24, to add the following new paragraph:
"All contracts, bonds, notes, or other forms of agreement hereafter made for the payment of the same in gold shall be payable in lawful money of the United States declared to be legal tender for the payment of all debts, public and private."

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I shall not take much time in discussing this amendment. I call attention to the fact that it does not apply to any bonds, contracts, or agreements made previous to the enactment of the pending bill. I believe, however, that none of those agreements could be enforced in the courts of this country since the 4th of March, because when the sovereign power made it impossible for anybody to get gold, I do not believe the courts would require gold to discharge an agreement of that kind. I do not want to enter into that discussion, however. I only call attention to it to show how futile it is as a general provision of contracts.

Mr. President, I have offered the amendment so that hereafter it may be understood that any contract or agreement made in this country, payable in gold though it may be, can be discharged by the payment of lawful money of the United States declared to be legal tender. I believe that such an amendment to this measure is desirable because of the fact that the common use of money in this country is the use of currency, and the fetish we have made of gold is one of the causes of much of the premium that is placed upon that metal.

I am not going to take more time of the Senate. I simply want to bring the amendment to the Senate's consideration, and hope it will be adopted.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. Is there an inference carried in the amendment that contracts made prior to the enactment of the pending bill must be paid in gold?

Mr. DILL. No; I think that question is not affected. If there is any doubt about the question, it will have to be decided in the courts; but to remove all doubt about the future, it seemed to me that this amendment would be desirable.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the Senator's amendment positively require that future payments shall be made in lawful money of the United States?

Mr. DILL. The amendment provides that any contract, whether there is a gold clause in it or not, may be discharged by the payment of lawful money, declared to be legal tender for the payments of debts, both public and private.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does not the Senator think he should go further and declare unlawful contracts providing for payment in anything but lawful money?

Mr. DILL. I may say to the Senator from Texas that I first prepared my amendment in that form, but I came to the conclusion that there were some contracts made by some organizations, or even individuals, which could not be so declared by Congress, so I took the other method of reaching the evil, namely, of providing that all agreements or bonds hereafter made could be discharged by payment in lawful money.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. REED. Suppose after this amendment were adopted and became law the Senator were to make an agreement with me for an exchange to take place 12 months from today, an agreement that he would manufacture and deliver to me 100 harvesting machines, and that I, on my part, would agree to provide and deliver to him in exchange therefor 300 ounces of fine gold. That would be an exchange transaction; that would not be the payment of any money at all. Would the Senator's amendment affect such a contract?

Mr. DILL. I think it would. I think the contract could be discharged by payment of lawful money of the United States.

Mr. REED. Then suppose we did not use gold, but suppose we used tin, or antimony, or pig iron, or some other metal; would it apply to that?

Mr. DILL. It would not.

Mr. REED. It would apply only to metallic gold?

Mr. DILL. It would apply only to gold.

Mr. REED. Very well. Then suppose the Senator should agree to exchange his harvesting machines with me the next year for so many ounces of platinum. It would not apply to that?

Mr. DILL. It would not apply to platinum.

Mr. REED. Then I think we will know how to write our contracts in the future.

Mr. DILL. I simply want to put an end to making a god of the gold dollar, as it has been made in the contracts and bonds in this country for the past few years.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I am wondering about the correctness of the Senator's answer to the Senator from Pennsylvania. I understood the Senator to say that if he had a contract to deliver a certain number of ounces of gold, the amendment would apply to such a contract.

Mr. DILL. In the way in which my amendment is written, I think that is true. I do not say "in gold dollars"; I simply say "in gold."

Mr. NORRIS. In the case put, gold would not be money; it would be a pure commodity, just like cattle or hogs.

Mr. DILL. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not understand why those agreeing would not be in the same predicament as though they had contracted for the delivery of some other commodity. Let me suggest to the Senator that if the person who had agreed to deliver so many ounces of gold defaulted, did not make any delivery, and he were sued on his contract, the one suing would get a judgment payable in money, and, if the defendant did not have the gold, if it could not be replevined, the plaintiff would get a money judgment for damages.

Mr. DILL. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. That would be payable in lawful money.

Mr. DILL. That is true.

Mr. NORRIS. As the Senator from Pennsylvania suggests, the amount of the judgment would be based on the value of the gold which the Senator had agreed to deliver, but did not deliver.

Mr. DILL. Undoubtedly, but my reason for not saying "gold dollars" was that I did not want it to be possible to evade the statute by specifying ounces of gold. I want to take away from gold this divine halo which has been put around it by the business men of this country and the banks of this country, and even by the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. BULKLEY. I want to inquire what the Senator thinks about the effect of the Thomas amendment on contracts payable in dollars of a specified weight and fineness of gold already in existence?

Mr. DILL. That is a legal question to which I have given some attention, but I am not at all convinced in my own mind, even, as to what the courts will do with that proposition if the amount of gold in the dollar is decreased.

Mr. BULKLEY. Does not the Senator think it would be desirable for the Congress to make clear its intent in that respect?

Mr. DILL. To that I have no objection, if somebody else wants to offer the amendment, but I did not want to confuse the constitutional question which is involved in an attempt to do what the Senator suggests with the proposal which I make as to the future, in which I think there is no constitutional question.

Mr. BULKLEY. I asked the Senator that question because it seems to me it is a question we cannot afford to leave in doubt in connection with this bill. What I have been afraid of is that if the Senator's amendment is adopted it will preclude my offering an amendment at exactly the same place in the bill. I will ask the Chair whether it will be in order, if the pending amendment should be adopted, for me to offer another amendment, to appear at the same place in the bill, covering the same subject matter?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It would be in order following the amendment of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. BULKLEY. It would still be in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. DILL. If it refers to contracts already made, it would be a different amendment.

Mr. BULKLEY. It refers to contracts heretofore or hereafter made.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, those persons who believe or effect to believe that the silver question, as it is termed, was effectually disposed of when Mr. Bryan was defeated for the presidency in 1896, are beginning to discover their great mistake. During the discussion upon the pending bill, frequent references have been made to the lessons of the past, and we have been conjured not to abandon the path of experience or forget the lessons of history. These admonitions have a sound base upon which to rest. Invoking the rule of experience, which it has been urged should be in part, at least, our guide, I invite attention to the fact that for thousands of years silver occupied an honored station side by side with gold, and the two constituted the basic or primary money of the world.

It is true that gold found but little circulation in the Orient; nevertheless, it had its relation as money to silver and commodities, or, putting it in another way, commodities and silver had their relation to gold. In the Occident silver and gold marched side by side discharging the important functions of primary money; they constituted a broad base upon which their currencies and credits rested.

When gold and silver were plentiful commodity prices responded and reached satisfactory levels. Commodity prices, it was discovered, were determined by the quantity and character of the circulating medium among the people. The purchasing power of the people was greater with a satisfactory monetary system, and gold and silver furnished that system for thousands of years.

Even with the growth of banks of issue, and the development of modern banking, no reason was found for dispensing with either gold or silver as primary money; indeed, with the growth of population and the increase in trade and commerce, the need for both metals for monetary purposes became more urgent. It is true, as the Senator from Washington has stated, gold has become a "fetish", and for a number of decades efforts have been made to envelop it with a sacredness wholly unjustifiable, and at the same time to lead the people to disparage silver and to degrade it to the level of an unimportant commodity.

There are some who have forgotten that a number of years ago, when the gold mines of California and Australia were pouring their treasures into the channels of trade and commerce, a number of European nations demonetized gold and made silver the sole monetary standard of value. Gold was not sacred then because it was regarded as plentiful and therefore cheap. Believing, as many did, that silver was the scarcer of the two metals and its production would be relatively less than the production of gold, they were willing to make silver the sole standard of value and to remove gold from the category of primary money.

History demonstrates that the demonetization of silver was not demanded by the people, but by a limited number of creditors and those who desired to control the economic, industrial, and, indeed, the political life of the people. It was believed that a scarcity of primary money would increase its value in relation to commodities and human labor, and would inure to the advantage of the creditor class. Dear money, it was believed, would cheapen labor and reduce the price of commodities.

Undoubtedly the bondholders of Great Britain and some of the large industrialists inaugurated the movement in 1816 which led Great Britain to demonetize silver and make gold the sole standard of value. Other nations, however, declined to follow the course of Great Britain until 1871. During that period, as during preceding centuries, gold and silver circulated side by side discharging the functions of primary money.

Germany, when she obtained a billion dollars in gold from France by way of indemnity following the Franco-Prussian War, demonetized silver, and later France and the other members of the Latin Union followed her evil example.

From the foundation of our Government until 1873 silver had been recognized as a part of our monetary system; indeed, silver, in the first monetary measure enacted in Washington's administration, was given a place side by side with gold, and the unit of value was fixed in the act. The silver dollar, with a prescribed number of grains of silver, constituted such unit. In 1873 the American people were satisfied with bimetallism. They did not ask for silver's demonetization, and when they discovered that surreptitiously a law had been passed which removed silver from its high station there was great resentment throughout the country.

I submit that the demonetization of silver has had most serious and deadly effects in the industrial and economic life of the people of the world. It has been a contributing factor to falling prices and to the world-wide depression. With the destruction of silver, the demand for gold increased, and its scarcity augmented its value and correspondingly depressed the prices of human labor and of all commodities. It was obvious that the destruction of a part of the metallic base of the monetary structure of the world would weaken the structure and result in most serious consequences. Economists admit that as the population increases and as trade and commerce expand, the need for primary money is increased. The production of gold is wholly inadequate to meet this increase in trade and commerce and in population.

The Orient has suffered because of the debasement of silver, but her suffering had led to industrial activity which injures occidental nations. With cheap silver there has been a remarkable increase in industrial development in China and Japan, a development which is a menace to the industrial system of this and other countries.

It is high time that silver be restored to its proper place. I believe the time is propitious for the remonetization of silver—for an international agreement under the terms of which the mints of all countries will be opened to the free coinage of silver at a fixed ratio with reference to gold. An international conference will soon meet in London. The silver question will be one of the vital and important questions there to be considered and dealt with.

The President of the United States is exhibiting great interest in this conference, and I cannot help but believe that the conference will agree upon a plan that will give to silver a high position in the monetary systems of the world.

Mr. President, with reference to the amendment under consideration, permit me to say that I hope that we will not have a monetary system which discriminates between the various forms of currency coined or emitted by the Government or its agencies. All the moneys of the United States should circulate freely and at par, and should be lawful money of the United States receivable in payment of all debts, public and private. This is a desideratum greatly to be desired. All money issued by the Government should be lawful money and should be legal tender for the payment of all debts, public and private. With that view I am in accord.

I would look, however, with apprehension upon any measure adopted at this time, which might lead to the conclusion that obligations payable in gold might be discharged by currencies or moneys other than gold. The situation of the country is such that measures should be avoided that would create uncertainty or fear among the people as to the validity of contracts. While it is true that technically our Government is not on the gold standard, nevertheless there are billions of obligations payable in gold at its present weight and fineness.

In my opinion it would be unfortunate if Congress should enact legislation that might be regarded as interfering with the obligations of these outstanding contracts. I am afraid that the amendment of the Senator from Washington, if adopted, may be misconstrued and lead to fears and misgivings as to its meaning or implications. Some may construe it to be ex post facto in its operations, or, at any rate, to cast doubts upon the right of holders of bonds and obligations payable in gold to have the benefit of their contracts.

Congress was convened in extraordinary session because of the serious condition of the country. This is an extraordinary session to meet extraordinary and exigent conditions. We are not legislating, or at least should not in this tense atmosphere, as if the country were in a normal condition. The measure which is before us is an emergency measure. It deals or is supposed to deal with temporary conditions, not conditions of a permanent and enduring character which would call for permanent legislation. Measures which may be justified in war, or when the country is in danger economically or otherwise, may not be warranted when the country is at peace and when no extraordinary or dangerous conditions exist.

The economic condition with which the country is now confronted may justify heroic, drastic, and most extraordinary measures—measures which could not be defended and would not be suggested in normal times. I suggest that we should not take advantage of this economic depression and the emergency which exists to project legislation designed to be permanent, and particularly if it deals with fundamental questions and calls for substantive law.

The amendment under consideration might well be offered under other conditions, and at other times, but with the people in a condition of bewilderment, and many business men frightened, and oppressed by a spirit of uncertainty and doubt with respect to the character and significance of the proposed legislation now in process of enactment, it seems to me that we ought not to propose measures that will add further to the fears and possibly increase the distress throughout the country.

The people want reassuring measures, not those that will be disconcerting and which will be susceptible of misconstruction and misinterpretation. As stated we are legislating for an emergency situation and should keep that before us in dealing with the measure brought to us for consideration. The amendment offered projects itself into the future and effects contracts to be made in the future. It changes existing law and alters the form of contracts which, under the present law, could be made but which under the proposed amendment would not be effective.

While I believe, as I have stated, that silver should be restored to its proper primary place in our monetary system, and that both gold and silver should be money of ultimate redemption receivable in payment for all debts, public and private, nevertheless I appreciate the fact that there are many who do not accept my views; they propose a course of action, and approach the objective in a manner not as expeditiously as I desire or that many of the sincere friends of a proper monetary system could wish. Many will believe that this is not the appropriate time and place for legislation such as that suggested by the Senator, though they may favor it and would enthusiastically support it except for the extraordinary situation in which we find ourselves.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. DILL. The fact of the matter is that the bill now contains a provision for the decrease of the gold content of the dollar. Does not the Senator think that this amendment would counteract the effects of all the talk about the terrible results of decreasing the gold content of the dollar?

Mr. KING. I am not able to accept the Senator's view. In the first place, I do not think the President will exercise the power provided in the measure before us and devalue gold. I may add in passing that I hope the authority so proposed to be given to the President may not be exercised by him. I fear that the suggestion of the exercise of such power may have a disturbing effect in our industrial and business life. It may create uncertainty as to existing contracts and as to future contracts. It may be regarded by some as creating such an uncertain situation as to interfere with contracts to be executed in the future. Business at the present time is at a low ebb, confidence is not so strong as it should be, and anything that will arouse suspicions or undermine confidence in our monetary system will constitute obstacles to a resumption of business and production so essential to business revival and to overcoming the deplorable condition of unemployment. Measures which carefully examined may be unobjectionable in ordinary times may prove objectionable in a situation such as that in which we find ourselves today. When the people are in a condition of depression or where the psychological conditions militate against peace and a proper spirit of equanimity, proposed legislation should be given most careful attention.

As I have indicated, I fear that the talk of devaluing the gold dollar may have disturbing effects; there will probably be unfounded propaganda and unwarranted and erroneous statements made, as to the purposes of the President, or the consequences which will result if the measure before us becomes law. Some people will forget that the President of the United States only desires the welfare of his country and that he is as much concerned, and, indeed, because of the responsibilities resting upon him, more concerned in restoring peace and prosperity and lifting this country out of the depression, than any other person can be. He is profoundly concerned in relieving the country from the plight in which he found it and in restoring confidence, reviving business, promoting industry, alleviating the tragic conditions of the people, and bringing happiness and prosperity again to the people of the United States. Moreover, he is interested in those measures which will promote international goodwill and world-wide cooperation in the interest of peace.

Mr. DILL and Mr. LEWIS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. KING. I yield first to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. DILL. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that this is one of the provisions that is not within the discretion of the President; this is one part of the bill where Congress specifically lays down a requirement which is not within the President's discretion.

Mr. KING. I agree with the Senator that his amendment does not allow discretion to the President; it is a proposal to incorporate into emergency legislation a general provision designed to be lasting and enduring and to modify our fiscal or monetary system. Some might look with great favor upon the amendment if it was of a temporary or emergency character and placed in the same category as the mordant or slumbering power granted to the President to be exercised by him when he finds certain facts and conditions to exist. In other words, the fact that the proposed amendment calls for permanent legislation affecting our fiscal or financial system, which is still in the making, will be regarded by some as objectionable.

If silver shall be restored to its proper monetary status, and if gold shall be, or shall not be devaluated, but we shall be brought to ordinary and normal conditions, and shall agree upon financial or fiscal or monetary legislation designed not for temporary purposes but for the future, then the proposal of the Senator might, with propriety, be adopted. Indeed, if I understand it correctly, I should favor it. That is to say, I should favor a monetary system in which the circulating medium of our country—our moneys, our currencies, our specie—should have proper relation one to the other, and that under such relation all should be, in the language of the Senator's amendment, "lawful money of the United States, and be legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private." But, as I have indicated, we are dealing not with certainties but with uncertainties—with temporary and extraordinary conditions, and not with a situation where normal and regular and ordinary conditions prevail.

I might add that if we were enacting permanent legislation and revising and remodeling our monetary laws, the language implied in the Senator's amendment might require some modification. I can conceive of contracts for the purchase of gold for industrial purposes, or contracts for the payment of gold, which it would be most immoral not to enforce, even though currencies, silver and gold, were compounded into one mass, so to speak, and each treated as the equivalent of the other in payment of all debts, public and private. However, as I have indicated, meritorious as the general principle embodied in the amendment may be, it is my opinion that it is not a propitious moment to enact into law the provisions of the amendment in question.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I wish to take the floor in my own behalf. I rise to offer remarks upon a question which has already been before the Senate; and, of course, the fact that any subject is for any length of time debated before the Senate clearly indicates that it has been discussed with wisdom and directed with statesmanship.

Mr. President, I want to address myself to that clause in the pending bill to which the able Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has just alluded, and to which the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], one of the most highly respected men who honors this body by his capacities, has made allusion in most eloquent and forensic terms. I regret that such a pall and atmosphere of gloom should have surrounded the subject, as if it were completely new as a subject; and, being initiated for the first time in government, it carried threats of results that foreboded danger to Nation and disaster to national credit.

Mr. President, I listened to the eminent Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], whose absence I note with regret and whose presence I will welcome with pleasure if he finds it agreeable to return to his seat. He, too, portrayed to this body what a calamity would follow this assumed unprecedented act of allowing the President of the United States the privilege of ascertaining when a certain quality or quantity of money was to be decreased in value and permitting, as of authority, the Chief Executive to take action to fix that change in value.

Mr. President, for the moment it is well to ask ourselves what is this particular provision under discussion and accusation. It provides that, in the event the case arising where the President of the United States will find a justification for the exercise of a discretion and make declaration as to the value of the content of the gold dollar, such a declaration may be made by him to meet the conditions justifying his act. It must be assumed, able Senators, that there was some assumption in the minds of those who prepared this measure of a condition existing or to arise, if not now, then hereafter, involving a danger so great as to authorize and justify the President's action as one of defense.

If it be true that we are trusting this officer on the ground that the people have imposed upon him the responsibility as well as the credit and trust, it must be likewise assumed that he is the manner of man who will not violate the trust and will only exercise the power under emergencies which will justify its exercise.

Mr. President, that being true, under what circumstances has such power in the history of our past been exercised? The eminent Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], than whom there is no greater authority upon questions of banking and currency, in his splendid oration, tendering his own reasons for not agreeing to grant this privilege to the President, used the very fateful language that he regarded this proposed act as little less than "immoral", meaning immoral from a statesmanlike point of view, as in its conduct and operation it was so unprecedented as to lack the virtue of having legislative precedent or constitutional authority.

Mr. President, early in our history a situation arose in our Government which was similar to our present status. The question then was one of money then existing in the form of gold coin of other nations which had been adopted in this land as the money of the United States, and whether the status of American money should be any longer allowed. The question was whether the Spanish-milled dollar, which we found it agreeable to adopt as expressive money of the United States, should be in form and nature the sole money of the United States. Then arose the next question, Was it a good policy to give to the President of the United States the right by his decree to say when this form and value of money should not obtain in the United States, and when contracts calling for such money as United States money should end? It was demanded that whenever the emergency arose that justified his action Congress should give him the power to order the act and to exercise the authority. The eminent Senator from Virginia can take great pride in recalling that it was a distinguished officer of the Government from his renowned State who had much to do with this matter. I call attention to the item. I quote the history and read.

On February 9, 1793, the conditions of the Government existing at a time calling for a change or declaration as to finances and money, particularly as to the coin of the land, Congress passed an act to authorize and declare the date when all foreign gold coins and silver coin except the Spanish milled dollar should cease to operate as legal tender in the United States.

In this law there was a provision giving to the President of the United States the power to say when that money should not be legal tender or when contracts that seemed to embrace it and describe it should not be treated any longer as legal to the full extent of legal contracts. That power was reposed in an executive officer. This act of the Congress of the United States was of the date of February 17, 1793. It was subsequently carried into effect by a President who was from Massachusetts, scholarly, learned, and often quoted as a great authority on constitutional government when it was being founded, shaped, and directed. John Adams declared in 1797 that Congress should enact further legislation in carrying out this provision. It will be kept in mind, sir, that this law provided that the President should be authorized to declare as void and not any longer acceptable either under contract or for barter certain gold coin or silver coin of foreign mintage which was then regarded as legal tender, but which was under Executive order to be thereafter declared no longer legal tender. This decree to come forth when the President of the United States should so adjudge.

It must be assumed that there were emergencies in Government which impressed upon the minds of the eminent statesmen of that day that there was necessity for such action, or that such necessity would arise, the shadows of which they saw in the dark and murky hours in which they lived. So the Congress granted this privilege and authority to such purpose.

I ask the able Senators who do me the compliment to hear me, Where is there any difference between the very act wherein the President of the present day is authorized, if future events shall justify him, to exercise his discretion and the authority which was granted President Washington as of date of 1793 and followed later by President John Adams by action in 1797?

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. LEWIS. I gladly yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. GLASS. There is a vast deal of difference.

Mr. LEWIS. I should like to have the Senator from Virginia give me his views, for I greatly respect them.

Mr. GLASS. My view is that the earlier act did not involve repudiation by the Government of the United States of its own obligations denominated in the bond.

Mr. LEWIS. I do not know what the able Senator means by "repudiation of obligations", but I must tell the able Senator, or refresh his mind as to that which probably he omits, that we were then under obligation for money borrowed from France, in which there was the specific obligation to pay in the very form of coinage which the particular measure under the act of these two distinguished Presidents to whom I refer prescribed. If that was not repudiation, it at least created an innovation and change to such an extent as would have the actual effect in those times as contemplated under the present law. To call it "repudiation" would, of course, touch the Government with political immorality, which the necessities justified in the judgment of the people of the country. This it was that caused them to vest in their President the power to execute it. The question, then, of the abrogation of a contract or violating one ceases to be considered if the preservation of your land, your country, and its honor rises superior to the mere private demand of some person, in the language of the famous Shylock, for the mere "execution of his bond."

Therefore, I say to the Senator from Virginia the two cases are exactly parallel, except that in the one the able Senator feels it would be equivalent to the violation of an obligation, being the contract of the United States, and in the other case the privilege was permitted the Government for the protection against what then was some danger that must have been imminent. Must we not assume that the present President of the United States will not attempt to use this privilege granted him under the law if there shall not arise a justification for it similar to that in the case of the act which I bring to the attention of the Senate and particularly to the attention of the eminent Senator from Virginia?

Mr. GLASS. I may remind the Senator that not even the bond of Shylock was repudiated. The court ordered him to take his pound of flesh, but the bond did not guarantee him a drop of blood and therefore it was not repudiated.

Mr. LEWIS. I remind the Senator that in this particular instance, if the Senate shall conclude that there is an obligation to take blood on the part of those who hold our bonds and who have in the past been taking blood and draining the Nation until it is dry, lost in bankruptcy, darkened in dishonor, its homes crowded with disaster, they will not enjoy its blood because the American public are decreeing the authority to the President of the United States to act as Portia, and he shall rescue the country as that Portia did rescue her victim.

Mr. GLASS. It may be said that the purpose of the Government of the United States is to appeal to those very persons whom the Senator so berates to take more of its bonds.

Mr. LEWIS. I answer the able Senator from Virginia to say that he now embarks upon that which should interest us all; and that is, What will we conceive to be the reason for this privilege being vested in the President of the United States? It is because they do relate to a foreign country who it may be said at some time or another may find the bonds of our country so appealing as to quickly invest in them. But I take it upon myself to bring to the thought of the Senator from Virginia and of other Senators about me what is in my mind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Illinois on the amendment has expired.

Mr. LEWIS. I take my remaining time upon the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois is recognized for 15 minutes on the bill.

Mr. LEWIS. I appreciate the courtesy of the Chair and of the Senate.

Those named foreign countries have changed their standard of finance. That they have done it in the past indicates their privilege to do it in the future. They have of our obligations many. Suppose on tomorrow, in changing their finance in relation to the debt they owe us, that this act shall put them in the position by the stress of the change of their finance that they pay us only one third, if even that, by virtue of the new revaluation of their finance. Shall not something be left in the hands of the President of the United States or in our Government by which it can retaliate to prevent the wrong and the injury to us, and have at least some privilege within himself to take the same course if we are wronged in the manner I have described on the part of a foreign government? Shall we have none who shall carry the sword in the scabbard?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield gladly.

Mr. REED. Is not the Senator forgetting that the foreign obligations to our Government which we classify as war debts are every one of them payable in gold money of the standard of value at the time the debt settlements were made?

Mr. LEWIS. It would be equally true if we were to declare war or war were declared on us. The fact that the provisions were made for payment in gold would not prevent us from defending ourselves by not paying the gold to be used against us in an attack upon us. If those countries should adopt the plan and deliberately assail us by their form of change of their finance that robbed us the full equality of our contract, our privilege to do the same as to them is a right of self-defense.

Mr. REED. The Senator did not understand me. The promise of France, for example, is to pay her debt to us in American dollars in gold of the same standard of weight and fineness as existed when she made the debt settlement. If we are going to violate our own contracts and repudiate our own gold obligations, obviously we are giving her the same privilege. The action of the Senate yesterday may have the effect of surrendering to Europe half of the war debts that she owes to us.

Mr. LEWIS. In the first place, I beg to correct my eminent friend, able as he is and equipped with knowledge as we all concede. There is no obligation of this Government to any other Government that records the words "Grains of gold of so much fineness." He has in his mind the contract born of the Pacific Coast States which grew gold upon their hills, but in the bonds to which the Senator refers the word is "gold" merely.

Mr. REED. I am talking about the debts due to this country by France and Great Britain and our other allies. Their bonds contain the words "payable in American gold dollars of the present standard of value".

Mr. LEWIS. I had alluded to that, perhaps, in the absence of the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania, which I very much regret. I called attention specifically, in view of this qualification, that now should they, by their forms of finance and new finance legislation, take from us the privilege that we should enjoy the bonds in full value prescribed, shall it be said that we shall not have a similar privilege in the hands of our officer to retaliate against such a wrong? It is for that reason that the legislation to which I have called attention at the time of George Washington and John Adams was enacted by our country, the copy of which is literally before the distinguished Senator and which he was inclined to regard as entirely unprecedented in its presentation to this body.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. LEWIS. I am glad to yield.

Mr. GLASS. Why confine the argument to the extremely limited indebtedness or holdings of foreign countries of our securities? What has the Senator to say of the repudiation of the $21,000,000,000 owing to Americans who denied themselves and suffered in order to buy the bonds of the Government of the United States when we were confronted with the peril of war?

Mr. LEWIS. If this country of ours reaches the point where her dangers are so great and the destruction threatened so imminent as to practically threaten the value of all of her securities and her standing that the President has to resort to a measure for the defense of the United States, the promise of payment in gold amounts to nothing, for it would then be valueless, and unless there be power in the hands of someone to avoid the peril to the worth and value, the worth would be utterly valueless. Therefore it is not repudiation, as my friend would call it. It is an emergency to meet and avoid others repudiating us or to escape dangers which destroy the property of our Nation and our honor.

Mr. GLASS. Nobody ever repudiated a debt that did not claim the necessity of it in an emergency.

Mr. LEWIS. True, the large institutions which have been robbing this country under the name of banking, for whom my eminent friend cried out in splendid tones of indignation that this act would destroy the whole "bond market"—have not those bond masters under cry of necessity or privilege destroyed enough in this Government by which it shall be asked again that they be given control of this Nation that they may take the last remnant and vestige of power within the Republic?

I answer by saying it would be repudiation if we presumed merely to take the contract from mere cupidity and mere gain of finance, but where the conditions were such that the President for the preservation of all were compelled to take advantage of the act, that act shall be justified in self-defense and statesmanship. It is in an emergency we deal, which would never be exerted unless there were justification. If that could be vested in both George Washington and John Adams before they were tried, surely we may say to the country in this time that we can vest like confidence again in another who, let us believe, will prove of the intelligence of an Adams and the patriotism of Washington.

Mr. President, because of these precedents and the faith that we have in American character, I venture now to say that we are turning to the salvation of America that she may not again be submitted to the destruction of her honor and disgrace before the world which she has been compelled to endure at the hands of these masters who claim their privilege now to undo our Treasury to the last grain of its gold while they rob their country of its fulness of honor.

Mr. President, I conclude. I appreciate the courtesy extended to me by the Presiding Officer and by the Senate. I remind the eminent Senator from Virginia that there will be those who will charge us with repudiation and will give it that name and will tinge with dishonor the undertaking, but I repeat what the great statesman, Robert Peel, said in his debate in the era of Cobden and Disraeli in the fight for free bread and cheap homes. He concluded:

I know I will be execrated by every monopolist in the land; but if we give to the poor cheap bread and shelter to the homeless and give security to our nation, even if we inherit the curses of the mean we will rejoice in the blessings that flow to the needy and give relief to all our countrymen in the real.

Here I proclaim this United States is for her people; her people support their President and confide in his leadership.

Mr. President, I thank the Senate.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, if I may add a word, I am sure the distinguished Senator from Illinois will be greatly distressed to learn that the Bureau of Engraving and Printing of this Government is now printing similar promises to be offered to those masters of the people.

Mr. LEWIS. Upon the theory that they will hereafter conduct themselves in different manner than in the past.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I observe that the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL] is not in the Chamber at the moment. It had been my intention to take the floor and discuss his amendment, but I shall not do so at the present time.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, may I say that an amendment will be offered by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] which will embody the same thought that was proposed to be carried by the amendment to be suggested by the Senator from Washington?

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to say to the Senator from Oklahoma that I am thinking of a different modification than he is. I realize that an amendment at this time would not be in order, because it would be in the third degree, and I merely wanted to suggest it to the Senator from Washington. I think it is a different proposition.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, the provision of the Thomas amendment with respect to legal tender leaves in doubt an important question which I think we have no right to leave in doubt. That provision is so short that it will take but a moment to read it. It reads as follows:

Such notes and all other coins and currency heretofore or hereafter coined or issued by or under the authority of the United States shall be legal tender for all debts, public and private.

Does that language make these coins and currencies legal tender in satisfaction of an obligation heretofore incurred payable specifically in gold of a stated weight and fineness? It has been generally contended that it does. Senators have gone so far as to contend that this power even involves a possibility of a reduction of the weight and fineness of the coin in which the obligations of the United States itself are to be paid. I do not think that the language I have read is capable of such construction, because the Supreme Court has already ruled in a similar case that similar language did not apply in the manner suggested. The language "legal tender for all debts, public and private", is the identical language that was carried in the Legal Tender Act of 1862. The Supreme Court later had before it the case of Bronson v. Rodes, reported in 7 Wallace, at page 229. That involved a contract payable in coin. The court found that there were two kinds of currency in circulation in the United States at that time—namely, coins and paper currency. From the opinion I read a single sentence, which states the reason for the decision:

If, then, no express provision to the contrary be found in the acts of Congress, it is a just if not a necessary inference, from the fact that both descriptions of money were issued by the same government, that contracts to pay in either were equally sanctioned by law.

Finding that the contracts to pay in either kind of money were equally sanctioned by law, the court proceeded to hold that the owner of an obligation payable specifically in gold and silver coin was entitled to a judgment in gold and silver coin, notwithstanding the provision of the Legal Tender Act making Treasury notes "legal tender for all debts, public and private."

Mr. President, I understand that there are provisions in the statute law of the United States today, on which I will not elaborate here, that are quite different from the provisions which existed at the time of that decision; and, therefore, it is not quite certain that the court would again hold in the same way that it held in the case of Bronson against Rodes if it were called upon to interpret the language of the bill that we now have before us. I do, however, call attention to the fact that the language itself in the pending amendment, providing that the currency and coin of the United States shall be "legal tender for all debts, public and private", is exactly the same as that used in the act of February 25, 1862, which was held not to apply to a contract specifically payable in coin.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. BULKLEY. I do.

Mr. GORE. I believe the Senator is a little inexact when he says the language is the same. There was an exception of duties, imposts, and interest on the public debt; and that point was emphasized in one of the California cases, Sun Cheong-Kee against The United States, the fact that the United States itself insisted upon collecting customs duties in coin.

Mr. BULKLEY. Of course the Senator is correct that there was that exception. But in the case I have cited that was material only to support the finding of the court that there were two kinds of money in circulation in the United States at the time.

The decision in Bronson against Rodes might be applicable today, but I do not insist that it is applicable beyond any doubt for the reason that at the time that decision was rendered there was no provision for the Government maintaining a parity between the different currencies that were in circulation, whereas today it is by statute the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to maintain all forms of currency at a parity. That difference in the statute law might possibly justify a difference in the construction which the court would put upon this language.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. BULKLEY. I do.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I interrupt the Senator to say that that makes a great deal of difference. The act of 1900 would seem to me to cure all question that might be raised as to whether this issue would be lawful money and receivable for all debts, including taxes and other obligations.

Mr. BULKLEY. It would unquestionably be lawful money, but it would not unquestionably be legal tender in the case of a contract specifically payable in gold of a certain weight and fineness. The point is that everyone must be in doubt as to how it would be interpreted; and we should not leave language in the bill that is so doubtful as this language. We should make it certain whether we intend, in making these notes and coins legal tender, to make the legal-tender quality apply to contracts already in existence providing for payment in gold coin of a specified weight and fineness. If we do so intend, we should say so in plain language, and to the extent that we do not so intend we should make it clear that we do not intend it.

I have prepared an amendment to this end, declaring the intention to make the legal-tender quality of these currencies adequate to satisfy private contracts notwithstanding that they are payable in gold of a stated standard of weight and fineness, but that that shall not affect obligations due to or from the United States Government based on contracts in existence prior to the enactment of the present law.

Mr. President, if we do not make this legal-tender quality apply so that it may discharge private obligations, and obligations of States and municipalities heretofore contracted and payable in dollars of a fixed standard of weight and fineness, we shall put municipalities, school districts, railroads, and other obligors at an increased disadvantage in meeting their indebtedness. If the value of the dollar shall be decreased for all other purposes, and yet obligors under those gold contracts are obliged to continue to pay in dollars of the old standard of weight and fineness, the difficulty of meeting their obligations will be tremendously increased, whereas I have no doubt that it is the real purpose of the Congress to reduce those obligations in order to offset the great increase in purchasing power of the dollar, which has been so much noted.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. BULKLEY. I do.

Mr. GORE. I desire to ask the Senator from Ohio whether he thinks Congress can make these notes legal tender in payment of taxes or in payment of the obligations due by a State.

Mr. BULKLEY. I think it can. I do not wish to imply that I consider the subject free from doubt; but that was held in one of the Legal Tender cases, as the Senator no doubt recalls.

Mr. GORE. What I had in mind, I will say to the Senator, was the Lane County case, in which it was held that the legal-tender notes were not legal tender in payment of taxes.

Mr. BULKLEY. I beg to suggest to the Senator that what was held in the Lane County case was that the Legal Tender Act did not apply. It was not held that it could not apply, and that is another point that I had intended to cover in the amendment which I am about to propose. "Debts, public and private," were held by that case not to include taxes imposed by a State authority. In the amendment which I am about to offer I am adding to the word "debts" the word "dues", so as to make it apply to debts or dues.

Mr. GORE. The Senator thinks, then, that in the Lane County case it was a question of intent, and not a question of power?

Mr. BULKLEY. That is my opinion. Similarly, in the case of Bronson against Rodes, to which I have just alluded, the decision was that the act was not intended to apply to the contract which was the basis of the action.

As to the question of whether or not Congress could, within the Constitution, make a legal-tender money which would have to be accepted in the discharge of those contracts, it seems to me that the Supreme Court, in the case of Knox against Lee, gave a very strong indication that the Congress has that power. I read from that case:

Every contract for the payment of money, simply, is necessarily subject to the constitutional power of the Government over the currency, whatever that power may be, and the obligation of the parties is, therefore, assumed with reference to that power. Nor is this singular. A covenant for quiet enjoyment is not broken, nor is its obligation impaired by the Government's taking the land granted in virtue of its right of eminent domain. The expectation of the covenantee may be disappointed. He may not enjoy all he anticipated, but the grant was made and the covenant undertaken in subordination to the paramount right of the Government.

I skip some at that point and go on:

Nor can it be truly asserted—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Ohio on the amendment has expired.

Mr. BULKLEY. I will speak again on my own amendment.

Mr. WALCOTT obtained the floor.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. WALCOTT. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I undertook to do what I am about to do now when the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL] was not in the Chamber.

Let me say again that I am in entire sympathy with the Senator's amendment. His amendment, however, applies only to gold. I do not see why it would not be better to have the amendment in general terms so that it could apply to anything—gold, or silver, or anything that may arise in the future.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Nebraska? The Chair has recognized the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. WALCOTT. I prefer not to yield further, if the Senator does not mind. I shall take only a few moments.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator then, while the Senator from Washington is here, let me have the floor so that I can make this suggestion now?

Mr. WALCOTT. I prefer to proceed at this time.

Mr. NORRIS. All right; go ahead. I tried to keep the floor once, but lost it.

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President, I was present yesterday afternoon, as nearly all of us were, to listen to a speech which was the outstanding event in this country, I think—a speech which, in my opinion, will go down in history as one of the great historic speeches emanating from this body, around which men can rally who believe in sound money and sound principles and who admire the exhibition of great courage at a critical time, and from which they can quote. Obviously, I refer to the wonderful exposition by the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], whom I compliment myself by calling my friend.

If what he predicts comes true, if the President avails himself of the extraordinary powers that we are granting him from day to day, and proposing to grant him in this bill, if it passes—and I am quite sure it is going to pass—I hesitate to talk about what I believe will be the consequences; but I want to illustrate what I think may happen by giving the Senate a very brief story that I got from an eminent German economist 2 or 3 days ago. It is as follows, and he tells me that this is a true story:

A German hairdresser who went through the inflation period in Germany came to this country, dead-broke, 3 or 4 years ago. She now has a little United States money. This is what she is going to do with it if we go on with the inflation program of which we are talking:

Buy all the good farm lands she can, not far from some city, to insure a market; mortgage the land as heavily as possible at the bank; spend the money received on the mortgage to buy upon the installment plan everything needed in the way of equipment—a portable house, if necessary, farming implements, a tractor, an automobile, and everything essential for the farm as far as the money will go, making only the first payment on each item; then sit tight until inflation destroys the value of our money, as it did in Germany, and all debts are virtually canceled. She will have her farm fully equipped and in working order and a comfortable place in which to live; she can raise her own food from the ground and live happily ever afterward without regard for the rest of the world or thought for the morrow, and it will have cost her but a few dollars.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALCOTT. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator remember what the Senator from Virginia said the other day; and if he does, does it not knock his illustration into a cocked hat? He said on the floor of the Senate that nobody outside of the insane asylum would lend any money on land. So, to start with, this woman could not get her money, and she could not carry out that kind of a scheme.

Mr. WALCOTT. If we cannot borrow any money on land, then we are at the bottom of the ladder, we have gone through the abyss.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I will try again to suggest what I tried to suggest to the Senator from Washington in order to make his amendment, which is the pending question now, general, instead of having it apply specifically to gold. To do that, as I look at it, all he would have to do would be to strike out, in line 2 of the amendment, after the word "of", the balance of the line, the words "the same in gold", and to insert in lieu thereof the words "any specific kind of money", so that it would read:

All contracts, bonds, notes, or other forms of agreement hereafter made for the payment of any specific kind of money shall be payable in lawful money.

And so forth.

Mr. DILL. In other words, the Senator wants to include silver, as well as gold?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. DILL. I see no objection to that. I am perfectly willing to accept that modification, if the Senator desires to offer it. I will modify my amendment to conform to the suggestion of the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senator modifies his amendment.

The question now is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL], as modified, to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. DILL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 4, line 24, the Senator from Ohio moves to strike out the words "public and private", and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

and dues, public and private, and, notwithstanding any express provision or stipulation with respect to payment in money or coin of a specified standard of weight or fineness contained in any law or in any contract heretofore or hereafter entered into, shall be accepted at their nominal value in payment of such debts and dues, except that nothing herein contained shall affect any payments due to or from the United States under any contract entered into prior to the date of enactment of this act.

Mr. BULKLEY obtained the floor.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BULKLEY. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Should not the Senator's amendment also contain a provision relating to any contract of the United States, or any provision of law? There are dues to the Government under statutes, rather than under contracts.

Mr. BULKLEY. I had not intended to make the exception of private dues under statute, because it seemed to me that if the dollar is to be devaluated, people ought to be able to pay their taxes in the devaluated dollar.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I want to know why the Senator differentiates between private contracts and Government bonds.

Mr. BULKLEY. I think there is a very sound reason for that. The reason private contracts should be subject to any new law we may here enact I stated a few moments ago. Those who are obligated under those contracts are the very ones who need most the relief from the devaluation of the dollar. Those who borrowed money when the dollar was worth less than it is now and entered into these long-time obligations containing the gold clause, are the very ones who rightly should benefit by the inflation now proposed.

Now as to the distinction between private contracts and Government bonds, there may be an element of doubt as to the constitutionality of it, but I had just started to tell my reason for believing it is constitutional for us to make those private contracts payable in lawful money, even though the contracts themselves stipulate they shall be paid in gold of a specified weight and fineness.

Mr. DILL. The Senator's amendment does not do that.

Mr. BULKLEY. Yes; it does that.

Mr. DILL. I do not so read it.

Mr. BULKLEY. The exception is as to Government bonds only. It makes all private obligations payable in the legal-tender money, but the obligation of the Government itself stands on a different basis from any private obligation. The private obligations were entered into subject to the right of the Government to regulate the value of money, but where the Government itself is the debtor, where the Government itself is a party to the contract, and has put in a clause making the obligation payable in gold of a fixed standard of weight and fineness, that ought not to be subject to revision by the action of the Government itself.

Mr. DILL. In other words, the Senator wants the law to provide that private promises to pay in gold shall not be enforceable.

Mr. BULKLEY. Oh, no; they are enforceable, but they may be discharged by payment of money of the kind specified.

Mr. DILL. That the contracts shall not be enforceable by payment in gold.

Mr. BULKLEY. That is exactly what I propose. However, contracts to pay money to the United States Government, those contracts of foreign governments to which the Senator from Pennsylvania has just alluded, will not, under my amendment, be payable in dollars of a reduced value.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BULKLEY. I yield.

Mr. LONG. The Senator is proposing to set up, then, one standard for contracts with the Government and another for contracts between the people themselves. We would have to run a double standard then.

Mr. BULKLEY. There are not so many contracts of the Government to which this would be applicable. There are only the foreign debts and the Government bonds.

Mr. LONG. There are more contracts than that; but let us say that is all. A man would have to keep two yardsticks. One would be the dollar, and if I am dealing with my neighbor the dollar is worth 61 cents. If it is the Government, I am saying it is something else.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, if the different forms of currency go to different values, there will be two yardsticks in general use anyway. If they do not go to different values, this amendment would not make them so.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, the Senator's amendment, however, would make it possible for the bondholders to become a highly preferred set of citizens in case the dollar were devaluated.

Mr. BULKLEY. Only as to bonds of the Government of the United States. They would gain some advantage in price, but would get only the same amount of gold that they are entitled to if we do not devalue the dollar.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, what is the total indebtedness this would place on the excepted class?

Mr. BULKLEY. As I understand it, it is something over $20,000,000,000; but the amount is not material—the principle is what is involved.

Mr. BLACK. I understand it is the principle. May I ask this?—Suppose the gold dollar should be reduced 50 percent in its content, would not that make those bonds worth $40,000,000,000?

Mr. BULKLEY. Forty billion dollars, measured in the new dollars, if the spread should be as wide as that; but, of course, that is because the new dollar would be brought down in value; the gold would not be brought up. The gold would remain the same, other things being equal, so that the obligation would be exactly the same in gold value.

Mr. President, I am anxious to explain the amendment.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator one question.

Mr. BULKLEY. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. The Constitution of the United States prohibits a State from enacting a law that would impair the obligation of a contract; is not that so?

Mr. BULKLEY. Unquestionably.

Mr. GLASS. This proposal is to impair the obligations of a State, is it not?

Mr. BULKLEY. If the Senator calls it impairment. There is a question whether that is fairly called impairment or not; and that is precisely what I was reading from the opinion of the court, in order to clear that point to the Senate.

A few moments ago I read an extract from the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Knox against Lee, in which it was pointed out that every contract is necessarily subject to the constitutional power of the Government over the currency, and so forth. The Court goes on to say:

Nor can it be truly asserted that Congress may not, by its action, indirectly impair the obligation of contracts, if by the expression be meant rendering contracts fruitless or partially fruitless. Directly it may, confessedly, by passing a bankrupt law, embracing past as well as future transactions. This is obliterating contracts entirely. So it may relieve parties from their apparent obligations indirectly in a multitude of ways. It may declare war, or, even in peace, pass nonintercourse acts, or direct an embargo. All such measures may and must operate seriously upon existing contracts, and may not merely hinder but relieve the parties to such contracts entirely from performance.

I pass over to some other matter on the next page:

As in a state of civil society property of a citizen or subject is ownership, subject to the lawful demands of the sovereign, so contracts must be understood as made in reference to the possible exercise of the rightful authority of the Government, and no obligation of a contract can extend to the defeat of legitimate Government authority.

Again the Court said:

By the act of June 28, 1834, a new regulation of the weight and value of gold coin was adopted, and about 6 percent was taken from the weight of each dollar. The effect of this was that all creditors were subjected to a corresponding loss. The debts then due became solvable with 6 percent less gold than was required to pay them before. The result was thus precisely what it is contended the Legal Tender Acts worked. But was it ever imagined this was taking private property without compensation or without due process of law? Was the idea ever advanced that the new regulation of gold coin was against the spirit of the fifth amendment? And has anyone in good faith avowed his belief that even a law debasing the current coin, by increasing the alloy, would be taking private property? It might be impolitic and unjust, but could its constitutionality be doubted? Other statutes have, from time to time, reduced the quantity of silver in silver coin without any question of their constitutionality. It is said, however, now that the act of 1834 only brought the legal value of gold coin more nearly into correspondence with its actual value in the market, or its relative value to silver.

But we do not perceive that this varies the case or diminishes its force as an illustration. The creditor who had a thousand dollars due him on the 31st day of July 1834 (the day before the act took effect), was entitled to a thousand dollars of coined gold of the weight and fineness of the then existing coinage. The day after, he was entitled only to a sum only 6 percent less in weight and in market value, or to a smaller number of silver dollars. Yet he would have been a bold man who had asserted that because of this the obligation of the contract was impaired, or that private property was taken without compensation or without due process of law. No such assertion, so far as we know, was ever made. Admit it was a hardship, but it is not every hardship that is unjust, much less that is unconstitutional; and certainly it would be an anomaly for us to hold an act of Congress invalid merely because we might think its provisions harsh and unjust.

And so, Mr. President, I believe that it is constitutional for us to provide that contracts, even those specifying payment in coin of a fixed weight and standard of fineness, may be paid in legal-tender money of such character as the Congress, in its discretion, and according to its own sense of justice, may authorize.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Ohio has expired on the amendment.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio a question in my own time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont is recognized in his own time.

Mr. AUSTIN. In order to ascertain the meaning of the phrase in the suggested amendment which is found in lines 6 and 7, I should like to ask a question. The phrase is "at their nominal value." Assuming that in the settlement of a contract money is offered whose par has depreciated to a nominal value, does the Senator mean to have us understand that his amendment would permit the use of those notes at their nominal value in that sense of the word?

Mr. BULKLEY. I understand the word "nominal" to mean the value at which they are named—that is to say, a dollar bill is to be accepted at a dollar. Of course, there is another sense in which the word "nominal" might be used, which means of slight or trifling value. I do not conceive that that is the sense in which the word here would be construed.

Mr. AUSTIN. Does this exception mean that they shall be used at the par expressed on their face?

Mr. BULKLEY. Exactly. It means at their face value.

Mr. AUSTIN. If they be actually depreciated in value to only a percentage of their expressed value, they still must be accepted at their present par under this amendment, according to the terms of the promise?

Mr. BULKLEY. Of course, we are not recognizing the likelihood of their depreciating; yet that is exactly what it means, that they are to be accepted at their face value. If the Senator thinks the words "face value" would be any better, I shall be glad to modify the amendment to make it read "nominal or face value." I ask that the amendment be modified so as to read "nominal or face value."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio modifies his amendment as indicated. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, this so-called "inflationary amendment" is under a title which reads as follows:

Part 6—Financing—and exercising power conferred by section 8 of article I of the Constitution: To coin money and to regulate the value thereof.

We are proposing under this amendment to regulate the value of the dollar; we are providing machinery to accomplish that end. If this amendment should be adopted, as I construe it, we would be regulating the value of the dollar as between private contractors; we would be regulating the value of bonds owed by cities, by private corporations, and even by States; but as to the dollars representing the outstanding bonds of the Federal Government, it would not be proposed to regulate their value. Mr. President, I do not believe that the Congress wants to go on record as making such a distinction between the holders of bonds.

Let me say to the Senate that this whole amendment is a new amendment. If it shall be adopted by the Senate, it then will be thrown into conference between the House and the Senate, and the entire amendment will be in the process of adjustment. The House of Representatives and the Senate, in conference, can agree upon this amendment as adopted by this body or they can change it in any way they see fit, so long as they adhere to the same subject matter.

I take it that when the conferees shall be appointed, if the amendment shall be adopted, they will get into communication with the Department of Justice, because it is the Attorney General who must construe the amendment; and if the amendment shall reach the courts in any of its phases, then it is he who will have to defend the amendment in the courts. I suggest that the better procedure would be to leave the text as it is, and when the amendment goes to conference, by calling in the attorneys of the Department of Justice, the conferees can clarify and make it express the intent by certain and exact language as the conferees may decide upon it.

It is difficult to legislate upon an amendment of this kind that is brought before us upon a few moments' notice, although it has been printed perhaps and has been upon our desks for a day or so. I suggest that the better procedure would be to permit the text to remain as it is, let it go to conference, and then in conference it can have the most careful consideration in connection with the department of the Government which is to construe it and enforce it. Therefore I think it best not to adopt the amendment.

Mr. REED obtained the floor.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield for a question?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I think I have the floor, but I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WAGNER. I wanted to ask the Senator from Oklahoma a question, but I will wait.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, probably the most voluble of the writers of the country in support of the policy of inflation has been Mr. Walter Lippmann, who writes for the New York Herald Tribune. He did me the honor yesterday to say, in effect, that my arguments against inflation were practically imbecilic. Perhaps they are; granting that Mr. Lippmann is entirely correct in the low opinion he entertains of me, I am sure no one can doubt the high opinion in which he holds himself. Therefore I think the Senate and the country might be interested to hear 2 or 3 brief extracts from articles written in January last by the same Mr. Walter Lippmann, who now thinks that the opponents of inflation are practically idiots or imbeciles.

On January 18, 1933, Mr. Lippmann had this to say:

For various reasons, largely personal and temperamental reasons, the situation is confused. There is an administration program which the Democrats will not accept; there is, as yet, no Roosevelt program which they can support. As a result there is silence, doubt, and uncertainty among the responsible leaders of the Democratic Party, and in the interval of waiting the Huey Longs and others are filling the air with their threats and promises. They are saying, in effect, that by one device or another they wish to inflate the currency, and in one spectacular stroke relieve the burden of all debtors. In view of the fact that at the moment no one is speaking authoritatively for the Roosevelt administration, there are many persons who suppose that these inflationists, some of whom were ardent Roosevelt men, are revealing the true intentions of the administration.

Yet this belief is groundless—

Says Mr. Lippmann—

unless we are to assume that Mr. Roosevelt intends to break every promise he made during the campaign.

This is Mr. Roosevelt's ardent supporter who is speaking. He finishes the article with these significant words:

The inflationists propose to strike at the currency itself and at one stroke change the value of all debts and obligations. The inflationist method would propose to relieve not only the farmer who has a mortgage but the public-utility company which has bonds outstanding, to reduce the value not only of money owing on real-estate mortgages, but all money.

Mr. Roosevelt made it entirely clear that he proposed to deal with the debt problem by detailed adjustments. To suppose that he has secretly scrapped these pledges and is now following Huey Long is to believe that there is no honor left in our public life.

I am called an imbecile for saying just that sort of thing, while Mr. Lippmann has risen from imbecility in January to his present infallibility in April.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. Gladly I yield.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator would not be in favor of requiring a gentleman who is under contract to write a column a day upon questions affecting the Government to be consistent, would he?

Mr. REED. Perhaps not.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, the Senator would not expect everybody in the world to be so tied to a theory that he could not change his theory when conditions so changed that a different remedy was needed?

Mr. REED. Oh, no; I admire his versatility. These things which were profoundly dishonorable in January become commendable examples of high courage and virtue in April. It has been a great spring; all sorts of things have grown during the past 3 months; the "new deal" is getting newer and perhaps even rawer.

Then about a week later, showing that the transition had not begun to take place at that time, our oracle writes this in his article of January 26:

Any effort by a government to change the relation between debtor and creditor at one stroke is bound to produce profound injustice and incalculable confusion. Mr. WHEELER—wishes to free the farm groaning under its mortgage debt. Does he, by the same stroke of the pen, wish to free the banker from his obligation to repay the depositor?

He refers to the Senator from Montana—

Does he wish to free the light and power companies of their bonded indebtedness, and to present the properties to the stockholders in fee simple? Does he wish to cut the salaries of teachers, the pensions of wounded veterans, and the incomes of old people who have retired to live on their savings? I am sure he does not. Yet this is the inevitable effect of any wholesale debasement of the currency.

I have three long columns all to the same effect, Mr. President. Mr. Lippmann had not seen the light as late as January 26, and this is April 28. I thank the Senate.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, there is a little saying that we know, which I hope the Senator from Pennsylvania may take notice of with profit, as appears to have been the case with Mr. Lippmann, and that is,

And while the lamp holds out to burn,
The vilest sinner may return.

Mr. REED. Yes; but, Mr. President, does not the Senator think that the returned sinner might be a little less supercilious to those who are still sunk in sin? [Laughter.]

Mr. LONG. I think so; yes.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I was not in the Chamber when the Senator was evidently making a humorous address and reading from distinguished journalists. From whom did he read?

Mr. REED. I read from that economist and authority on governmental matters, that profound philosopher who calls himself Mr. Walter Lippmann.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator was reading obviously with approval and endorsement?

Mr. REED. Yes, Mr. President; I fully endorse that conclusion, for example, where he said:

To suppose that he has secretly scrapped these pledges and is now following HUEY LONG is to believe that there is no honor left in our public life.

Yes, Mr. President; I endorse that! [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I can enjoy, of course, even Mr. Walter Lippmann, and sometimes I can enjoy the Senator from Pennsylvania, but I am rather surprised that the Senator from Pennsylvania should engage in any animadversions upon his colleagues or any animadversions upon any authority such as Mr. Walter Lippmann. I cut out of the paper the other day a statement made by him about the beginning of this debate. I shall not read it, because I never refer to my colleagues in any but the most complimentary terms; but I commend to the Senator from Pennsylvania Mr. Lippmann's characterization of the Senator from Pennsylvania printed only 3 days ago at the beginning of the discussion upon this important measure.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit an interruption, I can tell him that I began my remarks by calling attention to it and saying in substance that Mr. Lippmann did me the honor of saying that my arguments were impotent.

Mr. JOHNSON. If Mr. Lippmann said what I would not for an instant indicate and never for a moment imply, that the remarks of the Senator from Pennsylvania were of the character that he suggests, I rather think that the Senator from Pennsylvania should not read the remarks of Mr. Walter Lippmann concerning anybody else. It might be more appropriate that silence were kept by him, perhaps by all of us—not by me, because I am so used to the remarks of journalists that it is a matter of no consequence—but I should think, under the circumstances, that the last person on earth who would be quoted against his fellows in this Chamber or against the President of the United States would be Mr. Lippmann. All we need do is to read his recent utterances and his recent publications. I shall not read them here, because I will not violate that course which I have followed during the period I have been in the Senate and indulge in any particular remarks concerning any particular colleague.

Mr. President, I want to say just one thing. I talk not upon the bill because I am anxious to do what little I can in this emergency. I have said nothing, so far as I am concerned, about a previous administration or about the present administration or about the attitude of either. But, sir, I am glad to pay my small tribute to the fine and gallant gentleman who sits in the White House today and who, with a courage that is inspiring and inspiring, sits there ready to do whatever lies in his power.

He has the adventure of youth and he has the wisdom of age. Some philosopher once said that youth has its adventure, age its memories. This man has not only the adventure of youth with a high courage that commends itself to every man upon this floor, to every man who counts himself a real American—has not only the high adventure of youth, but he has the extreme courage to go forward in an emergency and strive to do the thing that ought to be done for rescuing the people of the United States. My small tribute I pay him in that regard.

Disagree with him we will. Every man in this body with a head upon his shoulders that God put there for some other purpose than mere ornament, of course, will for himself determine the course he ought to pursue upon various matters of legislation. I quarrel with none, therefore, who present their views in this body either for or against any matter of legislation. I may be presenting views doubtless in the future wherein I will not agree with the gentleman in the White House. But presenting those views and differing with him as I may in the days to come, I will recognize that in this time of trial, in this time of crisis of the American Republic, we can thank God that there was a man in the White House who had the guts to do and go forward and to strive and to try and to take the responsibility of striving and trying.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY] to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, before we vote on the amendment, I want to ask the Senator from Oklahoma a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma will give his attention.

Mr. FESS. The Senator mentioned a moment ago that to reject the amendment and allow the conferees to handle it would be the better way. I am wondering what is the significance of that suggestion? Unless the provision is in either the Senate amendment or the House text, it cannot be considered in conference.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The whole amendment will be in conference and the conferees can agree upon the amendment with an amendment. They may modify it in any way they see fit. They can accept one section or two sections or three sections, or they can accept none.

Mr. FESS. They cannot add anything in the form of an amendment that is not in the text of the bill as it passed the House or in the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. They can clarify the amendment of the Senate in any way they see fit.

Mr. FESS. I think the Senator is mistaken. Here is something that is not in the amendment offered in the Senate. It is not in the House text. It will never go to conference.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is one reason why I objected to the amendment. It seeks to make a preferred class out of the holders of Government bonds and forgets the holders of city and State bonds, county bonds, and corporation bonds. I think it would be doing a very unwise act to grant preference to any class of bondholders.

Mr. FESS. If that is the Senator's position, that is an entirely different question. I wanted to call attention to the fact that it will not be in conference unless we act favorably upon it here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY] to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS]. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. BULKLEY. Let us have a division.

On a division the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma as amended.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed by the Senator from Arizona to strike out all of lines 24 and 25 on page 5, and lines 1 to 9, on page 6, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 36 (a). The President is authorized, for a period of 6 months from the date of the passage of this act, to accept silver in payment of the whole or any part of the principal or interest now due, or to become due within 6 months after such date, from any foreign government or governments on account of any indebtedness to the United States, such silver to be accepted at not to exceed the price of 50 cents an ounce in United States currency. The aggregate value of the silver accepted under this section shall not exceed $200,000,000.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arizona yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I understand that the amendment has been worked out by those responsible for the original amendment. Therefore so far as I can I ask that the same be accepted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Arizona to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I now offer another amendment which is merely a correction of the text.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 6, in lines 23 and 24 of the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma, to strike out the words: "(d) The President shall cause silver certificates to be issued in denominations of $1," and to insert in lieu thereof the words: "(d) The Secretary of the Treasury shall cause silver certificates to be issued in such denominations as he deems advisable."

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the original amendment provided that the President should issue the money. Of course that presumes that he will give an order to the Treasury Department to print the money. The amendment just offered conforms to the practice in the Government, as of course the Treasury issues the money. I see no objection to it, and so far as I can I accept the amendment.

Mr. HAYDEN. I may say that I have submitted the amendment to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and that it conforms to his desires, as I understand it.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, before the amendment of the Senator from Arizona is disposed of I desire to make a statement about a previous amendment.

As I interpret the previous amendment, based upon the present price of silver, it is a gift to the debtors, our late allies in the World War, of approximately if not almost exactly 30 percent of the amount of principal and interest now due. If the bill becomes wholly a deflationary bill, it probably is a gift of 50 percent of the debts now due us and which will mature during the lifetime of the amendment which has been offered.

The only answer that can be made to that is that we will take the silver, which is worth less than the debt now due us, coin it into money, and thereby use it. It may also be argued that inasmuch as we will relieve the world of the surplus silver there may be an advance in the price of silver. I have great respect for the author of the amendment and for those who accept it, but I want to register now my own position, and that is that I do not support it because I do not see any occasion to cancel the debt, or any part of it, due from our debtors; certainly not under existing conditions, not at this time, and least of all any part of the debt of a nation already in default.

But if we are to cancel the debts or any part of them let us do it openly, candidly, frankly, and have whatever advantage comes from honest dealing. This is a mere cancellation pro tanto of the debt due.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.
